VOLUME XX, PART III.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD,

FIFTIETH CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION.

Mr. McMILLIN. If the gentleman will permit me, I wish to make a single suggestion in the line of his remarks. I do not think I exaggerate when I say that two-thirds of these bills proposing large increases of pension which go through here obtain their passage in this House under agreement that there shall be a reduction. This proceeding has come to be almost farcical.

Mr. SPOONER. I think if the gentleman will permit me I can explain——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. To his satisfaction what I supposed, if a secret at all, was an open secret.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I do not hear what the gentleman says.

Mr. SPOONER. The passage of private pension bills in this House, as the gentleman, as well as the remainder of the House, well understands, takes place at the Friday evening sessions, where such matters are the special order. It is also known that at these evening sessions, though the business may be of the utmost importance, there is not at any time a quorum of the House present. It is also well understood by those who have attended the evening sessions of the House that upon some of these bills where the great majority of those present, as well as the great majority of the House, are in favor of a certain bill covering a certain rate of pension, we almost always have in attendance at these evening sessions one or more gentlemen who obstruct the action of those constituting a majority of those present, and also, as I have suggested, a vast majority of this House. At such evening sessions it is impossible frequently to secure the deliberate action which should embody in itself the expression of the majority of those present or of a majority of the House itself; and consequently, in order that the business at such sessions shall not be obstructed and the passage of all bills prevented, it has been usual for some of us to submit under protest, as we have, to the dictation, as it has been, of one or more gentlemen insisting that his or their judgment shall be superior to the judgment of the majority of this House and of the vast majority of those present at such evening sessions.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does the gentleman admit that this is a trick to get around the amendments put upon the bill in the House?

Mr. SPOONER. I admit that it is a trick on the part of a single member who undertakes, in the absence of a majority of the House, to prevent the House from transacting the business it desires to transact.

Mr. McMILLIN. That was not the point. The gentleman evades the question. Does he admit that this is a parliamentary trick to get rid of whatever amendments may be put on in the House? If he does, I think he does himself and the House an injustice.

Mr. SPOONER. The gentleman need not get excited. I say it is in the course of regular legislative procedure——

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. SCOTT. If there is so large a majority in favor of the policy of which the gentleman speaks, is it not the prerogative of this vast majority to come here on Friday evenings and carry such measures through?

Mr. SPOONER. I think the gentleman who has been "conspicuous by his absence" on such occasions can answer for himself at least. [Laughter.] I have been willing to be present——

Mr. SCOTT. I have been present in this city and this House every day since Christmas——

Mr. SPOONER. Evenings we were talking of.

Mr. SCOTT. Evenings and all.

Mr. SPOONER. Now, Mr. Speaker, a word as to the merits of this particular bill. It is proposed to increase the pension of one of the most valiant soldiers who went from my State into the late war. He had previously served with distinction during the Mexican war. In the first three years' regiment which went from my State he was appointed colonel. He distinguished himself at the battle of Bull Run, as he had previously done in the organization of his regiment. At the battle of Bull Run, at the head of his regiment, he received the wound of which he afterward died, leaving his wife with two daughters and an aged mother dependent upon her for support, and leaving no property by which they might be maintained.

I have had, sir, from the leading citizens of my State, including its present governor, most urgent requests that this case should be considered and the pension increased to the reasonable sum named in the Senate bill.

When the case was considered at one of these evening sessions only one gentleman opposed the amount named in the Senate bill, and threatened unless some change was made, or if the bill was pressed, a quorum would be demanded and the bill defeated, and the remainder of the pension business at that evening session would also be prevented from receiving attention. I accordingly permitted the gentleman to offer such an amendment as he saw fit, as I could not prevent it.

The House committee had reported favorably on the Senate bill, and it was the opinion of the Senate Committee on Invalid Pensions that the Senate bill was a fair and proper one under the circumstances, and should been acted into law. On the conference the result occurred which I presumed would occur; the House conferees and the Senate conferees represented, as I believed then, and as I believe now, the sentiments of the vast majority of this House, who are in favor of the passage of the Senate bill without the House amendment. I performed not only my duty on that committee as representing myself but the Committee on Invalid Pensions, which had made a favorable report on the Senate bill, and I also, as I believed, and as the test on this bill will show, represented the sentiments of the House of Representatives, and as my friend behind me says, the country as well. [Applause.]

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope gentlemen will agree on both sides of the House to fix some time when this debate shall close.

Mr. SPOONER. I hold the floor and reserve the balance of my time. Unless some other gentleman wishes to be heard, I will demand the previous question.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I was under the impression I had the floor, and only yielded to the gentleman from Rhode Island to make an explanation.

Mr. SPOONER. I will yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr CHEADLE] for five minutes.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman from Rhode Island took his seat.

The SPEAKER. But he reserved his time.

Mr. BLAND. He took his seat and yielded up the floor.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I thought I had the floor, and yielded to the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman in charge of a bill is always recognized.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Rhode Island yields five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. SCOTT. Is the gentleman from Rhode Island in favor of the bill, or opposed to it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know. He has an hour under the rules, and has yielded five minutes of his time to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I only want to have one or two minutes before this matter is closed. I supposed I had the floor, and yielded to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman did have the floor in his own right but yielded it, as the Chair understood. The gentleman from Rhode Island yielded for five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr CHEADLE]. There is no difficulty. The gentleman can have the floor, unless the previous question should be demanded.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I do not wish to be cut out altogether. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHEADLE] is entitled to the floor for five minutes.

Mr. CHEADLE. Mr. Speaker, one remark which fell from the lips of the distinguished gentleman has brought me to my feet. He said the opposition made to this measure on last Friday night's session was a trick. Now, I deny that it was a trick.

He also says that I insisted, unless certain concessions should be made, which were made subsequently, that I would stop legislation. I want to call the attention of the gentleman and of the House to the RECORD, on page 1805, wherein the language I used is recorded, and where I said:

I will state to the gentleman that I am perfectly willi ng for that bill to go over to a full House. If that is not acceptable I shall call a quorum.

That is what I said and all I said. I took the same position upon that measure that I have taken uniformly upon every other bill of a similar character that has come up for consideration in this Congress. The husband of the claimant in this case was a colonel. The general law fixes the amount of pension to which she is entitled at $30 a month. The rule of the Committee on Invalid Pensions is to give to the widows of brigadier-generals $50 a month, but not to widows of officers below that grade. The amendment, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, was the proposition of the gentleman himself, and he asked me if I would accept it if he reduced the amount to $30 a month. Of course I could not object, because that amount is what the general law allows anyhow. I appeal to the RECORD to justify the statement I make that it was not a trick, but an open, frank, honest investigation of that particular case; and I say to the House that neither by the general law of the land nor by the rule adopted by the Committee on Invalid Pensions has the claimant in this bill any title whatever to the sum of $50 fixed by the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. If the gentleman from Kentucky desires it I will yield him now such time as he desires.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I only want a few minutes. Mr. Speaker, I know nothing whatever of the merits of this case; I have not investigated it. It comes from the Committee on Invalid Pensions. It is the duty of the House to investigate the facts, and if the pension is not sufficient under the circumstances, and the services were conspicuous and gallant, it is further the duty of the House to do not only what is just but what is generous.

But, sir, I have succeeded in doing all I desired when I took the floor on this report. I have called the attention of the House to the extreme slimness of the meetings of Friday night sessions as a rule, allowing each member to take his share of the blame, whether he ought to be present or not, being willing at the same time to take my own share with the others. I have called attention to the "parliamentary procedure," as my friend from Rhode Island [Mr. SPOONER] euphoniously calls it, by which pension bills are passed through the House with the understanding that they shall carry certain amounts, and after being passed through the House by a "parliamentary proceeding," to use his language again, of a conference report that understanding is violated and the judgment of the House disregarded.

Having done that, I have accomplished all I desire. If the gentleman from Rhode Island is satisfied that it is a proper proceeding for gentlemen on this floor to say that they will consent to the passage of a bill in the nature of a compromise, and they get the benefit of the compromise, and then violate its terms because they subsequently have the power to do so, I have no observations whatever to submit.

Mr. SCOTT rose.

Mr. SPOONER. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to protest against the insinuations thrown out by the gentleman from Rhode Island, that when any member on this side questions any pension bill presented here, that we, as a body, are to be charged with opposing the whole pension system. I will say to that gentleman, that during the time I have held a seat on this floor I have voted for as many of these bills as he has. It was only yesterday, sir, when I cast my vote for two of them. But when you take up the daily papers and find that within twelve minutes forty-two private pension bills have passed the Senate of the United States, when you come to take up these bills and examine them, as was the case only a short time ago, and find a bill passed there and sent over here from the Senate, which was passed by the House subsequently, placing upon the pension-roll a pensioner who was already upon the pension-roll under a similar bill at the same rate three years ago, I think, sir, it is full time that we should ask ourselves whether this pension legislation is not becoming so loose and so discreditable to the House that if it is allowed to go on in the future, as it has been allowed in the past, the whole system will be uprooted from bottom to top.

That is all I wished to say.

Mr. SPOONER. I will not quarrel with the gentleman from Pennsylvania as to his statement that he has voted for as many pension bills as I have, if he would only keep the record even by voting for this one.

Mr. SCOTT. I do not say I will not.

Mr. SPOONER. I demand the previous question upon the adoption of the report.

The previous question was ordered.

The question was put on the adoption of the report; and there were on a division—ayes 78, noes 27.

Mr. CHEADLE. No quorum.

Mr. SPOONER. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. DOCKERY. Oh, no; let us take the vote by tellers.

Mr. SPOONER. I withdraw the demand.

Mr. SOWDEN. I renew it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 131, nays 69, not voting 122; as follows:

DUTY ON TIMBER.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 3250) to amend section 2506 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of March 3, 1883, relating to the duty on timber in certain cases; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

INTERNAL-REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. RANDALL, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 12131) to amend the internal-revenue laws; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. FORNEY. I desire to file the views of the minority on that bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I had intended to ask that that might be done.

Mr. FORNEY. And that they be ordered to be printed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the morning hour, and pending that I request that gentlemen be allowed to file reports.

Mr. SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HERMANN. And also that members having bills for reference may introduce them.

The SPEAKER. Next Monday is the day for the introduction of bills.

Mr. DOCKERY. I suggest that we take one request at a time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen having bills to introduce be allowed to present them to the Clerk for reference to appropriate committees. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

FILING OF REPORTS.

The following reports were filed by being handed in at the Clerk's desk:

BRANCH POST-OFFICE, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. ENLOE, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 12108) to authorize the Postmaster-General to rent a suitable building on Capitol Hill, in the city of Washington, for use as a branch of the Washington city post-office; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

NEW MEXICO.

Mr. SPRINGER, from the Committee on the Territories, reported back favorably the bill (H. PHILIP S. POST.

Mr. TAULBEE, from the Committee on Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 11481) for the relief of Philip S. Post; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS OSAGE RIVER.

Mr. CRISP, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 12389) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Osage River at some accessible point in the county of Benton and in the State of Missouri; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER.

Mr. CRISP also, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (S. 3146) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Missouri River at or near Kansas City, Kans., and not over 10 miles above the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railway bridge at Kansas City, Mo.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

EDWARD P. ALSBURY.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 11850) for the relief of Edward P. Alsbury, sole surviving heir of Harriette R. Alsbury, deceased; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN H. LIGHTER.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported a bill (H. R. 12599) for the relief of John H. Lighter, administrator of Peter Lighter, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

H. B. ROHRBACK.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported a bill (H. R. 12600) for the relief of H. B. Rohrback; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SUPERVISING SURGEON-GENERAL MARINE HOSPITAL SERVICE.

Mr. CLARDY, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back favorably the joint resolution (S. R. 124) relating to the salary of the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LANDS IN LIEU OF MINERAL LANDS, CALIFORNIA.

Mr. MCKENNA, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back favorably the bill (S. 419) to enable the State of California to take lands in lieu of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections found to be mineral lands; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

EFFICIENCY OF THE SIGNAL SERVICE.

Mr. CUTCHEON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back the bill (H. R. 5604) to promote the efficiency of the Signal Service; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FILING OF BILLS.

The following bills were filed by being handed in at the Clerk's desk:

ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. MCRAE introduced a bill (H. R. 12601) to forfeit the rights to lands granted to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company for a branch road; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

ROAD TO NATIONAL CEMETERY, LEBANON, KY.

Mr. MONTGOMERY introduced a bill (H. R. 12602) to macadamize the road from the Lebanon and Campbellsville Turnpike Company's road to the national cemetery near Lebanon, in Marion County, Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MONUMENT ON BATTLE-FIELD OF GETTYSBURGH.

Mr. OWEN introduced a bill (H. R. 12603) to erect a monument to the division of Regulars on the battle-field of Gettysburgh; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the Post-Office appropriation bill. The Clerk will read the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is proposed, in line 10, on page 7, to strike out "five" and insert "eight," making it $6,850,000.

The CHAIRMAN. On this amendment a vote was had by tellers, on which it appeared that no quorum had voted. The point of no quorum having been insisted upon, the tellers will take their places.

Mr. BLOUNT and Mr. CANNON took their places as tellers, and subsequently reported—ayes 86, noes 87.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after the word "provide," in line 14, page 7, the following:
"Provided further, That the aggregate salaries as fixed by such classification shall not exceed the sum hereby appropriated."

Mr. PETERS. As the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois did not carry I see no necessity for this amendment now.

Mr. HOLMAN. The necessity for it is that under the classification the salaries will be fixed, and whether we appropriate or not they will be fixed salaries and a charge upon the Treasury.

Mr. PETERS. The objection to that is this: It is almost conceded by those who have examined this subject, composed partly of those who are opposed to the Cannon amendment, that in case there was not a sufficient amount appropriated the amount could be brought in in the deficiency bill shortly after the convening of the next Congress. Now, if you place this provision on this law, you thereby absolutely tie the hands of the Postmaster-General, and you simply cripple the service for the incoming year. The Postmaster-General, with this provision in here, tying his hands, must absolutely take notice that he must be confined to the appropriation that is made in the bill, and that he will have no discretion whatever; that no discretion can be allowed to him by reason of the contingencies of the service, or by reason of any misjudgment in regard to the appropriations that are made to carry out this new classification scheme.

Now then, I say that it is unjust, not only to the post-office service, but to the incoming administration, to tie the hands of that administration by such a limitation as this, a limitation that has never before been placed on any Post-Office appropriation bill. We who have had experience with this branch of the service know that the large and ever-increasing need for the extension of the mail service demands the exercise of a certain amount of discretion on the part of the Postmaster-General, and we know also that during the present administration such discretion has been exercised; and I submit to my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] whether it is exactly fair or exactly in harmony with the proper order of things for him to come in here now, in view of the incoming of a new administration, and endeavor by this limitation to tie the hands of that administration and deprive it of any discretion whatever in this matter.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend from Kansas must bear in mind that there is now and has been for many years a limitation upon the Post-Office Department as to its expenditure for clerk-hire.

Mr. PETERS. Then why put this limitation?

Mr. HOLMAN. The restriction has been made in the current law. We have appropriated so much money for this purpose, and the Post-Office Department has no power to create any liability for such service beyond the appropriation. As to the incoming administration, it is being treated with a degree of liberality unknown heretofore so far as the Post-Office Department is concerned. By this bill we are adding to the appropriation $600,000, which is more than $200,000 in excess of the amount carried in any preceding appropriation bill of this kind. What does the gentleman propose? If the Post-Office Department think proper to classify so as to involve large expenditure, then that expenditure will remain a charge upon the Treasury. The Postmaster-General can fix the salaries at just what he pleases. He can, by the classification, double the amount of expenditure over and above the appropriation, and there is no mode whatever of imposing any limitation upon him that I know of, except by the proposition which has been submitted.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman from Indiana answer a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. COX. Is there not an existing law which prevents his expending money in excess of the appropriation?

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, this bill uproots all that.

Mr. COX. But is there not such a law?

Mr. HOLMAN. None that applies to this classification.

Mr. COX. Is there not a general law on the subject?

Mr. HOLMAN. None that applies to this classification. If this bill is passed in the form in which it now stands the salaries can be fixed by the Postmaster-General at whatever he pleases, and if we do not appropriate the money now it must be appropriated hereafter.

Mr. COX. I ask the gentleman's attention to the law.

Mr. HOLMAN. It does not apply to this.

Mr. COX. I think it does. The law is general, and it does apply to this matter, and therefore I think there is no occasion for the additional limitation that is proposed.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] is laboring under a mistake. If he will examine section 3679 of the Revised Statutes of the United States he will find a provision that "no Department of the Government shall expend in any one fiscal year any sum in excess of appropriations made by the Congress for that fiscal year, or involve the Government in any contract for the future payment of money in excess of such appropriation." That has been the law since 1870.

Mr. PETERS. If my friend will allow me, that is just what I stated awhile ago, that we have a law now limiting this expenditure, and that consequently there is no need to duplicate it by this proposed limitation.

Mr. ROGERS. My friend from Kansas has forgotten what he did say. After the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] had directed his attention to the fact that there was a law of this character, then he took the position which he is now assuming. But the answer to that is patent. There is grave doubt in the minds of good lawyers as to what the effect of the passage of this bill is to be upon this section of the Revised Statutes when construed in connection with it. Now, if there is any doubt, it is an all-important matter that the limitation proposed by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] shall go upon this bill, so that when the bill comes to be construed it shall be construed in the same way that previous administrations have construed previous appropriation bills making provision for the support of the Government for each fiscal year.

There is another reason, Mr. Chairman—not a strong reason, I think, to the legal mind, but still a reason—and that is, that the present administration, in more than one Department of the Government—and I have no doubt that preceding administrations have done the same thing—has, by some sort of construction, created deficiencies in various Departments in violation of the express provision of the statute. At a later day, when the deficiency bill shall be under consideration, and when my voice shall be in better condition than to-day, I shall undertake to show that what I have just stated is true in practice. So that the Congress, which is the great controlling power of the purse of this Government, ought to emphasize its settled purpose that no Department of the Government shall have unlimited access to the Treasury, but that, on the contrary, the purse-strings of the nation shall remain in the hands of the Congress of the United States, where they were placed by the Constitution.

For, under the Constitution, no expenditure of public money can be made except in virtue of appropriations made in pursuance of law. Therefore Congress, emphasizing this principle of the Constitution as I now recollect it, has declared that these Departments must be limited to such appropriations as are made by Congress in the exercise of its discretion and judgment in providing for the support of the Government.

I hope, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that if we are to adopt this measure we shall put upon it the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, so that it may be made as emphatic and definite and certain as anything can be made by public law that no Department or officer of this Government shall have the power to do what he pleases with the public money, and that no Department or officer shall have the power to make contracts without authority of law or to create claims upon the Treasury which Congress will afterwards be compelled to recognize, as we shall be compelled before Congress adjourns to recognize certain matters of this kind from a sense of common decency, common justice, and common honesty.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] has entirely misapprehended the position I took, as I think I can convince him in a very few moments. The law at present on the statute-book contains that general limitation upon the power of all the Executive Departments; yet there has been a discretion exercised by the present Postmaster-General as well as all preceding Postmasters-General whenever there was a necessity that could not possibly be foreseen at the time the appropriation bill was passed. This discretion has frequently been exercised in the enlargement of the service in the extension of postal routes when rendered necessary in consequence of the growth of new cities and the increase of existing offices from third-class or second-class offices to first-class offices. It has become a custom wherever such necessities have existed for the Postmaster-General to go on and do what the necessities of the service required; and this custom has acquired somewhat the force of a law.

Now, if that custom is to be abrogated; if you are to say to the Postmaster-General by an express enactment in this bill that henceforth under no circumstances can he take the responsibility, where the necessity of the service requires, of establishing service which will exceed the appropriations already made, or place a greater clerical force in a post-office which within a year or two has advanced from a third or fourth class office to a first-class office; if you say to him that under no circumstances shall he take upon himself to exercise this discretion, the result will be to cripple the service. And it will be treating unfairly the incoming administration. It will place upon it a limitation that has not operated upon the Post-Office Department during the present and former administrations. The enactment now proposed to be made will have the effect of saying to the Postmaster-General, "You have no discretion under any circumstances, no matter what may be the need of the service or the postal needs of any community, to go beyond the existing appropriation; because here is an iron-clad provision of instruction which has been placed upon the Post-Office appropriation bill for this fiscal year in addition to the limitation prescribed by the previous law, which, by custom, has been extended so as to recognize the necessities of the service." This is the reason I say it would be an injustice, not only to the needs of the service, but to the incoming administration, if we deprive the Post-Office Department of the power to exercise a discretion in providing for the needs of the service and protecting the interests of the public.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman will allow me to ask him this question: Has not the general law heretofore operated always as a limitation upon the amount to be expended by the Department, and does not this bill in the new legislation proposed set aside entirely the provisions or the section to which the gentleman from Arkansas has referred?

Mr. ROGERS. In this connection allow me to read another section of law bearing upon this same subject, so that my friend from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] may have an opportunity of answering this also. The law approved May 1, 1884, to be found in volume 23 of the Statutes at Large, page 17, contains this provision:

> Hereafter no Department or officer of the United States shall accept voluntary service for the Government or employ personal service in excess of that authorized by law, except in cases of sudden emergency involving the loss of human life or the destruction of property.

Mr. PETERS. Why, Mr. Chairman, that simply emphasizes the argument I have been trying to make, that there is no necessity for this additional or duplicated provision of law. This will be simply a duplication of the existing law; but it takes the form of an emphatic declaration that the Postmaster-General can not under any circumstances be allowed to exceed the appropriation.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does not my friend know that the legislative provisions proposed in this bill would operate to defeat both the sections of law referred to by the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. PETERS. This simply provides for a classification, and leaves the discretion of the Postmaster-General as to the amount of clerical force where it always has been.

Mr. HOLMAN. It makes no limitation whatever.

Mr. PETERS. There is no limitation whatever upon the amount of clerical force, but the present law puts a limitation upon the amount that the Postmaster-General shall use for the purpose of paying that clerical force.

Mr. HOLMAN. The provision in this bill, being the later law, will be in express conflict with the earlier provision.

Mr. PETERS. This later law is not in conflict with the former; it must be construed in harmony with the provisions of that law.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, not only in committee but in the House grave doubts have been entertained as to how far the provisions of this new legislation go in giving freedom or liberty to the Postmaster-General in the expenditure of the public money outside of the amount appropriated in the bill.

If there is no doubt upon the question, while to my mind there is no doubt—if there is no doubt I heartily concur in the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, and I believe it should be fixed in this legislation that the Postmaster-General has no right under existing or pre-existing law to exceed the appropriation voted for when we put the bill through its passage in this House.

But the fact is to be considered in connection with the statutes now on the statute-book. We know the Postmaster-General is prohibited from spending money outside of the appropriation specified in the bill, and each year he comes to Congress with a deficiency appropriation. In the present deficiency bill we find $50,000 for the present year for postal clerks in the railway mail service. Why is that? It is on the basis that there will be a deficiency of $50,000 in the service as now conducted by the Department, if continued. If Congress refuses to make up that deficiency, when Congress adjourns the Postmaster-General will immediately cut down that force in the railway mail service so that at the end of the year he will come within the limitations and provisions not only of the statute but of the appropriations. He came last year to Congress and asked for $100,000 deficiency in clerical force, and Congress gave him that.

I merely desire to make this clear, that when the appropriation of Congress is not sufficient to carry out the programme of the administration as it grows up during the year, the Postmaster-General comes to Congress and asks for a deficiency. If the deficiency is not granted he immediately curtails the service so that at the close of the year it shall be within the limits of the appropriation.

Right here in connection with that proposition. You have voted down the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] increasing this appropriation $300,000. I believe, and I state it after examination of the legislation contained in this bill, that the $600,000 increase for the clerical force will not be sufficient to carry out the provisions of the new legislation incorporated in that bill. Last year, or rather the present fiscal year ending with the close of the month of June, we appropriated $550,000 increased clerical appropriation over the preceding year.

The Postmaster-General in his report in December asks $6,600,000 as the appropriation necessary to carry on the clerical force in the post-offices. Your committee gives $6,550,000, or $50,000 less than in December last the Postmaster-General asked for. I claim you, sir, his judgment and recommendation, as to his administration for the past four years, is a good, wise, experienced, and intelligent recommendation to Congress. He has asked for $6,600,000. We have given him in this bill $6,550,000. With no invidious purpose I make the declaration that the next administration should have the same leeway in the conduct of this Department as the present incumbent, who makes recommendation for this deficiency.

One step further. Since the recommendations of the Postmaster-General for $6,600,000, we find in January, not December, the presentation of a new scheme whereby the humbler or less paid clerical force of this Department shall receive a larger compensation, and the report of the chairman of the committee makes the statement that in order to carry out the provisions of this legislation $300,000 additional will be required. Therefore if the legislation now on the statute-book is to be re-enacted by the provisions of the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, in which I concur, I claim you, sir, that in the passage of this legislation and its enactment into law the recommendations of the Postmaster-General for $6,600,000 should be conceded to the next administration as well as the additional $300,000 to carry out the provisions of the paragraphs of this bill; and when this amendment is disposed of, in view of the defeat of the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS], I shall move that $200,000 be added to the $6,550,000 already incorporated in this bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, the proposition contained in the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is nothing, in my judgment, but a repetition of existing law—a statute which has commended itself after an experience in governmental affairs to the Congress of the United States. It has prevented a great many abuses; it is in the nature of a restriction upon the Executive Departments in their use of the revenues of the people of this country, and is a proper and rightful restriction. If at some time it shall appear that the service may be affected by a failure to confer this absolute authority upon a head of a Department over the revenues of the Government, as has already been indicated in this discussion, your fiscal year begins on the 1st day of July, and you have but a few months when you may submit the question to the consideration of Congress, and then Congress in its judgment may vote an additional sum of money, or refuse it, as the exigencies of the case may warrant. There has been found no difficulty whatever in that direction in the past.

But I do not agree with my friend from Indiana that this legislation repeals that law; and the only reason I consent to its going on the bill at all is that I have no possible objection to that limitation being strengthened if it can be strengthened, or to its being repeated as often in these appropriation bills as anybody may desire.

Now, Mr. Chairman, my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] has recurred to the discussion in reference to the compensation of clerks in the post-offices, and he has stated that the increase of this fiscal year over the preceding year was, I believe, $555,000.

Mr. BINGHAM. Five hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars.

Mr. BLOUNT. Now, sir, that statement left without explanation would be misleading. It was made under these circumstances: The Congress of the United States after the passage of the appropriation bill provided that the money-order clerks in post-offices, who are paid fees, should thereafter be paid out of the item in the Post-Office bill known as "compensation to clerks in post-offices," and in that year (not the preceding year) the Postmaster-General undertook to run on that fund for compensation of clerks in post-offices both classes of clerks for a time. The sum of $100,000, however, was granted; but this year, as stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, a large increase was allowed on the express ground that unless it were done the allowance for the compensation of clerks in the first and second class post-offices was less than in the preceding year, so that you had to make provision for the failure of the preceding year to grade the service up, and for this year also, and we had to meet the complaints here with a deficiency. We had to give an additional allowance, not because the natural growth of the service was $555,000, because, taking it through a series of years, it will be found that the average is less than $150,000, but because of the neglect to make an appropriation in pursuance of this changed legislation.

Now, when you have by adding to the amount of the appropriation for clerks in post-offices a sum equal to the amount you have been paying to the money-order clerks in the shape of fees, you have met the difficulty. When you have put the $550,000 into that fund you have answered the question, and it does not again arise, and then we come back to the other question, what is the normal increase in the matter of clerical hire in the post-offices of the country? When you find, Mr. Chairman, instead of its being $550,000 or $575,000, as my friend asserts, that it averages less than $200,000, I think you will agree that the appropriation here is ample, and if this be true, that that is the average, will you take the exceptional condition of this year as a basis and ignore the experience of past years? Certainly not.

My friend says the next administration should be treated fairly, as fairly as this. I wish to say that the items in this bill for the next fiscal year, which will be expended by the next administration, present the most liberal appropriation ever passed by Congress.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SOWDEN. Mr. Chairman, as I stated the other day, there seems to be a manifest misunderstanding or disagreement——

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SOWDEN. Certainly.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask unanimous consent to close the debate on this paragraph and the amendments thereto in ten minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I hope not.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have given notice that it was my purpose to offer an amendment in reference to the sum total. I do not care to debate it.

Mr. DOCKERY. Make it twenty minutes.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to agree on some time, if possible.

Mr. PETERS. I want two or three minutes longer myself.

Mr. CANNON. Why do you not vote on this amendment now?

Mr. BLOUNT. I am perfectly willing to do it, and then my friend from Pennsylvania can take the floor.

Mr. SOWDEN. With that understanding, that I be recognized on the amendment of my colleague from Pennsylvania, I shall yield the floor.

Mr. PETERS. I would like to be heard on this amendment for a few minutes before it is voted upon.

Mr. SOWDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the floor to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] for the present.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say but a few words. I introduced the bill as to classification—not this bill, but one regarding the classification of clerks in post-offices—in January, 1888. That was before the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and enough has been accumulating since then to form this bundle of papers which I hold in my hand. I am glad the committee has produced this bill, and that this legislation, under all of the circumstances, is embodied in the appropriation bill. I do not believe with the gentleman from Indiana that any more legislation is needed to prevent an excess of the appropriation.

I do not believe this, and I did not vote for the amendment of my friend from Illinois for reasons which I would like to spread out upon the RECORD a little more at length; and therefore I ask leave to print some remarks upon this subject and not take up any more time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? The Chair hears none, and the leave requested is granted.

Mr. PETERS. I simply want to add a word in opposition to this amendment. Now, it is conceded, and I think correctly so, that the current law is a sufficient limitation upon the incoming administration. If that be so, it seems to me an act of injustice to place an additional limitation upon the incoming administration. The present administration has already placed some limitation upon the incoming administration. It has placed the railway mail service under the civil-service law; and that must necessarily interfere with the correct administration of the service at least for a time. I am frank to say that I am not friendly to this civil service reform law. I believe it is the very froth of political economy. I believe it is the very morass of political honesty. I think more than that. I believe it is the excelsior of political hypocrisy. But as that limitation has been placed upon the incoming administration, I want to raise my voice against putting any further limitation upon the administration, and to restore to its proper efficiency the postal service upon the railway trains of this country. The only effect this law can have is to make an edict issued to the incoming Postmaster-General that where in the past the Postmaster-General may have exercised his discretion he can not do so even in the face of the necessities of the service in the future.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will my friend allow me this question? This bill contains the following provision:

That all acts and parts of acts in conflict with this law are hereby repealed.

Does not my friend see very clearly that by that repealing provision all restriction upon the Postmaster-General and the Department is swept away?

Mr. PETERS. I think not, because there is no conflict between this act and the statute of to-day.

The question was taken on Mr. HOLMAN'S amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: In line 10, page 2, in lieu of "$550,000" I move to insert "$750,000;" so that it will read:

For compensation to clerks in post-offices, $6,750,000.

Mr. SOWDEN. When I first obtained the floor my intention was to limit my remarks to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], but upon request I graciously yielded a moment to my friend from New York [Mr. COX], through which I was taken off the floor. Whatever remarks I shall now submit will be on the pending amendment. It ought to be voted down. There is no occasion for its adoption.

The able chairman of the committee, who has this bill in charge, in answer to a question put to him yesterday by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] when this bill was under discussion, remarked that under the proposed classification of the clerks and employés in the first-class post-offices of the country a saving would be effected of $541,800, and in the second-class offices $347,000, or in all $889,600. He undoubtedly meant to have said $888,800 instead of $889,600, as stated by him. He repeats that there is "saved on these two items, as estimated by the chief of the allowance division, $889,600, and yet the proposition is to increase the amount of the bill by the amount of $900,000."

This would have been exactly the result had the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] been adopted. The appropriations carried by his bill exceed those for the current fiscal year $600,000; and the amendment just offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] proposes a still further increase of $200,000, as I understand it. If it be true that there will be a saving of nearly $900,000 through the classification provided for in this measure, why is it that the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads reported a bill increasing the appropriations $600,000 over those of the current fiscal year? The committee in its report says that—

The amount recommended for compensation to clerks in post-offices is very large, an increase over the current fiscal year of $600,000.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM], who is a member of the committee, just said that the increase is $575,000. The Postmaster-General is of the opinion that the proposed classification of the clerks and employés in the first and second class post-offices will result in an increase of expenditure to the extent of $300,000, and that this increase would possibly meet the expenditures under the new arrangement provided for in this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I would be pleased to have some one harmonize these different and contradictory statements. If it be true that nearly $900,000 will be saved under the proposed plan as stated by the distinguished chairman of the committee [Mr. BLOUNT], whence the necessity for any increased appropriations? This matter should be clearly and satisfactorily explained by the chairman of the committee, since he failed to do so yesterday in response to a similar question from my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Why is it, I repeat to the gentleman having this bill in charge, that you propose to increase these appropriations $575,000 or $600,000, when you tell us that by reason of the proposed classification of these clerks there will be a saving of nearly $900,000? If this is so it is very evident that there is no occasion for any increased appropriations, and much less for the additional increase proposed by the amendment offered by my colleague from Pennsylvania, which I hope will not prevail.

Mr. BLOUNT. My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN] entirely misunderstood me in the discussion to which he alludes; and if he will give me his attention I think I will solve the contradiction that he seems to find in the situation and the statements that have been made.

The appropriation bill contains an increase for clerk-hire for the year ending June 30, 1890, of $600,000. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] proposes an amendment of $300,000, which would make the total $900,000. The chief of the salary and allowance division had made a calculation of that sort, and while the bill itself discloses the fact that all of these lower-grade salaries are raised, I took his calculation and showed that instead of its being necessary to make a nine-hundred-thousand-dollar increase, I could take 2,439 clerks at a thousand dollars per annum and rate them at $800 per annum, and 1,239 at $900 and rate them at $700 (which is more than the lower-grade clerks are getting now), and it would result in a reduction below the amount of his calculation of $889,000; and I argued that if this were true the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads were perfectly safe in saying that $600,000 was ample. My judgment is that it is far more than ample, and I regret that any attempt to increase the amonut at this rate has been even proposed in this House.

I desired and do desire a liberal course as contrasted with the past in reference to clerks in the first and second class offices. I know how little detailed information has been resorted to in the administration of the service and in the provision of sums of money for the pay of these clerks, and how inequitably, in some instances, these salaries have been reduced, and I have been and I am willing to classify them so that this ruinous reduction shall not occur again, and to put a sum of money in this bill sufficient to prevent it. It has been no argument of mine, sir, that instead of increasing this bill $900,000 we ought to make it about the same as the bill of last year. Not at all. I want to take advanced ground and make a large increase, and the committee have proposed that and it is contained in this item, and I do not want a just movement discredited by what I deem an extravagant appropriation of money. I believe, sir, that a judicious administration of this service will bring satisfaction to the clerks in all the post-offices of this country, and that the sum herein provided need not all be consumed in doing so.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, this committee has inserted in the bill the limitation, as provided by the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, that the Postmaster-General, in carrying out the provisions of this legislation, shall not exceed the amount appropriated in this bill. The Postmaster-General in his report uses this language:

> At present, having in view the statements hereinbefore made and the rapid increase and growth of the postal service, I am of the opinion that not less than $6,600,000 will be required for compensation of clerks in post-offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and I so recommend.

The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads have inserted in this bill an appropriation of $50,000 less than the recommendation of the Postmaster-General. So much for the general appropriation. The chairman says further—I quote from his report:

> For many years the heads of the Departments have urged the necessity of classifying the clerks in the first and second class post-offices. This has been done in the accompanying bill, and will result, in the opinion of the Postmaster-General, in an increase of expenditures to the extent of $300,000.

We have decreased the recommendation of the Postmaster-General $50,000, and my amendment decreases the amount $100,000 more. Therefore I say, in view of the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, made a part and parcel of this bill, reducing as we do the recommendations of the Postmaster-General $150,000, I claim that my amendment will be sufficient to carry out the provisions of the proposed legislation, coming within the limitations of the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I hope we shall now have a vote.

Mr. BLOUNT. I want to see whether I understand my friend correctly. Does the gentleman [Mr. BINGHAM] mean to say that the amount contained in this bill is $50,000 less than the amount in the estimates?

Mr. BINGHAM. On page 43 of your report you will find a quotation from the report of the Postmaster-General wherein the statement is made of a recommendation of $6,600,000. We recommend in this bill $6,550,000. I am quoting from your own report.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to say to my friend that that is a typographical error. If he will turn to the Book of Estimates, page 185, he will see the amount stated as $6,550,000, the exact amount contained in this bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. Very well; that makes a difference of $50,000. I was led into the error by the chairman's own report, and I apologize.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am willing to take my share of the responsibility.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Line 10, page 2, strike out "five" and insert "seven;" so that the clause if amended as proposed will read:
> "For compensation of clerks in post-offices, $6,750,000."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PETERS. I move to amend by inserting, after the word "from," in line 13, page 2, the words "and after;" so as to read "from and after July 1, 1889."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOCKERY. I move to amend by striking out "and" where it appears the second time in line 10, page 2, and also by striking out the semicolon and inserting a period; so as entirely to disconnect this legislation, which is designed to be permanent, from the amount of the appropriation carried in this bill. [A pause, during which Mr. BLOUNT conferred with Mr. DOCKERY.] On the suggestion of my friend from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Assistant postmaster, salary not exceeding 50 per cent. of the salary of the postmaster, as provided by act of March 3, 1883, graded in even hundreds of dollars, from $1,500 to not exceeding $3,000 per annum, except New York, N. Y., where the salary of the assistant postmaster shall be fixed at $3,000 per annum, and that of the second assistant postmater at $2,000 per annum.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move to amend by striking out the words "three thousand," in the twenty-first line, page 2, and inserting "three thousand five hundred." Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that this amount——

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish the gentleman would state his point of order. If the amendment is to be ruled out on a point of order there is no use in my speaking upon it.

Mr. HOLMAN. It may be that the point of order should be made to the whole paragraph. My point is that this is not covered by the consent given to the classification referred to; that this is an increase of salary. The question is whether this is authorized by the consent given the other day.

Mr. BLOUNT. Is that the point of order which the gentleman makes?

Mr. HOLMAN. If the salary proposed is the same heretofore given, I do not care to press the point. I only wish by the point of order to prevent an increase of salaries, if I can do so.

Mr. ADAMS. I want to know what the point of order is. Is it against the whole paragraph or against the amendment?

Mr. BLOUNT. Against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] will proceed.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understand the gentleman from Indiana makes a point of order that this officer is not known as a clerk, and that therefore this proposition does not come within the permission given to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to propose legislation with reference to classifying clerks in first and second class offices. Do I state the point of the gentleman from Indiana correctly?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, the fact is that assistant postmasters are always paid out of the fund provided for clerks in post-offices, and their salaries are fixed in just the same way—on a roster approved by the First Assistant Postmaster-General. They are known in the Department as clerks, just as much so as a stamper is known as a clerk. The gentleman might say that a stamper is not a clerk. The Department has made these designations for these various branches of the service. I submit that this proposition is entirely within the permission granted by the House to the committee. I presume that if the gentleman from Indiana were aware that the amount named in the bill is simply an error made by the printer at the Government Printing Office, and that the salary proposed in the amendment is just the amount now allowed, he might not be disposed to insist on his point of order, or rather his objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the salary proposed in the amendment is the same as that now allowed, the point of order is of course unimportant.

Mr. BLOUNT. The salary is not fixed except by order of the Postmaster-General on a roster; it may be made larger or smaller, but this is the amount at which it has been running.

Mr. HOLMAN. How many assistant postmasters receive as high a salary as $3,500?

Mr. BLOUNT. None except this one at the New York office, which has always been regarded as an exceptional case.

Mr. BINGHAM. The salary proposed in the amendment is the same that the assistant postmaster at New York now receives.

Mr. BLOUNT. So I have just stated.

Mr. BINGHAM. On the point of order I desire to make this statement——

Mr. HOLMAN. In view of the statement just made, I will not press the point of order to this proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. I desire to offer an amendment, to substitute "50 per cent.," in line 15, for "65 per cent."

The Clerk read the amendment of Mr. REED, as follows:

> In line 15 strike out "50" and insert "65;" so as to read:
> "Assistant postmaster, salary not exceeding 65 per cent. of the salary of the postmaster," etc.

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. RICE. I desire to offer an amendment to insert "75 per cent." instead of "50 per cent."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana make a point of order on the amendment of the gentleman from Maine?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. REED. What is the point of order?

Mr. HOLMAN. The effect of the amendment, as I understand, is to increase materially the salaries above the rates now provided for in the Post-Office Department. And this officer not being a clerk, as I understand, the authority to entertain this proposition does not exist under the consent given by the House.

Mr. REED. I think there was general permission given for this.

Mr. CANNON. What was the order?

Mr. BINGHAM. Let us hear the order read.

Mr. REED. Let the order be read. I hope that by some accident the power has been given to the House to legislate. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Maine furnish the reference to which he has called the attention of the Chair?

Mr. REED. I presume the order is in the Calendar.

Mr. BLOUNT. The proceedings in reference to this matter will be found in the RECORD of January 17, page 888.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read from the RECORD.

The Clerk read as follows:

CLERKS IN FIRST AND SECOND CLASS OFFICES.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to make to the House a request at the instance of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and it is that that committee be allowed to report in the Post-Office appropriation bill legislation providing for the classification of clerks in first and second class offices. It has been recommended by the President and by Postmasters-General from time to time, and the only reason the matter has not been disposed of has been the difficulty under the rules of the House of reaching the matter. I hope there will be no objection to my request, so that the matter may be brought before the House for disposition.

Mr. BURROWS. To be considered in order.

Mr. BLOUNT. That is all. I merely ask that it may be brought before the House for consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TAULBEE. I shall have to raise the point of order against the proposition if it is to bring these clerks under the provisions of the civil service.

Mr. BLOUNT. It has no relation to the civil service.

Mr. TAULBEE. I would like to hear, then, exactly what is the object of the proposition.

Mr. BLOUNT. The object of it is simply this: The gentleman from Kentucky is aware that the clerks in the Post-Office Department have their salaries fixed. He is also aware that the letter-carriers have their salaries fixed by law. The postal clerks also have their salaries fixed by law, but so far as the first and second class offices are concerned the clerks therein have their salaries fixed, not by law, but regulated by the chief of the salary and allowance division in the Post-Office Department. The proposition we ask to bring before the House for consideration is in relation to that matter.

Mr. TAULBEE. That is the object of the provision, then.

Mr. BLOUNT. The object is to fix the salaries of these clerks in first and second class offices.

Mr. TAULBEE. I am for it. I do not object to that. I thought it was a proposition to classify them within the civil service.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire whether the object of this request is to classify in the same manner as in the Department, or to increase or diminish the salaries of the employés?

Mr. BLOUNT. No, sir; not to increase, but simply to classify them. So far as the details are concerned, whether the salaries shall be higher or lower, is a matter for the House to determine.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to know whether my friend proposes in any respect to increase these salaries or the grade of the employés in the branches of the Department to which he refers?

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will the classification proposed carry any particular rate of salary?

Mr. BLOUNT. Well, that is just the very object, to fix the salary and to limit the power of the head of the bureau in the matter.

Mr. CUTCHEON. But will not this allowance of salaries have to be paid as heretofore, through the Department?

The SPEAKER. This is not debatable.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I wish to ask the gentleman from Georgia if a bill has been reported heretofore to the same effect as he now proposes from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads?

Mr. BLOUNT. Oh, yes, I think on several occasions.

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman from Maine supply the Chair with information as to whether the duties of the assistant postmasters are similar or equivalent to the duties of the clerks mentioned there?

Mr. REED. I so understand.

Mr. BLOUNT. Undoubtedly. I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that there can be the least doubt upon the question. The Clerk has just read the proceedings at the time permission was given by the House to classify the clerks of the first and second classes, and the object there was to classify them, not for the purpose of fixing their salaries, for the order does not fix the salaries at all, the RECORD disclosing that the permission was given to make the classification; and as to what might be the result on salaries there could be a difference of opinion, possibly, whether it made them higher or lower. But the order was intended to allow us to legislate upon the whole subject.

Mr. KERR. But not to increase the salaries.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not say that it did give the power to increase salaries, but it gave the committee freedom in the matter to make up this bill in regard to the classification of the clerks; and under the order then made the committee had the right to legislate upon the subject. Now, it is a matter of opinion as to what the effect will be. But for the rule of the House we might do this any way. We have dispensed with the rule of the House, however, and are under no restraint except as to what may be the judgment of the House in this matter.

Mr. KERR. I wish to say in regard to the matter that there is an express statement by the chairman of the committee, as reported to the House, to the effect that the object of the permission was not to increase salaries.

Mr. REED. But there are two distinct statements, that the object was to classify the clerks in the first place, and that it was also designed to fix the salaries of these clerks.

Mr. BLOUNT. The matter is perfectly clear, as appears from the RECORD.

Mr. KERR. This committee is now before the House asking an appropriation of six and a half millions of dollars for salaries of clerks in post-offices, when on the last year's bill they received but five and a half millions. It seems to me that the provisions of this bill expressly violate the permission given by the House, as understood by the House, and as we had a right to understand it from the statement of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the gentleman will not be unfair enough to construe my statement by a single sentence. I had called attention to the report of the President of the United States and several Postmasters-General to the effect that by reason of the salaries being unfixed sometimes many of them were brought too low, and the service was entitled to have these clerks classified. I did not know, sir, whether under that classification, when we could get it, the general result would be, as I have said, to make the salaries higher or lower. Various opinions have been expressed on that subject. The Postmaster-General himself was in doubt too, when he was asked the question in the light of all the references that had been made to it. I will concede that a fair construction is that the object was not to increase salaries, but simply to accomplish the classification. Still, we did not know whether it was going to increase or diminish. The prime object was to classify them.

Mr. REED. If the point of order is good against this paragraph, it probably strikes every paragraph under this head.

Mr. KERR. It ought to strike them.

Mr. ROGERS. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Georgia that he had a right to report upon that without asking anybody's consent as to whether he would put in six or seven million dollars.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from Arkansas suggests what is entirely true, and very pertinent here, that we could have put in a million of dollars more in this appropriation. The salaries were not fixed. They could have been raised under that provision far beyond anything in the bill. So that the tendency is restrictive rather than otherwise.

Mr. KERR. Yet it does increase the appropriation over a million of dollars.

Mr. BLOUNT. Not a cent, and the only question is how much we will give to this item of clerk-hire when you provide this legislation.

Mr. KERR. It is a million dollars more than last year.

Mr. BINGHAM. Five hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars.

Mr. KERR. Well, there is a large increase.

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes, there is an increase over last year, and the gentleman will find that there is more given every year, for this business will grow in spite of the inconvenience it is to some gentlemen. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no ambiguity in the language read. In all that has been read the Chair will perceive that the classification, and the classification of clerks only, was the question. Now, I made an inquiry at the moment whether the proposition was to classify as in the other Departments, for it is well known that there are four classes—first, second, third, and fourth classes—or four grades of clerks which were originally intended to be brought under the operation of the civil-service law. The answer was, I think, that that was the purpose of the proposition; but from the beginning of the colloquy to the end the subject of clerks alone was mentioned—clerks, as in the other Departments.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will my friend yield to me for a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BLOUNT. If the assistant postmaster is not a clerk, by what authority has the Postmaster-General from time to time paid him out of the fund for clerks of post-offices?

Mr. HOLMAN. That does not reach the point at all.

Mr. BLOUNT. It did with the Postmaster-General, when he paid the clerks out of that fund.

Mr. HOLMAN. He could pay the Postmaster-General, the First Assistant Postmaster-General, the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, and the Third Assistant Postmaster-General out of the same appropriation that you pay these clerks out of, if he thought proper. But the gentleman will not say that the First, Second, and Third Assistant Postmasters-General are clerks. They are not clerks at all. They are the heads of the Department.

Mr. BLOUNT. They are paid out of the appropriation for the Post-Office Department fixing their salaries.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is the Commissioner of the General Land Office a clerk in the ordinary acceptance of the term, taking it in connection with the ordinary meaning of clerk? What is the use of making it ambiguous? It should be made clear, specific, and definite. So that I submit to the Chair that there is no room for contradiction. The assistant postmaster is simply a deputy postmaster. He is the second postmaster. In other words, he acts in lieu of the postmaster himself.

Mr. BLOUNT. When the postmaster is out.

Mr. HOLMAN. He performs the duty of the postmaster when he is absent.

Mr. WEBER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana whether his point of order is based upon the ground that it increases the salary?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that is the effect of it; but whether it does or not the result is the same.

Mr. WEBER. The gentleman will understand that this section only refers to the assistant postmaster.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. WEBER. And that the fixing of the salaries is not arbitrary with reference to this section. In a subsequent section it is within the discretion of the postmaster; in other words, it is where it is now.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not where it is now?

Mr. WEBER. Precisely. The postmaster fixes the salary of the assistant postmaster.

Mr. REED. And he can fix it now?

Mr. HOLMAN. This establishes it by law. Because it has been done heretofore without law it is now sought to be made specific by law. It changes law and makes new law upon the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Georgia has some authorities on the question, and the Chair will be glad to hear them.

Mr. ROGERS (to Mr. BLOUNT). Let me say a word or two here.

Mr. BLOUNT. Very well.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I just want to make one observation. If there is any such thing as an assistant postmaster known to the law, it ought to be in these statutes. If it can not be shown, it does not exist. I think that is the whole argument.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then that office is created by this bill, and makes the point of order stronger.

Mr. WEBER. There is an assistant postmaster, and his oath of office is required to be filed.

Mr. ROGERS. Where is the statute?

Mr. WEBER. I do not know where the statute is. That is the practice.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to hear the gentleman from Georgia as to the clerks mentioned in the order of January 16.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have always understood that the Chair in determining questions of this nature would take whatever aid came from official statements, from reports, statutes, etc., and take notice of them to assist him in reaching a conclusion. I hold in my hand, sir, a paper forwarded to me by the First Assistant Postmaster-General, showing the total number of employés in each of the ninety-seven first-class post-offices, with the number designated for duty, and the various lines of duty required, the maximum and minimum, and their compensation, of the employés in each line of duty.

The appropriation bill is in this form in reference to clerks in post-offices:

Compensation of postmasters.

And the next item is:

Compensation for clerks in post-offices.

In the designation of the persons employed I find as follows: Assistant postmasters, chief clerks, secretaries and stenographers, cashiers, finance clerks, stamp clerks, superintendents of divisions, assistant superintendents of divisions, mailing clerks, letter distributers, paper distributers, separators and assorters, record clerks, registry clerks, inquiry clerks, dispatchers, watchmen, laborers, messengers, porters, carpenters, and timekeepers.

Why, Mr. Chairman, if the proposition of my friend from Indiana be correct, there is not a messenger or laborer or any person who is, in accordance with his peculiar definition of a clerk, entitled to be paid out of that fund. The appropriation, as it is applied in pursuance of law, is given without any designation of a single employé, and has left it to be determined in the particular offices. For the convenience of the labor of that office, one person is designated as the assistant postmaster, another as secretary or stenographer, another as a messenger or porter, because this designation was deemed fit in the order of business.

The gentleman from Indiana says the assistant postmaster simply acts in the absence of the postmaster. The gentleman from Indiana is quite mistaken. If he were designated the chief clerk it would come very much nearer the correct designation of his labor.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is a chief clerk besides that.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from Indiana says there is a chief clerk besides that. At some offices there are some persons who are designated as chief clerks, at other offices there are none. It is a mere designation. If the gentleman desires to change the office, or to call this man a "chief clerk" instead of an "assistant postmaster," it will be no inconvenience to him, although it may perhaps affect his vanity because he may prefer to be called "assistant postmaster."

Mr. CANNON. I want to make a suggestion to the Chair touching the point of order——

Mr. BLOUNT. If my friend from Illinois will allow me, I have not quite completed what I desired to say. Under the law the Postmaster-General may make allowances out of this fund to the post-offices of the country entitled to it, for what is called technically "clerk-hire." The postmaster submits a roster, designating one clerk as an "assistant postmaster" or "chief clerk," or whatever the designation may be. There is no law for it. It is merely a matter of convenience in the performance of the work, and the allowance is made by order of the Postmaster-General in that form. There is no provision of law for this clerk except out of this fund, and there never has been, so far as I know.

Mr. HOLMAN. But this law creates it here.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a suggestion to the Chair in reference to the point of order. None of these provisions would be in order without unanimous consent. But the unanimous consent has been given, and you turn to it and you find that it relates to the classification of clerks in first and second class post-offices. It goes no farther. It does not relate to superintendents; it does not relate to assistant postmasters; it relates to nothing but clerks. Yet the gentleman has brought in here a classification and proposes to put it in the form of permanent law and to fix the salaries for a vast army of office-holders. I do not think the House intended to give its consent to any such thing, or did give it.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I desire to antagonize the position of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to this extent: Your bill not only now, but heretofore, has indicated its compensation to postmasters. It has then, in a distinct and other paragraph, indicated the allowance for the clerical force, or the clerks in post-offices, giving a round sum total. Every employé in post-offices of the first and second class other than a carrier (who is appropriated for under another head in this bill) is a clerk. "Assistant postmaster" is merely a convenient designation for a particular line of official work, the same as "cashier" or "finance clerk" or "distributing clerk." The assistant postmaster gives no bond to the Government. He is a subordinate to the postmaster and gives a bond to him, the same as the cashier, and the same as the other subordinates of the office. Their names are duly reported to the Department and their oath of office is filed with the report, but the responsibility of the assistant is to the postmaster, and he is not known in any official relation with the Department other than when he signs during the absence of the postmaster. He carries no money relation nor responsibility to the Government, but is responsible directly to the postmaster. In other words, "assistant postmaster" is only a convenient designation for a clerk detailed for a specific line of work, and he is paid his compensation, and has been heretofore, out of the compensation for clerk-hire, and it is so proposed in this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say a single word, Mr. Chairman, before the Chair gives his decision.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not desire to hear further from the gentleman from Indiana. The order of the 16th of January makes provision for clerks as "clerks," and it seems to the mind of the Chair that "assistant postmaster" and "clerk" are entirely distinct designations of officers, and that if it had been the intention of the House to include other officers they would have been distinctly named. Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. REED. Does that decision strike out the paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has at present been called upon only to pass upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Maine. No point of order has yet been made upon the paragraph.

Mr. CANNON. I make the point of order upon the paragraph.

Mr. BLOUNT. I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair because it goes to the gist of the whole matter.

Mr. REED. I want to say a word about this. I do not understand what the permission of the House has to do with this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] proposes an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, this question is one of very great importance in reference to this bill. It does not relate to this paragraph alone; the same strict construction would prevent the consideration of various other paragraphs in this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is this question debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia appeals from the decision of the Chair; and the Chair proposes to allow him reasonable latitude it stating his appeal.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I understand the ruling of the Chair to be that the order adopted by the House provided in terms for entertaining a provision with reference to the compensation of clerks in first and second class offices, and that as the assistant postmaster is not designated as a clerk, therefore this proposition can not be entertained under the order of the House.

Let us see how this construction will operate in regard to other paragraphs of this bill. The next paragraph of the bill relates to secretary and stenographer. In that case the same question might be raised, whether he is to be regarded as a clerk; he is not so designated. Next we have the cashier; he is not designated as a clerk. Then we have the stamp agent, who is not designated as a clerk. Then we have the superintendents of mails, the assistant superintendents of mails, the superintendents of delivery, the assistant superintendents of delivery, the superintendents of registry, the assistant superintendents of registry, the superintendents of the money-order divisions, the superintendents of stations, the foremen of crews or working sections, the separators, and paper distributers, and so on. Under the ruling made, the classification of the great mass of clerks, as that designation is understood by the Postmaster-General, would not be in order on this bill; and the House would have been guilty of a great folly in adopting that order if the rigid construction which has been adopted were insisted upon. If because a person doing clerical work happens to be designated an assistant postmaster, it is not in order on this bill, by virtue of the specific language used by the House, to embrace him in the classification, then the same ruling applies to most of the employés provided for in this bill; and it is impossible for us to do anything now with this legislation. The opinion that an assistant postmaster is not a clerk does not obtain in the Department.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is the postmaster himself a clerk?

Mr. BLOUNT. No, sir; and I am glad the gentleman has asked me that question. The postmaster receives a salary fixed by law.

Mr. HOLMAN. And he is not a clerk; yet the gentleman holds that the assistant postmaster is.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman appears to assume that if the postmaster is a clerk, therefore the assistant postmaster must be a clerk. Why, Mr. Chairman, the postmaster is designated by name in the statute; his salary and designation are fixed by law.

Mr. HOLMAN. And you do the same thing in this bill as to the assistant postmaster; you fix his salary and give him his title by the express terms of this bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not think that is at all responsive to the matter to which I was addressing myself. The gentleman made a remark implying that because I admitted the postmaster is not a clerk I was bound to admit that the assistant postmaster was not a clerk. It was not to that point I was addressing myself. The gentleman injects into my speech something which is not responsive to my remarks. I must be permitted to proceed in some order.

Now, is the assistant postmaster designated by law? Are any of these clerks designated by law? Is the salary of the assistant postmaster fixed by law or specifically appropriated, or are the designation and salary left to the Post-Office Department? I say it is left to the Department to call him an assistant postmaster, or a clerk, or any other name that it may deem proper, with the view of adjusting him to particular work in a particular office.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say I have profound respect for the ability and character of the distinguished chairman, and nothing could impel me to appeal but the fact this ruling destroys the privileges given to the committee, as I understand it, by the House, and the additional fact that the President of the United States, the Postmaster-General for ten years, the actual condition of the service, and the demand of the intelligent press all over the country require something shall be done in this connection.

Mr. COX. I should like to say one word on the point of order. I would address it to the Chair, but really it would be for the House and the committee.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] obtained leave, as the committee will remember, to legislate on classification of clerks in the first and second class offices. That is the foundation of this special classifying legislation. These officers, when leave was obtained, were paid under and by virtue of the item of "compensation of clerks." You can not get over, under, or around that.

Mr. BINGHAM. And always have been so paid.

Mr. COX. Yes, and always have been paid under that designation. What the various clerks were called, whether cashier, or superintendent, or assistant postmaster, then or now, does not matter. The only question which the Chair has decided wrongly, in my judgment, is as to the item of compensation of clerks. That should end the matter as a matter of parliamentary law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] appeals from the decision of the Chair——

Mr. HOLMAN. Permit me to say a word before the ruling is made. I hope the gentleman from Georgia will withdraw his appeal.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will withdraw it if the gentleman will withdraw his point of order. I think it is much more important that he should withdraw his point of order than that I should withdraw my appeal.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend from Georgia should not ask that the point of order should be withdrawn. It is clearly right. If the gentleman from Georgia rose in his place and proposed to classify the employés of the Post-Office Department, I would have made that objection promptly. It was understood the classification intended was only that which has prevailed in the other Departments. If any other classification had been proposed I would have objected.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am surprised that my friend from Indiana should speak on this matter as he does. I confess there is a division of opinion around me. I find the Department in all its practice has treated the matter in a different way from what the gentleman from Indiana proposes.

The gentleman has said if all these designations had been proposed objection would have been made. The gentleman from Indiana knows, as well as any member of this House, that the words "of compensation of clerks" included postmasters under all these designations, and that these designations were simply made for convenience in handling the men in relation to their business and nothing else. Therefore, I think, he does himself injustice in attempting to reflect on me by the suggestion he has made. I would be glad if he would relieve this situation by allowing a majority of this committee to determine for itself whether or not it will allow this item under this designation, for it does not increase, sir, by one single nickel, the amount of money for clerical force.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question? Has the office of Assistant Postmaster-General existed by law up to this time?

Mr. BLOUNT. Whatever this man does he will do, no matter by what name you call him, and so will all the clerks in this bill. The committee in making this request have followed what the Department was understood to desire.

Mr. HOLMAN. But you asked me a question, whether the office of Assistant Postmaster-General heretofore existed by law.

Mr. BINGHAM. It is not known to the law.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will ask the gentleman from Indiana if the provision for stenographers, or the provision for a stamper, exists by law?

Mr. HOLMAN. That does not answer my question.

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes, it does.

Mr. HOLMAN. How?

Mr. BLOUNT. By showing that these do not exist by virtue of law.

Mr. HOLMAN. But——

Mr. BLOUNT. Now, I can not be interrupted. I have the floor, and wish to proceed.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman is asking a question, and I want to answer him.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman must not break me up by continued interruptions. I decline emphatically to yield.

I was about to say, Mr. Chairman, that the fact that there was no provision of law in reference to an assistant postmaster was just the same as the law in reference to a stamper, and just the same as it is with reference to other offices than those designated in this classification, none of them resting on law, all of them alike resting on the fund designated as "compensation for clerks in post-offices." What deduction is made as to any applies likewise to all.

Mr. CANNON. Before the question is submitted to the committee, Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard for a moment.

I believe the decision of the Chair upon the point of order is right, and therefore I shall vote to sustain the Chair, and I am much more free to do so and desirous of doing so because I believe from a parliamentary standpoint the decision is right, for the reason that the legislation proposed by this bill is wide-reaching in its character, and the more I examine it the more I believe it to be unwise, or at least that it should not be brought in here and forced through upon an appropriation bill.

But before the committee votes upon the question to be submitted by the Chair I want to turn for a moment to the terms of the leave granted to move this legislation by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, which is that—

That committee be allowed to report in the Post-Office appropriation bill legislation providing for the classification of clerks in first and second class offices.

Now take up your bill and examine it for a moment and what do you find? You find here eight or nine pages of legislation making a complete organization of this vast concern, running through "assistant postmasters," in some cases "second assistants," "stenographers," "secretaries," "cashiers," "superintendents of mails," "superintendents of registry," "superintendents of stations," "clerks in charge of stations," "stampers," "separators," "printers," "pressmen," "draughtsmen," and a great many other employés of that Department. The scheme embodies and embraces the whole service there.

In the first place, Mr. Chairman, on the merits of the question, from the short examination I have been able to give to it, this legislation would embarrass the orderly administration of the Post-Office Department throughout the country, greatly increase the expenses and seriously cripple and limit the efficiency of the service under the appropriation proposed. Therefore, sir, as you would not give the additional appropriation necessary I am against the legislation. The terms of the leave to move this legislation only run to clerks and not to a complete organization, and I believe the Chair ought to be, and I hope will be, sustained in his ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. With great distrust of his own opinion and judgment, the Chair desires simply to state again that he understands an assistant postmaster to be one who shares the functions of the postmaster himself; and that if under the order of the House made on the 16th day of January assistant postmasters could be provided for by a change of salary or otherwise, the committee might perhaps under the same authority change the salaries of postmasters themselves.

But the question presented now is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 45, noes 29.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish now to offer an amendment——

Mr. CANNON. I make a point of order upon the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. CANNON. But I rise to make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. If the point of order is of such a nature as to take the gentleman from Georgia off the floor, the Chair would entertain it.

Mr. CANNON. I think it will. He rises to amend the paragraph;

I rise to make a point of order on the paragraph beginning with line 15 and ending with line 23, inclusive.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to reply to the point of order that this paragraph has been already amended by an increase of the salary from $3,000 to $3,500. It has been adopted, and the point of order comes too late.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois state his point of order?

Mr. CANNON. My point of order is that from lines 15 to 23, inclusive, there is a provision for the creation of the office of assistant postmaster, not authorized under the terms of the order obtained by the gentleman from Georgia.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois that this paragraph has been under discussion, has been amended, and hence the point of order is too late, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. CANNON. I was not aware that it had been amended.

Mr. BINGHAM. It has been.

Mr. REED. I would like to offer another amendment in the same direction, if there is no objection.

Mr. BLOUNT. I yield to allow the gentleman to offer it now.

Mr. REED. Then I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the paragraph:
"Provided, That no salaries shall be hereby decreased."

Mr. HOLMAN. That is legislation, not classification. I make the point of order against it.

Mr. REED. I desire to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. REED. The Chair has already decided that this paragraph is before the House; and if it is before the House, it is before it for the purpose of amendment. Here is a provision which directly relates to the salaries. It proposes to provide what the limitation of that provision which is already before the House shall be, that it shall not be construed to decrease any salaries now existing. I do not understand what point of order can be made against that, except the sympathetic one which would be likely to be made.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is not before the committee.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to make a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. The point of order that I make is that this paragraph stands just as though it were in conformity with law; nothing beyond that. This proposition proposes to amend that law.

Mr. REED. Proposes to do what?

Mr. HOLMAN. Proposes to go beyond the provision itself.

Mr. REED. Not at all.

Mr. HOLMAN. It declares that no salary shall be reduced.

Mr. REED. It simply provides that no salary shall be hereby decreased. That is in accordance with the law.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is not in accordance with this law. It is legislation. It is a provision to enlarge the law as it stands, and proposes to incorporate that in this bill. The fact that this provision is in the bill, and is there properly, does not authorize further legislation upon the subject.

Mr. REED. Certainly it does.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the gentleman from Maine will withdraw his amendment at this time and offer it at the end of the bill.

Mr. REED. I would rather try it on this section, because I do not know how it would work on the rest of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Maine is in order, and overrules the point of order.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the section read as it would be with the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Maine.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assistant postmaster, salary not exceeding 50 per cent. of the salary of the postmaster, as provided by act of March 3, 1883, graded in even hundreds of dollars, from $1,500 to not exceeding $3,000 per annum, except New York, N. Y., where the salary of the assistant postmaster shall be fixed at $3,000 per annum, and that of the second assistant postmaster at $2,000 per annum: Provided, That no salary shall be hereby decreased.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment: Provided further, That no salary shall be increased.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is right.

Mr. KERR. I make the point of order against the amendment that it is inconsistent with the action of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. KERR. The point of order is this: That the House has determined what the salaries shall be by the adoption of the proposition before the committee; and the amendment is not in order, because it changes the action of the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that the matter is now before the House on its merits, and that there is a pending proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order of the gentleman from Iowa rests upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois. Does the gentleman from Georgia desire to be heard on that point of order?

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not desire to be heard upon the point of order.

Mr. KERR. The House has fixed the salaries, and therefore the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois is not in order, as it would be inconsistent with the action of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order, because, however absurd an amendment may be, it is for the House to decide the matter, and not for the Chair.

Mr. CANNON. I do not think it is absurd, for the reason that if it is competent to provide that the salaries shall not be decreased, it is certainly equally competent to provide that they shall not be increased.

Mr. BLOUNT. The proposition is a proviso to the section as it now stands—that it shall decrease any salaries.

Mr. REED. I would like the attention of the House for a moment to this matter, because it is a business proposition. This classification which we now have proposes to limit the salaries of the assistant postmasters, who are, practically, the managing men in the offices, to 50 per cent. of the salaries of the postmasters.

Now, the salary of the postmaster depends largely if not wholly upon the actual cash receipts of the office. Those cash receipts have their origin mainly in the sale of stamps, and that would be a very fair basis on which to grade both the salary of the postmaster and of his manager were it not for the fact that in some offices the work is peculiar and is increased out of proportion to the receipts which are evidenced by the sale of postage-stamps. As I remarked to the committee the other day, the post-offices in Portland and Augusta, Me., are flooded, I might say, with a kind of work which has its origin in the operations of several firms who in the course of their business receive large amounts of postage-stamps and are consequently sellers of stamps rather than purchasers. Therefore, to limit the salary of the assistant postmaster or manager of the Portland or of the Augusta post-office in proportion to the actual cash receipts would be grossly unjust. Hence, the effect of this bill is to reduce the salary of the assistant postmaster at Portland below what is given him by the Postmaster-General, which salary, fixed by the Postmaster-General, has been fixed in view of all the facts. I desire, therefore, that this classification, if adopted, shall not involve the payment of a less salary than fairly belongs to the assistant postmaster at Portland. I know gentlemen say that we can get men to fill this place or that place or the other place at a smaller salary than is now paid. It is true that we can get men to occupy the places, but it is very difficult to get men to fill many of them even with the salaries that are now paid, and any one who knows the business of some of these offices knows perfectly well that the proper men to fill them will have to be paid a fair compensation or else the service will suffer.

Mr. WISE. Can the gentleman state what is the salary now fixed by the Postmaster-General for the assistant postmaster at Portland?

Mr. REED. I think it is fixed at $1,600, which is a very reasonable salary for a man who has to do the amount of work that he has to do.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Mr. Chairman, in the line of the remarks of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] I want to call attention to the effect of his amendment, which I regard as a very proper one. In the Buffalo post-office the salary of the postmaster is $3,800 a year. The present salary of the assistant postmaster there is $2,200 a year. The gross receipts of the office are $381,000. Now, under this new classification the assistant postmaster at Buffalo would have $400 taken from his salary, and would receive only $1,900 a year; so that that office, the eleventh office in rank in the United States, would have the compensation of its officers reduced in this way. As it is now arranged the assistant postmaster is the custodian, or cashier, and is in charge of all the money in that office. He is under a sufficient bond to cover the responsibility, and the office has no "cashier" or "first clerk." As to efficiency, the most efficient officer in the Buffalo post-office would have $400 a year taken off his salary by this bill.

In speaking with the honorable chairman of the committee a day or two ago, he said that even if the assistant postmaster's salary was cut down $400 it was due to the Buffalo post-office that it should have a cashier. If that office should have a cashier, it certainly could not pay him less than $1,500 a year; so that under this classification, cutting down $400 from the salary of the assistant postmaster and paying a cashier, the United States, in order to secure like service to that which it receives now, would have to pay $1,100 more than it now pays.

Mr. BINGHAM. Not necessarily.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Yes, sir; necessarily.

Mr. BINGHAM. They could make the assistant postmaster the cashier.

Mr. FARQUHAR. The gentleman from Pennsylvania suggests that they can make the assistant postmaster the cashier also.

Mr. BINGHAM. I mean that they can call him "cashier" and not "assistant postmaster."

Mr. FARQUHAR. Then there would be no "assistant postmaster" at all in the office.

Mr. BINGHAM. No.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Well, if that could be regulated by your bill I would have no objection to it, but when the proposition is made by the Post-Office Committee that an office like that at Buffalo shall be made inefficient in order that they may secure a certain classification, I, as the Representative from that district, feel bound to see to it, so far as I can, that the efficiency of that office is not impaired by any classification. I am quite willing that this system of classification shall apply to the clerical service, but when you touch the efficient working, managing power of the post-office, as I know that the assistant postmaster at Buffalo is, you are impairing the efficiency of the service.

Mr. RICE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a statement in relation to the post-offices at St. Paul and Minneapolis, in my district, as they would be affected by this paragraph. The postmasters at each of those places now receive $3,700 a year salary. Each assistant postmaster receives $2,400 a year. The one at Minneapolis has been in office twenty-seven years. He has grown up with the office. The one at St. Paul has been in office nineteen years, and the business of those two great offices mainly depends upon those two assistant postmasters. The disbursements of the St. Paul office during the last calendar year exceeded $5,000,000 and the disbursements of the Minneapolis office were perhaps a little less. I state these facts to show the very great importance of these two growing offices and to show that if the salaries of these assistant postmasters are reduced, as they would be by this paragraph, to $1,800 a year, a reduction of $600 apiece, the service must suffer in consequence. It is all they can do now to run those offices, working from twelve to eighteen hours a day, not excluding Sundays. They are overworked now, and it would be a great hardship to them and a retrogressive step to reduce their salaries from $2,400 to $1,800 a year. It would be an injustice to them and an injury to the service against which I feel bound to protest.

Mr. ADAMS. If the amendment of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] will have the effect which he evidently thinks it will have, I am in favor of it. There is, however, a question in my mind whether it will have that effect. The salary of the assistant postmaster at Chicago has been until within a few months $3,400. It has been reduced within the present year to $3,200. This bill would reduce it to $3,000, being one-half of the amount which the postmaster receives—$6,000. The postmaster at that place gets the same salary received by the postmasters in certain other large cities, although the total business of the office is greater by nearly 50 per cent. than at most of those offices. In New York the total business is about $4,800,000 per annum; in Chicago it is $2,400,000 per annum; in Philadelphia, $1,800,000; in Boston, $1,700,000; in St. Louis, about $900,000; and in Cincinnati, $684,000. Yet all these postmasters at these different cities, except New York, receive $6,000 and no more, the reason being that when you passed in 1882 the bill fixing the salaries of postmasters you made those salaries depend upon the total business, and you did not take into account in the total business any excess over $600,000. What the business at Chicago was at that time I do not know, but if it was $600,000 then, it has since risen to $2,400,000. For the same reason which prompted the gentleman from Georgia an hour ago to raise the salary of the assistant postmaster at New York from $3,000 to $3,500, I should desire to have the salary of the assistant postmaster at Chicago fixed at the amount which he is now receiving—not the sum which he has been receiving for a series of years, but the $3,200 which he is receiving now. If the amendment of the gentleman from Maine would have that effect, I should be satisfied with it. But will it? The provision is, "No salaries shall be hereby decreased." Is there a "salary" for the assistant postmaster? The "salary" which the gentleman has in his mind is the sum which the officer is now receiving. Will that be the construction adopted by the Department or by the courts, if the case should go to the courts? The question is whether the sum which was allowed by the Postmaster-General last year is the "salary" contemplated by the provision.

Mr. REED. My idea is that this provision will simply allow the Post-Office Department the same discretion that it has had hitherto, and that is all I ask. If at any time the Post-Office Department should think that the salary at the Portland office ought to be decreased below the sum at present fixed, I have no objection.

Mr. ADAMS. Do you mean the salary of the postmaster, or that of the assistant postmaster?

Mr. REED. The salary of the assistant postmaster.

Mr. ADAMS. How is it now fixed?

Mr. REED. It is fixed by the Post-Office Department, and I am perfectly willing that it shall continue to be so fixed.

Mr. ADAMS. So am I.

Mr. REED. This bill provides that the salary of the assistant postmaster may be fixed by the Department, but shall not in any case exceed 50 per cent. of that of the postmaster. My amendment provides that this limitation shall be flexible to this extent, that it shall not be allowed to lower the salaries now paid.

Mr. ADAMS. Below what point? Below the amount that is now received?

Mr. REED. My object is that the Department shall not be forced to lower the salaries, if it does not deem it proper to do so.

Mr. ADAMS. But here is the state of the law: In 1882 we passed a statute fixing the salaries of the postmasters. Now, have these other officials "salaries" within the contemplation of law?

Mr. REED. I think they certainly have.

Mr. ADAMS. I mean will it be so construed under the provision which we propose to insert in this bill?

Mr. REED. I have no doubt of it; the language will have to be construed to mean something, and what else can it mean?

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, in fixing the salaries of the postmasters of the country, the rule has been adopted of regulating those salaries with reference to the gross revenues of the office. For instance, it is provided that first-class offices shall consist of those having gross receipts from $40,000 to not exceeding $600,000. Where the gross receipts are $40,000 and not exceeding $45,000 the salary is $3,000. I will not take up time in reading these provisions in detail; but those to which I have just referred illustrate the manner in which salaries in the first, second, and third class offices are fixed.

Is there any better basis? Has there been any better basis proposed? Can you imagine any better rule for determining the salaries of postmasters in this country than by seeing what their business is and determining that business by the amount of the gross receipts? We have been content for a long period to ascertain in that way the salary of every postmaster in these United States who is paid a salary at all. If it will answer for the adjustment of the salaries of postmasters of the country, I ask, when you come to assistant postmasters why may you not adopt the same rule in reference to them? If it is reasonable as to the chief official it is certainly reasonable as to the chief clerk or the assistant postmaster.

If you adopt that rule in reference to the post-offices of the country you will find that the very same inexactness in the result which the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] complains of applies to other postmasters. You can not get any rule which works an exact mathematical equality.

What was done in relation to assistant postmasters? Some clerks were being paid too low, and when I use the word "clerk" I use it in reference to assistant postmasters as well as others. The rosters were taken throughout the country, the maximum and the minimum salaries were taken, and an adjustment between those lines had to be regulated by something. You would not give an assistant postmaster where the gross receipts were $40,000 as much as you would give to an assistant postmaster at an office where the gross receipts were $600,000. There must be some regulation, of course, as between $40,000 and $600,000. The revenue was taken as a basis. On an examination of these salaries, with this basis adjusted in this way the calculation was made in reference to the various offices of the country. You have the result in the tabulated statement found in the committee's report on page 15, which changes these salaries simply by causing them to relate to revenue, in some cases increasing and in some decreasing them.

While there may be some inapt result, it is far better to have some system of adjustment instead of leaving these assistant postmasters of the United States to be determined by some clerk in the Post-Office Department who is besieged by importunity, one person having dominating influence and the other having none.

Mr. WEBER. Is it not a fact that the postmasters fix the salary of the assistant postmasters?

Mr. BLOUNT. No, sir.

I wish to say there ought to be some influence somewhere restraining the discretion of the Department in this matter. I have never seen any head of that Department, Republican or Democrat, who did not feel the necessity of it. The Congress of the United States provided a rule, as follows:

SEC. 460. The Postmaster-General may allow to the postmaster at New York City and to the postmasters at offices of the first and second classes, out of the surplus revenue of their respective offices, that is to say, the excess of box-rents and commissions over and above the salary assigned to the office, a reasonable sum for the necessary cost of rent, fuel, lights, furniture, stationery, printing, clerks, and necessary incidentals, to be adjusted on a satisfactory exhibit of the facts; and no such allowance shall be made except upon the order of the Postmaster-General.

While unintentionally that statute has been repealed the Department has been using it as a basis upon which to adjust salaries. I take it, no matter what political complexion the Postmaster-General may be, there should be some rule to bring about equality in these offices throughout the country. In the office of my friend from Maine I take his statement as true. In that particular case it may be the fact, but I think the gentleman will find in reference to other clerks the salaries will be increased.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois, was recognized and yielded his time to Mr. BLOUNT.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman representing the Buffalo district has stated that the salary of the assistant postmaster there was reduced by the operation of this rule. That is true; but if the gentleman will look further he will find that the salaries of several persons there are increased, should the bill become a law, by the operation of this rule. He will find that the aggregate result of this legislation is to increase the amount recommended for clerical hire there, and that is the general result as to all places in this country. It is too apt to be true that the leading clerk in an office gets his unequal share of a fund set apart for the office, while men of less influence have their allowance cut down with a view of building his up.

Now, if the classification shall make some such changes in regard to individual instances, but in its general results adds not only to the clerical force but to the efficiency of the offices throughout the country, I do not believe that my friend from the Buffalo district, or the gentleman from Maine would be willing to destroy the bill where its general operations were advantageous not only to their localities, but to all localities instead of to some particular individual. In the operation of the law, if some individual may incidentally have his salary reduced, the general result is beneficial to all and to the service.

Mr. FARQUHAR. If the gentleman will allow me a word, I only wish to say that in the remarks I made I called attention to the fact that the official in the Buffalo post-office to whom I referred is one of the most efficient officers in the service. And I want to call attention to another fact which has been incidentally mentioned by the gentleman from Georgia, and that is that the Buffalo post-office, when you take the figures of $380,000 of gross receipts, is not credited for at least 30 per cent. of the work of our great transfer there of mails into the Canadian and Western country. It does not form a part of the $380,000, and that is why, when the amendment of the gentleman from Maine was proposed, I believed it would have the effect of saving an efficient officer, and favored it. I desire to keep the salaty of this official where it is.

I grant you that the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia are correct as far as the general efficiency of the service is concerned, and I have no objection whatever to make to that, and I hope no one else on the floor will; but I think it important and proper that an efficient officer doing a large share of work should not have his salary cut down needlessly.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. DOCKERY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 139) to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and to the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by act of Congress approved August 5, 1861.

It also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2091) granting a pension to Frances H. Plummer.

It further announced that the Senate had concurred in the resolution of the House for printing and binding 10,000 additional copies of the third annual report of the Commissioner of Labor for the use of the Department of Labor.

It also stated that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 7718) for the relief of Milo McCrillis.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. 8557) for the relief of Dr. David Bell.

It stated also that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which concurrence was requested:

A bill (S. 2766) for the relief of Maj. James Belger;

A bill (S. 3818) for the establishment of a light-house and fog-signal at Old Orchard Shoal, in Princess Bay, New York, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 3920) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Muscogee (or Creek) Nation of Indians, in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. WILKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I am unwilling to see the salary of any good and competent official reduced. The Government of the United States needs in the Post-Office service good and competent men, and to obtain such men it is necessary to pay fair and suitable salaries. This provision making the pay of the assistant postmasters 50 per cent. that of the postmasters would in the city of New Orleans cut down the pay of the official, the assistant postmaster, from $2,400 to $1,800, and as long as I am on this floor I shall protest against any such reduction. Hence I support the amendment of the gentleman from Maine.

The salary of the postmaster at the city of New Orleans is based, as the other salaries are, on the gross receipts from the sale of stamps, and now, Mr. Chairman, at this point it should be remembered that this is hardly a fair criterion. New Orleans is the great distributing center of the mails to South America and Mexico. The handling of these mails and the labor entailed in their transmission does not add 1 cent to the gross receipts of the office there, while it adds a great deal to the cost of carrying on the business of the office. The postmaster of that city is not paid adequately for the importance and the amount of the work that he performs, and, as I said before, I shall resist any reduction of this or any other official in the public service who is now paid no more than he deserves.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, the general principle which the gentleman from Georgia has enunciated to the committee and the ease with which it can be applied would be very effective if it were not for the trouble that wherever it is applied to the detriment of the efficiency of the office the people feel it just as much as if the general principle were not actually in use. Personally I am very confident that the reduction of this salary in my own city will result in less efficient service, and I care more for that than I do for any relief that can be given to the Postmaster-General.

The committee themselves have recognized this fact in the very proposition which they bring in. If the general principle is so delightful to contemplate, why should it not apply also in New York? Why should an exception be made of this city and their assistant postmaster and second assistant postmaster, who are kept at the same price? Surely the principle ought to apply to New York as well as to Portland, Me. If the principle is a good thing, the more you spread it the better.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman allow me there?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. BLOUNT. The bill simply follows the present exception as to the New York office that has been the practice for many years, the service there being of an exceptional character. It has always been treated so.

Mr. REED. The service, as I have tried to point out, is of an exceptional character, and that is the reason why I want to make an exceptional arrangement. Now, mark the cogent result of that fact. The fact is, the Postmaster-General, having the right, fixed the compensation of these men, and having the information necessary to enable him to fix it, has fixed it at rates below which the committee tried to give. Now, is that just or right? He says there will be importunities in regard to particular individuals. These importunities will be well counterbalanced by importunities in other directions, for the amount appropriated being limited he can not make an increase in one place without making a decrease in others. It would seem that we ought to have originally passed an increased amount, but failing in that we at least ought to pass that which permits the salary to remain at what the Postmaster-General, the most competent judge on the subject, has already fixed it.

Mr. ENLOE. I only want to say in reference to this matter that I am very much inclined to favor the amendment of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] if it is also to be amended by the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. That, as I understand it, cuts this section or paragraph of the bill off at both ends and renders it of no effect, for it is equivalent to striking out that paragraph of the bill. I think the discussion here has developed a fact which it seems to me will be developed all the way through in the discussion of this matter, and that is that there are such peculiar conditions surrounding the service of the different offices of the country as they will be presented by the different members of Congress here that this classification ought to rest where it does to-day, with the Postmaster-General. He is the party who has the information and can regulate these matters, not strictly in accordance with the receipts of the office, but according to the nature of the service to be performed and the value of those services. But, Mr. Chairman, I want to take this occasion to say that I am opposed to the entire classification business. I am opposed to this increase of $600,000 proposed in this bill. I would vote, if I had an opportunity, to strike it out entirely, and pass the appropriation bill as it has been passed heretofore, without that provision in it. I think the discussion on this paragraph demonstrates that gentlemen are willing to accept this classification where it will increase the salaries of assistant postmasters in their districts, but that where it will reduce salaries it is not acceptable to the Representatives. I am opposed to the principle of increasing salaries, am opposed to this entire classification as proposed, and would be quite willing to see it stricken out of the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. I have restrained any desire that I might have had to discuss the propositions that are now before the House with a view to expediting the consideration of this bill and reach a conclusion. It does seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that the discussion has spread and proceeded to a length that the House is fully ready to pass upon the question, and I am anxious that it shall. The proposition before the House is simply this: The section of the bill limits the discretion of the Postmaster-General to fix the salaries of the assistant postmasters to a point not exceeding 50 per cent. The gentleman from Maine further proposes to restrict that discretion by providing that the salaries shall in no case be reduced, and the gentleman from Illinois offers a further amendment, which is very plausible, that the salaries shall in no case be increased. I think the committee understands the question, and if they are ready to adopt both amendments the result will be that we will have the present law.

Mr. REED. We will not adopt but one of them.

Mr. CANNON. I want to say a word about my amendment. Under the law as it now is the Postmaster-General is given the discretion from year to year and from month to month to make such allowance for clerk-hire as the demands of the service may require. In a country like ours, that has increased in thirty years 30,000,000 of people, it is very desirable that that power should be given to him and remain in him, and I can prove that by this proposition in this bill and the amendment to it. What is the proposition? To limit that discretion so that the salaries shall not exceed so much. The gentleman from Maine and various other gentlemen, from Minnesota, in rapidly-growing towns where business is more lively than other places, say "The bill is all right, but I want an amendment, that it shall not cut down my man; he has not got too much."

I sympathize with them. They are right. But, then, I come to my amendment, and say that if it is just in enacting this law in providing that it shall be nullified where it cuts down the salaries, then I want to take the other step with my amendment and say that it shall be nullified where it increases the salary. Where does that leave you? It leaves you back where the law now is, and where it ought to be; and, therefore, I shall insist upon the adoption of my amendment at least.

Mr. LIND. There has been thus far a great deal of discussion in regard to the effect of this bill on first and second class offices, but the committee should not forget that the appropriation that was determined on a while ago also includes all the clerk-hire that will be provided for the compensation of clerks in third-class offices where any clerks are allowed. Now, I am not prepared to say that this proposed classification is just; I am not prepared to say that it is the best that could be made; but I will say this, and I believe I am justified in making the statement, that we have got either to accept this classification as it is without amendment or we have to abandon it entirely. If the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] should carry, so that no salary could be reduced under any circumstances, then, many salaries being necessarily increased by the bill and there being only a certain amount of money for the Postmaster-General to dispose of, the result would be that the salaries of employés in first and second class offices would in all probability consume 95 per cent. of the appropriation, and the third-class offices having clerks would have to go without any compensation for them. So, without going into any lengthy explanation, I repeat that we have got either to stand by this bill and take it with its defects and its hardships, if it carries any, or else abandon the whole thing.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] says that he is opposed to this bill because he thinks the existing system is a better one, and he says that with all the emphasis of his emphatic nature. But, while the gentleman is so earnest in his opposition the committee should remember that for more than ten years past the distinguished men who have been at the head of the Post-Office Department, Mr. Howe, Mr. Hatton, Mr. Vilas—all these gentlemen, without any division of opinion, have taken a view quite different from that taken by the gentleman from Illinois. The press of the country, too, has taken a different view, and therefore I trust that the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads have at least as much reason for the opinion they entertain in relation to this matter as the gentleman from Illinois has for his opinion. The salaries of postmasters vary with the gross receipts. They are adjusted from time to time, and the salaries of these officials may be readjusted by being put into different classifications with reference to receipts; so that there is elasticity all along the line.

The general results that have been sought by the various recommendations in the reports of the Postmaster-General, and which have been especially urged by the President of the United States in his late message to the Congress of the United States, are reached by this bill. I trust, therefore, that this committee will think it is as reasonable to fix the salaries of clerks in post-offices as it is to fix the salaries of postal clerks, or of letter-carriers, or of clerks in the several Departments of this Government, and to fix them by law, rather than to leave them to be determined by a single person in the Post-Office Department, without rule, just as he pleases. If at some particular locality some person has influence, he gets his increase, and the money for it is taken from some section where they have no such influence. I am opposed to any principle that puts citizens on an unequal footing in this regard. If this proposed classification obtains, it regulates the allowance in Maine, it regulates the allowance in Texas, it regulates the allowance in Pennsylvania, it regulates the allowance in Oregon, it regulates it everywhere by rule, and I submit, sir, that that is far better than for a member of Congress to have to go to a clerk in the Post-Office Department and beg him to make a particular allowance for a particular postmaster. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Tennessee seems to be dissatisfied with the general system of classification. I do not know how much he has studied it, and do not know whether he has read the recommendations of previous Postmasters-General. I know why the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is opposed to this portion of the bill. His amendment was not adopted, and therefore every point of order that is made upon the bill should be sustained, and every argument against it should be sustained. Every word said against the bill must be correct because our friend's amendment was not adopted.

Mr. CANNON. You propose legislation and yet refuse money to carry it out; therefore I am against the legislation.

Mr. COX. I am not debating that; that is a foregone matter. The question now is whether this classification system is not valuable and worth sustaining now that it is before us.

I have not a doubt that these clerks in our post-offices are overworked and inadequately paid. A former Postmaster-General, Mr. Howe—than whom a better Postmaster never held office—declared, summing up the results of his experience in this matter—

First. That the efforts of the Department to equitably distribute the allowances have been unsuccessful.
Second. That the distribution of the allowances has resulted disastrously to the clerks and detrimentally to the service.
Third. That post-office clerks, as a rule, are overworked and underpaid.
Fourth. That the element of chance as to the salaries of clerks, dependent upon the importunities of postmasters, should be removed.
Fifth. That the present system of allowances is a total failure.
Sixth. The immediate necessity on the part of Congress to take legislative action, both on account of the interests of the public service and for the welfare of the clerk.

These statements embody the experience of Postmaster-General Howe during the time he held office. It is clearly established that these post-office clerks, in view of the labor, the inordinate labor, that they perform in all the very large offices of the country, are very poorly paid. We have passed bills providing as the average rate of work eight hours per diem. Ten hours' work by a competent clerk ought to be well paid for. Yet what do we find to be the hours of labor of these various clerks? I submit a statement showing the number of working hours per day in various sections of the country:

Brooklyn, N. Y., ten to twelve hours (until the work is up).
Bridgeport, Conn., twelve hours.
Boston, Mass., eight and one-half to thirteen hours (until the work is up).
Charleston, S. C., 5 a. m. to 7 p. m. (time for meals).
Cleveland, Ohio, eight to twelve hours.
Erie, Pa., twelve hours.
Hartford, Conn., nine to ten hours.
Jersey City, N. J., nine to eleven hours.
Minneapolis, Minn., ten to fourteen hours.
Newark, N. J., nine to ten and one-half hours.
New Bedford, Mass., nine to ten hours.
New York City, N. Y., eight to ten hours.
Philadelphia, Pa., nine to twelve hours (until the work is up).
Portland, Me., 5 a. m. to 10 p. m., with intermissions, making nine hours.
Rochester, N. Y., eight to twelve hours.
Springfield, Mass., twelve hours.
Worcester, Mass., twelve hours.

These are the usual hours of labor, and may be increased at any time by reason of unusually heavy mails or delay in arrival of trains. This statement shows that these clerks work far beyond the ordinary hours of labor. If I had time I could dwell upon the very onerous and exhausting nature of the work which they are compelled to perform—the wear and tear upon their memory and their physical powers—the stamping, the distribution and the sending out of mails, all this mass of labor, almost intolerable to contemplate and worse to perform. I hope that the House will not go back on the experience of these various postmasters and Postmasters-General because the amendment of my friend from Illinois failed to receive the vote of this Committee of the Whole.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman from New York withdraws his pro forma amendment.

Mr. COX. Yes, sir.

Mr. REED. I understand the gentleman from New York to be in favor of the amendment which I have proposed.

Mr. COX. I am speaking generally.

Mr. REED. Well, I so understand the gentleman.

Mr. COX. No, I did not say that.

Mr. REED. I want to understand the real point of the gentleman's remarks. He has just closed by saying that we ought not to cast aside the experiencelof the postmasters and Postmasters-General. That is precisely what g am arguing for. I propose that the committee shall not, by adoptin an arbitrary 50 per cent. limitation, prevent the payment of a larger salary where the propriety of a larger salary is suggested by the experience of the postmasters and the Postmasters-General.

Mr. COX. I understand the gentleman.

Mr. REED. I am quite sure the gentleman from New York will follow the logic of his remarks and help me to rectify what seems to be an accidental oversight on the part of the committee.

Mr. COX. I do not want to make a law for every postmaster in the country. I have sought to answer the objurgatory remarks in regard to this classification system. I was trying to answer the gentleman from Tennessee and my friend from Illinois. I am not disputing now with the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. REED. The general principle which the gentleman from New York has laid down shows that he is not disputing with me. I want him to go one step further——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order except by unanimous consent. All debate upon the pending amendment has been exhausted.

Mr. KERR. I move to amend by striking out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. That would be an amendment in the third degree and is not in order now, as there are two amendments pending. The first question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That no salary shall be hereby increased.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected; there being—ayes 16, noes 46.

The question then recurred on the amendment of Mr. REED; which was read, as follows:

Provided, That no salary shall be hereby decreased.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected; there being—ayes 32, noes 52.

Mr. ENLOE. I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. KERR. That is the motion I desired to make.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. ENLOE to strike out the pending paragraph, there were, on a division (called for by Mr. REED)—ayes 29, noes 53.

Mr. KERR. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum being made, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. BLOUNT. It is quite evident that there is no quorum now in the Hall. It is Saturday evening, and I think no progress will be made on this bill by sitting longer now. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MCMILLIN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12490) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and had come to no resolution thereon.

And then, on motion of Mr. KILGORE (at 4 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. CRAIN: A bill (H. R. 12604) to restore the pension of Ann G. Barker—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DE LANO: A bill (H. R. 12605) granting a pension to Abbie D. Johnson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12606) granting a pension to Alfred A. Lord—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GEST: A bill (H. R. 12607) to grant a pension to Ira Wells—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HERMANN: A bill (H. R. 12608) to pension William J. Martin—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SPRINGER: A bill (H. R. 12609) for the relief of John A. McClernand—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12610) for the relief of John M. Palmer—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MONTGOMERY: A bill (H. R. 12611) to grant a pension to Moses Stone—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. DORSEY: Memorial of citizens of McCook, Nebr., for opening up Indian Territory and No Man's Land—to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. ERMENTROUT: Petition of Typographical Union No. 86, of Reading, Pa., favoring the passage of the Chace-Breckinridge copyright bill—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. GEST: Proof on the pension bill of Ira Wells—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GROSVENOR: Memorial of New Matamoras Post, No. 666, and of Charles Beman Gates Post, No. 452, Grand Army of the Republic, of Ohio, for liberal appropriations for publication of war records—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. D. B. HENDERSON: Petition of citizens of Cascade, Iowa, asking for pension legislation before the revenue is otherwise reduced—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOWARD: Medical evidence in the claim of Sarah E. McClure—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JOSEPH: Petition of citizens of Old Albuquerque, N. Mex., denouncing a certain petition recently sent from that city—to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. MCCORMICK: Petition of C. A. Gorrie and other citizens of Wellsborough, Pa., against the adulteration of food and liquors—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. MORRILL: Concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of Kansas, relating to the removal of the Prairie band of Pottawatomie Indians from Kansas—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. ROGERS: Memorial of the convention at Fort Smith, Ark., in relation to the Indian Territory—to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. TOOLE: Memorial of the Legislative Assembly of Montana Territory, in relation to the Fort Ellis military reservation—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, petition of Hon. Lee Mantle, speaker of the house of representatives of Montana Territory, in relation to the same—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

The following petitions for a national Sunday-rest law were received and severally referred to the Committee on Labor:

By Mr. BREWER: Of 694 citizens of Michigan.

By Mr. BRYCE: Of 2,968 citizens of New York.

By Mr. J. E. CAMPBELL: Of 687 citizens of Ohio.

By Mr. HITT: Of 269 citizens of Edinburgh, Ill.

By Mr. HUNTER: Of citizens of sundry towns in Kentucky.

By Mr. MATSON: Of 1,255 citizens of Indiana.

By Mr. MILLIKEN (by request): Of John Collins and other citizens of Maine.

By Mr. YOST: Of 297 citizens of Staunton, Va.

The following petitions, praying for a constitutional amendment prohibiting the manufacture, importation, exportation, transportation, and sale of all alcoholic liquors as a beverage, were received and severally referred to the Select Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic:

By Mr. CASWELL: Of 69 citizens of Clinton, Wis.

By Mr. DORSEY: Of 24 citizens of Glenville; of 48 citizens of Red Cloud, and of 108 citizens of Wakefield and Concord, Nebr.

By Mr. FELTON: Of 113 citizens of Gilroy, Colo.

By Mr. GIFFORD: Of 27 citizens of Ripon; of 88 citizens of Canton; of 26 citizens of Templeton; of 48 citizens of Copp and Lebanon, Dak.

By Mr. HIRES: Of 28 citizens of Roodstown, and of 28 citizens of Dennisville, N. J.

By Mr. A. J. HOPKINS: Of 24 citizens of Big Foot, Ill.

By Mr. MCADOO: Of 108 citizens of Jersey City, and of 55 citizens of Bayonne, N. J.

By Mr. ROCKWELL: Of 63 citizens of Chicopee, Mass.

By Mr. J. E. RUSSELL: Of 32 citizens of Auburn, and of 54 citizens of East Brookfield, Mass.

By Mr. E. B. TAYLOR: Of 90 citizens of Kinsman, Ohio.

By Mr. E. J. TURNER: Of 47 citizens of Burr Oak, Kans.

By Mr. VANDEVER: Of 68 citizens of Tustin City, Cal.

By Mr. VOORHEES: Of 247 citizens of Spokane, of 31 citizens of Buckeye Run, of 52 citizens of Ellensburgh, of 18 citizens of Whidby's Island, of 19 citizens of Seattle, of 49 citizens of Columbus, of 55 citizens of Elberton, of 44 citizens of Blaine and Luniahwoo, of 71 citizens of Asotin, and of 130 citizens of Cheney, Washington Territory.

SENATE.

MONDAY, February 18, 1889.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

FORT OMAHA, NEBRASKA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in reply to a resolution of the 8th instant, certain information in regard to the relocation of Fort Omaha, Nebraska, and disapproving the purchase of 900 acres of land south of Omaha, recommended as a site for the relocation of such fort; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that all the papers accompanying the communication may be printed, if the order has not been made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order was made.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

COURT OF CLAIMS REPORT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting the conclusion of facts and law filed by the Court of Claims in a certain French spoliation claim; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

PENNSYLVANIA BOUNDARY LINE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from Charles W. Stone, secretary of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, transmitting, by direction of the governor of Pennsylvania, a certified copy of "An act to confirm the boundary lines between this Commonwealth and the States of New York, Ohio, and West Virginia, as resurveyed by the joint commissions appointed for that purpose, and to ratify and confirm the agreement entered into by commissioners on the part of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the State of New York in relation to the boundary line between said States," approved the 6th day of June, A. D. 1887; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 12384) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of Kansas, favoring an appropriation for deep-water harbors on the coast of Texas; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a concurrent joint memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Montana, favoring the free and untrammeled introduction of foreign capital for the purpose of the further development of the mining industry in that Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented the petition of Frank Gilbert and 45 others (20 voters and 26 women), citizens of Burr Oak, Kans., praying for the submission to the States of a constitutional prohibitory amendment; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of 124 citizens of the State of Kansas, praying for the passage of a Sunday-rest law; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

RETURN OF DIRECT TAXES.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, on Saturday afternoon I was absent from the Senate at the time when the report of the conferees of the House of Representatives and the Senate on the direct-tax bill was taken up and disposed of. I wish to enter a motion to reconsider the vote of the Senate by which that report was adopted.

I take it for granted that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], who seems to have had charge of the conference report, will submit the ordinary motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table. Unless some other Senator proposes to make that motion I will let the matter lie over until the Senator from Tennessee comes in.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] had charge of the report.

Mr. SHERMAN. What is the motion?

Mr. VEST. The motion is to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference on the direct-tax bill was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. SHERMAN. I could hardly ask the Senator from Missouri how he voted. I do not want to make that point.

Mr. VEST. I was not here, but I believe the custom of the Senate is to allow the motion to be made by any one under such circumstances.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not intend to raise that point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. When a vote is not taken by yeas and nays it is not customary to inquire how the Senator voted who makes a motion to reconsider.

Mr. VEST. That is my information.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have the motion acted upon immediately, and am ready to make an explanation. If there can be action upon the motion now I should be very glad to have it seconded.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to raise that point, and my reason for doing it is not because I have the slightest doubt of the right of the Senator from Missouri to make the motion now. As I understand, unless there is a record by yeas and nays, it is the universal custom of the Senate, as the Chair has said, to permit any Senator to make a motion to reconsider, and I only raise the point for consideration because in regard to this very matter the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] made this remark in regard to this very report on Saturday:

> But as I was not present at the time I have no right to move a reconsideration.

I think, therefore, there is so much of a divergence of opinion on the question that the ruling of the Chair should be given, and I respectfully ask the ruling of the Chair as to the right of the Senator from Missouri to make the motion.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire to speak to the point of order?

Mr. CULLOM. No, sir; not to the question of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question of order being raised by the Senator from Massachusetts, the Chair states that it has been the uniform practice and custom in the Senate during the time that the Presiding Officer has served, now sixteen years, when no record of the final vote upon a question was taken by yeas and nays, to allow any Senator to enter a motion to reconsider.

Mr. CULLOM. I simply desired to inquire of the Senator from Missouri whether he would delay making the motion until after reports of committees, etc., are made, as the motion will probably, if it is taken up to be disposed of, elicit a good deal of discussion.

Mr. VEST. As a matter of course I will yield for morning business. I will state very frankly to the Senator from Ohio that my object is to give my reasons for opposing the direct-tax bill, and I took this method by which to do it.

Mr. SHERMAN. All I want is to get the action of the Senate now upon the question. It is an important bill involving a very large sum of money, and if there are objections to it they should be stated and we should have a fair vote. All I want is to have action now, because Senators can see that to put it over a few days is a defeat of the bill; and if it can not get a large majority in the Senate I do not want to see it passed.

Mr. VEST. I do not make the motion for any dilatory purpose whatever.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will pardon the Chair one moment. The bill having gone to the House of Representatives, the motion to reconsider should be accompanied by a request to the House of Representatives to return the same to the Senate under the rules.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to ask whether the bill as agreed upon in conference is printed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was not ordered printed by the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. It was not ordered printed, I believe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not by the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. But it is in fact in print.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is it in print in the form in which the conferees agreed to it?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report of the committee of conference is printed in full in the RECORD.

Mr. SHERMAN. It was printed in the RECORD.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But does the RECORD show how the bill would read then consecutively?

Mr. SHERMAN. Precisely.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. SHERMAN. It does. The change from the original bill consists in one amendment, all of which is embodied in the print of the report.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then there is no need to move to print. I was not present when the matter passed, but from seeing some statement of it in a newspaper, I was very much afraid that the conferees in some aspects of the bill had gone much further than they themselves intended to go. I was very much afraid of that and I am glad the motion to reconsider has been made, so that we may have time to examine the matter. I will not make any motion to print.

Mr. SHERMAN. Perhaps it may be well now, as the matter is up on a motion to reconsider, that I should state the exact point.

I suppose the Senator from Missouri is opposed to the report on account of the main question and not in regard to the amendment. The House of Representatives attached to the bill one amendment only. There was one informal amendment and then the other amendment. There is only one amendment that involves any material question of dispute, and that proposes to appropriate about $850,000 to pay to certain citizens of South Carolina, the estimated value, according to a certain appraisement made before the war, of two parishes, or what we would call townships of land in that State, including also the city of Beaufort. It proposes to pay the owners of this land, taken and sold under the direct-tax law, for the value of their land. They lost the title; it is divested, and is now owned by a great number of people, largely colored people. The original owners lost their right to the land, and the House of Representatives appropriated $850,000 to pay to these owners the value of the land.

This amendment was referred to the Committee on Finance, and they examined very carefully into the whole history of the matter, and became satisfied that the amount to be paid upon the principle stated in the bill was wrong; that even if it was equitable to pay to the owners of this land the value of the land, the amount of the valuation was excessive; and we reduced it about one-half. We also corrected some provisions in the bill as passed by the House which would have made double payments, and the conferees finally agreed upon a proposition to give to the owners of the land about $40,000 and to make the same rule apply to one or two cases that occurred in the State of Tennessee of a similar character.

All there was in controversy between the two Houses was whether it was right and equitable in the settlement of this great controversy to pay the owners of the land that was sold for direct taxes under the acts of 1861 and 1862, and we made a kind of compromise proposition which I believe is founded upon substantial equity. There was no legal claim for it, but we considered on the whole that it was better to appropriate the half million dollars, which is probably more than enough to pay all that is to be paid under the amendment as agreed upon, and the conferees agreed to it. I may perhaps say that it was not an entirely unanimous report, although it was on the part of the Senate unanimous. It was signed by two conferees on the part of the House, as appears from the conference report, and I think on the whole it is a pretty fair and just solution.

These lands that were taken belonged to private individuals just like all the lands in the State of South Carolina. The United States made a lodgment at Beaufort and seized upon these lands, as they had a right to do, and sold them for a proportionate payment of the share of South Carolina in the direct-tax apportionment. It was hard, it was oppressive, you might say, as a war measure, to take the private land of two townships in the State of South Carolina, sell it at a nominal price at a tax sale, and resell those lands at a subsequent sale, which was done in pursuance of our policy to settle the lands with the negroes there.

Upon the first sale for direct taxes the land was bid in, I think, at some $13,000, which was credited to the State of South Carolina, and it was subsequently resold by the United States for $455,000. So after all the money we are to pay back to the owners of this land in South Carolina is only about the sum that we received on the resale of the land.

As a matter of course the resale of the lands was not so much for the purpose of collecting the tax as it was to settle the negroes who were gathered into that part of the State, where our flag then floated alone probably in the whole State of South Carolina. The negroes gathered in there and the resale of the lands was for the purpose of giving them homes and means of occupation. It was a part of the public policy of the country.

After a careful review of the whole matter my friend from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] and myself agreed that it would be substantial justice to pay back to the owners of the land about what the Government received for it on the resale, and that is about what was done. But in order to get a distribution of the money we took one-half of the appraised value of the land for taxation, the valuation having been made by the direct-tax commissioners sent down there to collect the tax. We took one-half of their valuation of the city of Beaufort and one-half of the valuation imposed by the local authorities on the land outside the city of Beaufort as the valuation of the lands, and that money is to be refunded, amounting, as near as we can get at it, for we have not very accurate figures in regard to it, to about $400,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If this subject is to be now discussed I should like to say a word, although I think it is better to get back the bill and then we can carefully examine it.

If the Senator from Ohio is right in his historic statement I am very much surprised. I understand him to say that the lands in these one or two counties were sold to pay the United States the whole amount of the direct tax imputed to the State of South Carolina. That must be, I think, a mistake.

Mr. SHERMAN. No, I did not say that. I said they were bid in at about $13,000 and subsequently resold.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is quite another thing.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is precisely what I said.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. They were bid in for about $13,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am very glad, then, to find out that I did misunderstand the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. And they were resold afterwards for $455,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The case we now have, then, is that the United States, under the Constitution, apportioned to the State of South Carolina her proportion, according to her population, of the direct tax. The same law provided that each State might assume that tax and pay it herself and collect it by her own taxation from all her citizens in any way she thought fit. The State of Vermont did that. The State of South Carolina did not.

The tax then had to be distributed as a tax against every land-owner according to the proportion that the value of his land bore to all the lands in the State. I take it that is clear. The consequence was that just as if the State of South Carolina had raised a tax on all the lands of the State to the same amount and the citizens of these two counties did not choose to pay their tax, according to the State law that land would have been sold and was sold, in the illustration I am now making, for the payment of that tax, and it was bid off by somebody at a great deal less than its value. It was bid in by the Government, if you please, as States and counties and the District of Columbia bid in lands to pay taxes where the owners do not pay them.

Now, the thing that troubles me about this is the principle which appears to be involved in this report, that when a government, be it State or national, having assessed a lawful tax against a land-owner, and he does not pay, and the government then proceeds to sell that land and pay the tax, and it is sold for less than it is worth, that that government, State or national, is under any obligations whatever, legal or moral or equitable, in the slightest degree, to reimburse that land-owner for the value of the land that he lost by not paying his tax. That is the difficulty I have.

Now, when you come to the second branch of the proposition stated by the Senator from Ohio, it comes nearer to being an act of generosity that perhaps on discussion may turn out to be right, the owners not then being able to pay, and not intending any preceding wrong to the Government by not paying, if the United States itself bid in these lands and afterwards got more money than the amount of the tax from the sale of them, it would then be proper, or certainly generous and very likely proper, for the United States to say to the land-owner, "I have got more money out of this land than your tax was; here is the balance of this thing." But Congress has proceeded from time to time to provide for that very thing; first, that the land-owner within a certain time might apply, if the Congress had not sold the land, and redeem his lands, and if they were sold for more than the amount of the tax and the costs, etc., he might apply and obtain the proceeds from the Treasury. All that has been provided for for a great many years.

What there is remaining of this proposition of generosity for the United States to do I should be glad to have some further explanation about; but to set the precedent that whenever any sovereign power sells the land of a private citizen to pay a tax it is to be called upon for repayment, or has the right, even from generosity, to say, "I will make you good for what you lost by not paying your tax," is a proposition which is destructive of the very principle of taxation in a government. That is the only thing that troubles me. Very likely it may be all explained when we can get the papers.

Mr. PALMER. I ask unanimous consent that the morning business be informally laid aside that I may present some resolutions in accordance with notice previously given.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let us get through with this formal matter.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Just to return the papers.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to the ordinary motion to return the bill being adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the order of morning business may be informally laid aside to enable him to offer resolutions concerning the acceptance by the United States of the statue of Lewis Cass from the State of Michigan.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection except that I should like to have the order made that will get the bill and papers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order has been made.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then it is all right.

HENRY M. RECTOR.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Will the Senator from Michigan allow me to withdraw a motion to reconsider which I made a day or two ago?

Mr. PALMER. Certainly, if it will lead to no discussion.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. It will only take a moment. I made a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill (S. 314) for the relief of Henry M. Rector. As I find the bill is in proper shape, I desire to withdraw the motion by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed is withdrawn, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none, and the bill stands passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 2737) granting a pension to Anna Krumpholz;
A bill (H. R. 4203) granting a pension to the widow of Adam Shrake;
A bill (H. R. 5390) granting a pension to John Limeric;
A bill (H. R. 5398) granting a pension to Catherine Hays;
A bill (H. R. 6763) granting a pension to John Mann;
A bill (H. R. 8100) granting a pension to Anna J. Weaver;
A bill (H. R. 8225) for the relief of William S. Kellington;
A bill (H. R. 8429) granting a pension to W. W. Wilson;
A bill (H. R. 9113) granting a pension to Frank M. Martin;
A bill (H. R. 9159) granting a pension to William A. Taylor;
A bill (H. R. 10644) granting a pension to Elizabeth Peterson;
A bill (H. R. 11184) for the relief of Jessie Isherwood;
A bill (H. R. 11707) granting a pension to Gertrude Northrop;
A bill (H. R. 11984) granting a pension to Mrs. Helen Sutherland;

A bill (H. R. 12540) to increase the pension of Theodore White; and
A bill (H. R. 12542) for the relief of the heirs of Noah W. Yoder.

STATUE OF LEWIS CASS.

Mr. PALMER. In accordance with the notice that I gave January 21, I present the resolutions I send to the desk, and ask for their immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the thanks of Congress be tendered to the governor, and through him to the people of the State of Michigan, for the statue of Lewis Cass, whose name is so conspicuously connected with the development of the Northwest Territory and with eminent services to his State and country both at home and abroad.

Resolved, That the statue is accepted in the name of the nation and assigned a place in the old Hall of Representatives, and that a copy of these resolutions, signed by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, be transmitted to the governor of the State of Michigan.

Mr. PALMER. I ask for the reading of the governor's letter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.
The Chief Clerk read as follows:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE, MICHIGAN, Lansing, Mich., January 16, 1889.

DEAR SIR: I have the pleasure at this time to inform you, and through you the Senate, that in acceptance of the invitation contained in section 1814 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, a statue in marble of Lewis Cass has been made in pursuance of an act of the Legislature of this State, passed at its biennial session in 1885, and which statue is the work of the celebrated American sculptor, Mr. D. C. French, of Concord, Mass. The same has been placed in the old Hall of the House of Representatives at the Capitol of the United States, in the custody of the Architect of such Capitol.

This work is now presented to the Congress of the United States as one of the statues contributed by the State of Michigan in pursuance of the invitation aforesaid.

I write you at this time that such further action may be taken in the matter by Congress as may be deemed expedient.

Very respectfully, yours,

CYRUS G. LUCE, Governor.

Hon. JOHN J. INGALLS,
President of Senate of United States, Washington, D. C.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, in responding to the nation's invitation to the States, that each should place two statues of her illustrious men in Memorial Hall, there was a fitness that the first place should be given by a State to one, if such there be, who more than any other had been identified with her infancy, who had defended her in war, who had guided her youthful footsteps, who had laid down for her rules of conduct, who had brought order out of chaos, who, although separated from her by oceans, or called away by public duty, still clung to her as his home, and fondly looked to her soil as the dust with which his own was to at last commingle.

To-day, Mr. President, we formally accept Michigan's first contribution to the Valhalla of the nation, and it is but seemly that the reasons for her action should be recited.

Lewis Cass was born in Exeter, N. H., on the 9th day of October, 1782. He died in Detroit June 17, 1866. He was of Puritan descent, and the names of his ancestors, Cass and Gilman, are to be found creditably mentioned in early colonial history.

His father, Jonathan Cass, a type of the young patriots of 1776, enlisted at the age of nineteen, on the day after the battle of Lexington, and shared the vicissitudes of the patriot army until its disbandment in 1783, attaining the rank of captain by gallantry and faithful service. He was subsequently recommended by the Legislature of New Hampshire for appointment as the first marshal of that State under the Constitution, and was commissioned as captain in the regular Army upon its organization. He rose to the rank of major, and resigned in 1799, when he settled on the Muskingum River, a few miles above Zanesville, Ohio. There he died in 1830, high in the esteem of the community in which he lived.

Lewis was the eldest of five children. He was of robust constitution and of bright and eager mind. At ten years of age he entered Exeter Academy, then under the charge of that accomplished scholar and instructor, Dr. Abbott. He was noted for diligence and manly excellence. He remained there seven years, and during a portion of that time had among his associates the afterward distinguished Buckingham, Salstonstall, and Daniel Webster.

In 1799 he taught school at Wilmington, Del., for a few months, preliminary to a foot and boat journey to the field of his future work. In October, 1800, he reached Marietta, the gateway through which Puritan blood and sentiment first poured its tide, destined to overspread and irrigate the great West. He entered the office of Governor Meigs and commenced the study of law, which he continued in the office of Matthew Baccus until licensed to practice in the courts of the Territory, in December, 1802. He removed to Zanesville, Ohio, where he rapidly acquired the confidence and clientage of the pioneers, and in 1806 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Dr. Spencer, of Wood County, Virginia, formerly of Lansingburgh, N. Y., a lady of culture and refinement.

In December of the same year he took his seat in the Ohio Legislature, and at once was conceded a leadership unusual to so young a man. The treasonable expedition of Aaron Burr was the center of public interest at that time, and General Cass framed the law under which his boats were seized and men arrested. He draughted the official communication to President Jefferson, stating the views of the Legislature on that subject.

The ability displayed and zeal shown influenced the President to appoint him marshal of Ohio in 1807, which position he held until he exchanged it for the colonelcy of the Third Regiment of Volunteers, with which he joined General Hull at the outbreak of hostilities in 1812.

His services during that war form no mean part of its history, and mark him as a true patriot and capable soldier. He led the advance into Canada, drew up the proclamation addressed by General Hull to the inhabitants, and commanded the detachment that drove in the outposts at Aux Canards, where was shed the first blood of the war. When included in the surrender of Detroit and paroled, he was selected by his fellow-officers, who shared his indignation, to lay the facts before the President. He hastened to Washington and made the first report, September 12, 1812, on the inexplicable circumstances through which a fort, an army, and a Territory were surrendered without the firing of a gun.

Immediately upon his exchange he was appointed colonel in the regular Army, and soon after was promoted to the rank of brigadier-general. He shared in the campaign of 1813, ending in the defeat of General Proctor at the battle of the Thames and the death of Tecumseh, and was left in command at Detroit in the fall. He was almost immediately appointed civil governor of the Territory of Michigan and ex officio superintendent of Indian affairs.

Mr. President, were the claim for the admission of his statue to "the American Pantheon," based solely upon his conduct of that office for eighteen years, there surely had been none to gainsay the right.

He assumed jurisdiction over a wilderness containing 6,000 French and English speaking whites and 40,000 savages. No lands had been sold by the United States; no surveys had been made; no titles were possible. The interior was without roads and the savages were jealous, restless, or openly hostile.

His grasp of the Indian problem of that day was the comprehensive grasp of a statesman. He cast aside the methods and policies previously pursued by the French and English and treated the Indians as mere occupants and not owners of the lands. He proposed to purchase their possessory rights, limit their ranging, teach them mechanics and agriculture, and provide them with schools and churches. From the outset he impressed them with the power and benignity of our Government.

In twenty-two treaties he secured the peaceable cession to the Government of the vast territory now occupied in part by four great States. He built roads, ordered and superintended surveys, established and maintained military posts, built light-houses, organized counties and townships, established courts, and provided all needed conveniences and machinery for civilized government and the protection of life and property.

In 1820 he planned and personally conducted an exploration of the Territory, in which he traveled over 5,000 miles, most of the way in birch canoes, treating and exchanging courtesies with the leading tribes of Indians. He settled finally the question of supremacy as to whom their allegiance was due—Great Britain or the United States—with them at Sault Ste. Marie, overawing the insolent Chippewas by an act of personal heroism worthy of ancient song and story.

He prospected the copper region, estimated and reported on the timber and mineral resources of the Lake Superior country, navigated the unknown rivers, ascended the Mississippi to its source, and ascertained the internal geography of a vast wilderness, the speedy population of which was largely due to the reports of this expedition. As an indication of his economic management, it is well to recall that in proposing this journey to the Secretary of War he stated that no extra appropriation was needed for it, and only asked permission to "assign a small part, say from $1,000 to $1,500, of the sum apportioned for Indian expenses." It was this expedition which gave Henry R. Schoolcraft his opportunity to make a lasting fame in connection with Indian legends and history.

In July, 1831, General Cass resigned his office as governor of Michigan to accept the War portfolio in the Cabinet of Andrew Jackson. He had been appointed governor six times, under Presidents Madison, Monroe, and Adams, without a protest from the people or a dissenting vote in the Senate. No treaty made by him was ever rejected by the Senate or complained of by the Indians, who as late as the last council in Detroit, of the Chippewas, Ottawas, and Pottawatomies, July 25, 1855, testified their respect for and confidence in him by abandoning their discussion, flocking about him, grasping his hand, and saluting him as an old and valued friend when he unexpectedly entered the council room.

Hon. James V. Campbell, for over thirty years a justice of the supreme court of Michigan, a man of the highest repute as a jurist and citizen and a critical scholar, writing, in 1876, his Political History of Michigan, sums up his account of General Cass's service there as follows:

His administration was eminently popular, and he desired and endeavored to secure to the people as soon as possible all the privileges of self-government. If he erred in this respect it was an error in the direction of the largest popular authority. His views were broad and sagacious, and he was very free from personal bitterness and malignity. The inevitable asperities of politics exposed him in later years to the attacks made on all public men, and his course in national affairs has been severely assailed and warmly defended; but no one now has any doubts about his sincere and unqualified patriotism. He was a brave defender and a true lover of his country.

As Secretary of War, General Cass held the confidence and friendship of President Jackson, although he joined Secretary McLane in opposing the proposed removal of the deposits. The Black Hawk war occurred and was energetically conducted. The executive measures called out by the nullification acts of South Carolina received his approval and co-operation. His report on what was known as "the Cherokee question" was an able and exhaustive state paper, and the plan outlined for the care of the Indians at that time has been substantially followed to this day.

During his Secretaryship he presided at the first temperance meeting ever held in Washington (February 24, 1833), and delivered the opening address upon the organization of the American Historical Society (October 12, 1835). Both of these addresses were delivered in the hall where his statue now stands, and so far as I can learn they were his only public appearances there. On April 7, 1836, General Cass presented a report relative to the military and naval defenses of the country and the supervision of internal improvements by the Corps of Engineers, which was of great merit, and its leading features have become incorporated in our public policy.

In August of that year, finding that his health was becoming impaired, he exchanged the Secretaryship for the position of minister to France. Almost immediately upon his presentation at court he obtained the payment of interest on our indemnity claims, thus terminating a vexatious dispute which at one time threatened to involve us in a war.

His most important act as minister and as an American was in effecting the defeat of the ratification of the quintuple treaty by the French Chamber of Deputies. England sought by diplomacy to secure the active consent of Austria, Russia, Prussia, and France to the enforcement of her long claimed and persistently contested right of visit and search, under cover of the general abhorrence of the African slave trade. The United States was not furnished a copy of the proposed treaty or asked to subscribe to it, although ours was the first nation to declare the slave trade unlawful, the first to declare it to be piracy and to take extreme measures for its suppression.

General Cass not only filed a masterly and comprehensive protest with the French Government, but with the consent of M. Guizot, minister of foreign affairs, issued an address directly to the French people, which has served as a text-book of the American position until this day. His efforts secured the rejection of the treaty.

The negotiation of the Ashburton treaty by Mr. Webster, without insisting upon the renunciation of England's claim to the right of visit and search in set terms, led to the resignation of General Cass, and a voluminous correspondence with the Secretary of State on the subject followed.

If it had not been for the sensitiveness of the public mind of America on the subject of slavery, which was prepared to welcome any blow at that institution, although that blow might involve concessions which would return to plague us, this action of General Cass would have given him immediate, exceptional, and lasting fame. To the student of political history the stand he took and the ability with which he defended, yea more, that he advanced it, together with the dexterity in adapting means to an end, stamp him not only as a statesman but a diplomat of the highest order.

Isolated in opinion, cut off from instructions from home, with an administration behind him whose views on the subject were unknown to him, surrounded by trained and adverse diplomats, to whom politics was the game of a lifetime, he threw himself wholly and positively into the conflict with a directness, an earnestness, and an alertness that must command our admiration. The wonder grows, as we analyze the situation, that this man, whose associations at the plastic time of his life had been on the frontier, who had been denied that conventional education which comes of mingling in old communities, whose training was neither of the court nor the forum, who had been forbidden access to well-filled libraries, should not only have circumvented the methods of men trained for diplomacy in the most refined and critical arena of Europe, but should have succeeded in holding a position that our commissioners had relinquished at Ghent, and for which blood and treasure had been poured out in the war of 1812. He not only did this, but by his arguments, based on the law of nations and fortified by citations from learned jurists, he drew conclusions which availed us much in a dark period of our civil war and which now are recognized as a maritime rule of conduct throughout Christendom.

His return to the United States was marked by a succession of popular ovations which emphasized the public opinion of his services.

In the national convention of 1844 he stood next to Van Buren in the balloting for the Democratic candidate for the Presidency, until a dead-lock under the two-thirds rule terminated in a compromise on James K. Polk. In 1845, at the earliest opportunity, he was elected to represent Michigan on this floor.

Here he at once assumed a leading position, being heard in January, 1846, in defense of the Monroe doctrine and in March delivering a learned and forcible address on the Oregon boundary question, which was afterward paraphrased as "fifty-four forty or fight" and used as a watch-word in the campaign of 1848. During this and the succeeding Congress the Wilmot proviso was the central question. When first proposed General Cass favored its incorporation, but subsequently yielded to the advice of Justice McLean and opposed it on the ground of its unconstitutionality, although instructed to vote for it by the Legislature of Michigan. The instruction was, however, rescinded before the final vote was reached.

In the Thirty-first Congress he was second to Mr. Clay on the committee which formulated the celebrated "compromise measures" of that day, and was chosen second only because he himself urged the propriety and policy of placing the great Whig leader first.

He supported the measures reported by the committee with the exception of the "fugitive slave law," for which he refused to vote, although in his seat at the time of its passage.

In 1848 he was the nominee of his party for the Presidency, receiving ten more than the necessary two-thirds of the votes on the fourth ballot, but was defeated through divisions on the slavery question in New York and Pennsylvania. He received the electoral vote of one-half the States, including the State of his birth, New Hampshire, Ohio, and the entire Northwest. He so bore himself in the struggle and after the defeat that in 1852, during forty-nine ballots, he led the poll for renomination, and in 1856 was solicited, through published correspondence to again bear the standard, but declined to be considered.

When he accepted the nomination in 1848 he resigned his Senatorship, but was re-elected upon the assembling of the Legislature in 1849 to serve out his own unexpired term, and was continued in the Senate as long as his party retained supremacy in Michigan.

During his service in the Senate he advocated a homestead law, and favored the peaceable purchase of Cuba, but opposed every measure looking to its forcible seizure.

Abhorring slavery and deprecating its extension, he held with the men of his school that it was beyond the interference of the General Government, excepting for protection in its constitutional status.

Upon leaving the Senate, in 1857, he was called to the Cabinet of President Buchanan, as Secretary of State. There he maintained the doctrines essential to our nationality, which had grown with his growth during his extended service as a builder and director of States and as his country's representative in European councils.

During his care of our foreign relations "the Republic received no harm," and in 1858 he was gratified with the consummation of his efforts in the abandonment by Great Britain of her assumption of the right of visit and search.

Amid the internal commotions preceding the outbreak of civil war he, as with Clay in 1850, advocated compromise between the discordant elements, but when the President refused to reinforce and defend Fort Sumter, he resigned his seat in the Cabinet and retired to private life after fifty-six years of official service.

On April 17, 1861, he addressed the first war meeting in Detroit. In company and in practical accord with Senator Zachariah Chandler, he appealed to his fellow-citizens to stand by the Union. His last public service was a letter of patriotic advice to Secretary Seward during the threatening complications with Great Britain, growing out of the seizure of Mason and Slidell.

Mr. President, I know of no public man who has filled so many places in the economy of life—teacher, explorer, negotiator of treaties, governor, pioneer, lawyer, legislator, marshal, soldier, diplomat, Secretary of War, Senator, and Secretary of State. In all he acquitted himself well, and in most surpassing well. His failings were the faults of his party; his virtues were his own. In diplomacy, bold or placable as the occasion might demand; in legislation, considerate, logical, and never dramatic; in administration, assiduous and conservative—the purity of his motives can not be gainsaid and the integrity of his acts is above reproach. He was a man of fine presence, grave demeanor, and cultivated manners. He took a great interest in young men, and many now living can attest his active and effective assistance. His house in Detroit, Washington, and Paris was always the seat of a refined and elegant hospitality.

General Cass's life spanned the experimental era of our history. To some the Constitution was a Procrustean bed to which all things were to be made to conform; to others it was an instrument elastic enough to meet every emergency. On the one hand it was regarded as a skin which would expand with every development of frame or muscle; on the other a coat of mail, within which the organism might grow but beyond the scales of which growth was impossible. It was a very difficult thing to reconcile or compass conflicts apparent at the time of its adoption; to foresee those which should arise in the future was beyond human prescience. To outside pressure we were strong; as against internal discord we were weak.

It was the old fable of the twigs—together we could not be broken, apart we were easily rent—and the problem was, could we hold together? The twigs took root, their pendent branches drooping to the West, banyan-like, sought earth and water, and soon their giant boles sent back life and vigor to the composite parent stem. It was the West which made us a nation, and to General Cass more than any other man was the West indebted for that self-dependence, that positiveness, that development which, while it was inherent in the race, was promoted and stimulated by his efforts to impress upon it that the people were the source of power, and that society with its statutes and forms of law should be a growth and not a creation.

Like most of the prominent men of his time, he believed that the Union could be preserved only by conciliation. He was a strict constructionist of the Constitution. He abhorred slavery, but he honestly believed that under the Constitution it could not be interfered with and that the power of Congress was limited in legislating against it in the Territories.

With Clay, Webster, and others, he tried by tentative methods to arrest the storm which was threatening all along the horizon. With them he tried to dam the stream that bade fair to overwhelm the nation in a common ruin—and who shall say that their efforts were not essential to the final glorious consummation? The stream rose higher than the crown of the dam and then "battlement and plank and pier rushed headlong to the sea." It carried destruction in its way, but a destruction necessary to re-creation.

The invisible forces, always the most potent, were the factors which solved the problem. The moral law recognized in the ordinance of 1787 wrought out the economic results of 1865; Appomattox Court-House was the corollary of Marietta; humanity was stronger than statutes, and parchments shriveled before the fires which warmed the children in a hundred thousand school-houses. Cadmus had planted the dragon's teeth, and, behold, armed men were brought forth. The knot which all the sages could not untie was cut by the sword.

In that crucial time when parties were tossing in angry tumult, like ships in a tempest with no beacon to guide, General Cass was true to the flag. His influence, like that of Douglas, sustained the wavering, checked the disloyal, and inspired the patriot. The homes which he more than any other had opened for the emigrant, the civilization which he more than any other had promoted and encouraged, then sent forth hundreds of thousands of men to die, if need be, for the Union.

He saw the flag trailed in dishonor; he lived to see it restored in glory. He saw the staff stripped of the emblem of a united country before hostile cannon; he lived to see it bend beneath the streaming folds, no star blotted out and no stripe discolored, when it was again hoisted amid the salvos of artillery. He found us bound together by a rope of sand; he lived to see that bond transmuted in the fierce heat of battle and on the forge of conflict to hooks of triple steel that no man might put asunder. He entered the wilderness which Virginia released, and which the ordinance of 1787 consecrated eternally to freedom; he lived to see that wilderness transformed into populous States which hurled nearly a million of men to fight for national unity.

His first year in public life found him strenuous to circumvent the traitorous designs of an arch conspirator against his country. His last official act was to protest against the vacillation which permitted a State to arm itself against the Federal authority unchallenged and unchecked. Two years after he entered public life the Afro-American slave trade was abolished by statute; two years before he died domestic slavery was swept away by force of arms. His youthful ears heard the rejoicing on the adoption of the Constitution; his aged eyes saw that instrument relieved of all complicity with a system that the public conscience had come to regard as a crime. He could say, "All of this I saw and part of which I was."

Whatever may be said of the sentiments he entertained in matters of political economy concerning which able and honest men have differed, no one will ever assail his integrity of administration, the comprehensiveness of his outlook, and the entire devotion of thought and purpose to the aggrandizement of his country. He found her great in possibilities; he left her great in development.

Along that toilsome journey of eighty-four years he saw no encroachment on her rights that he did not strive to thwart; he had no aspiration that was not consistent with her greatness.

More than twenty years have passed since he died. The mists engendered by the heat, passion, and rancor of the crucial time of the nation's history have risen, and men are judged not only by their acts but by the results of their acts. It has been said that the highest place in history must be assigned to the founders of states. If this be so, certainly the next gradation must be assigned to him who builds the superstructure on foundations already laid.

To such a place impartial biography must assign Lewis Cass. The State whose institutions he did so much to mold, and in whose soil his ashes repose, after a lapse of twenty-two years, a time sufficient for scrutiny of his acts and their consequences, has decreed through its representatives assembled that he is worthy of a place beside the great men who stand serene and changeless beneath the Dome of the Capitol.

It remains for us, Mr. President, to formally accept his statue presented to the nation by the State of Michigan. She invokes for the life and character which it represents and recalls the calm judgment of the present and the future. She leaves it in that august tribunal where the nation has gathered in part the counterfeit presentments of her heroic sons, with Williams the tolerant, Allen the vehement, Winthrop the devout, and the goodly array of worthies on whom history has set her seal.

In that court of last resort, where every American must of necessity be his own accuser, defender, and judge, it were well that we should pause and, after calm deliberation, let our consciences enter up the verdict whether or no our aspirations, our aims, and our acts have been and are consistent with the glory of the Republic.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, General Cass, when I first came to Washington as a member of the House of Representatives, was a prominent member of the Senate, and in 1857 he was appointed Secretary of State by President Buchanan, where he served until December, 1860, and here resided for some time subsequently. He owned a large house here, befitting the generous hospitality of himself and family, where members of Congress, irrespective of party affiliations, were invited and made welcome. His early, long, and important State and national services could not fail to make it peculiarly appropriate that a life-like representation of his imposing form and figure should be presented to the National Hall of Statuary, where the magic of many names of former days yet lingers, and a hall already reverently dedicated to some of our bravest and best, and, as we trust—

Immortal names
That were not born to die.

In 1864, by act of Congress, all of the States were invited—

To provide and furnish statues, in marble or bronze, not exceeding two in number for each State, of deceased persons who have been citizens thereof and illustrious for their historic renown, or from distinguished civic or military services, such as each State shall determine to be worthy of this national commemoration.

For this purpose the old Hall of the House of Representatives was set apart as a National Statuary Hall, and I may be pardoned for mentioning, as the measure was introduced by me, that it was designed with the further object of preserving untouched the admirable features of perhaps the finest hall of our country, then in imminent danger of being appropriated and cut up for the humble use of document-rooms, with a "long-drawn aisle" or narrow passage way between the House and Senate through the center.

Beyond the great beauty of the Hall itself, its attractions are destined to be immensely augmented as each State adds its chosen representatives to the national muster-roll of eminent men who have decorated our history. Many States have already presented statues of those whose renown the American people will preserve with pride, and whose merits are here daily recognized by troops of visitors, but likely hereafter to be even more earnestly studied and appreciated whenever the statues appear to be inspired by the genius of our best artists. The statue now offered by the prosperous State of Michigan, I feel sure, will be received as in every respect a creditable addition to a creditable assembly representing celebrities of the past who rendered some service to the Republic.

But there will be abundant room for many more, and we have much reason to expect the grand old hall will ere long be adorned by such notable figures, possibly, as would be that of Benton, from Missouri, or those of Charles Carroll and William Wirt, from Maryland; Lincoln and Douglas, from Illinois; Grimes, from Iowa; Morton and Hendricks, of Indiana; Webster, from New Hampshire; Macon, once styled "the last of the Romans," from North Carolina; Clay, from Kentucky; Calhoun, from South Carolina; William H. Crawford and George M. Troup, from Georgia; Austin and Sam Houston, from Texas; and Madison and Patrick Henry, from Virginia, with a long illustrious list of others easily to be mentioned, sufficient to show that our materials to make the hall nationally attractive are in no danger of being exhausted, but in some States may prove embarrassing from their abundance.

This truly representative hall, with its fraternal congress of the dead, who yet speak in marble and bronze, will tend to increase mutual respect, tend to knit us together as a homogeneous people, here united forever in a common tribute of high regard to Americans not unknown to fame, and designated and crowned by their respective States as worthy of national commemoration.

When we notice how swiftly some of those with whom we have been associated here, and whom we have loved and admired, have passed away, and whose eloquence, wit, and learning are only brought to the recollection of the public on rare occasions, is it not a gratification to feel that there have been some of our countrymen in public service who have left their

and to find there are traditions and personal memories extant in each and every State of historic worthies that are to have honored remembrance here through all the future ages of the Republic?

Lewis Cass belonged to the age of Webster, Clay, and Calhoun, born in the same year with Webster, Calhoun, Van Buren, and Benton; and though his forensic fame may have been eclipsed when contrasted with that of the foremost trio of our country, as was that of nearly all of their contemporaries, he was a strong, well-informed man, capable of lucid and cogent argument whenever he chose to prepare himself for debate, as he thought it only respectful to the Senate to do, and throughout his long career he was a prominent participant in events that will be honorably perpetuated in the annals of our country.

The biographical details of the life of General Cass have been so learnedly and completely portrayed by the distinguished Senator from Michigan, whose services here we all regret are so soon to terminate, that I am reluctant to touch even briefly these details again, but feel that I must, because the succession of these related facts, covering more than half a century of his personal history, are more eloquent than any comments can be of mine, and because they seem to be necessary to give substance and support to the slight contribution which it is possible for me to offer relative to the life and leading traits of character of this favorite son of the State of Michigan.

General Cass may be reckoned as one of the class often held to be somewhat characteristic of our American civilization, or as born in one State, obtaining a profession in another, and finally achieving fame and fortune in still another—an example of the restless and enterprising pioneers the East has sent and is still sending to the West. The son of a captain in the Continental army, born in New Hampshire, educated at its famous Exeter Academy, becoming a young schoolmaster in Delaware, and the next year, at seventeen years of age, going across the Alleghanies on foot to Marietta, Ohio, where he studied law, and then started in his profession, in 1803, at Zanesville. Here he married and began his political career as a member of the Ohio Legislature in 1806, where he suddenly became famous as the author of an act to arrest the men believed to be engaged in treasonable movements with Aaron Burr. For this timely service, very near to the heart of President Jefferson, he was rewarded by an appointment as marshal of Ohio, an office he retained until 1813.

At the beginning of the second war with England he joined the forces of General Hull as a colonel of the Ohio volunteers, and was too soon included in the capitulation known as Hull's disgraceful surrender. Having been paroled, he hastened to Washington with an aching heart and made the first report of the sad affair, and, like a gallant and indignant young soldier, said in his communication to the Secretary of War, "Our duty and our interest was to fight." As the forces of the enemy were greatly inferior to ours under General Hull, this appears to have been the unvarnished truth. After being exchanged he was appointed to the Twenty-seventh Regiment of Infantry and was soon promoted to the rank of brigadier-general. He was in the battle of the Thames, and at the close of hostilities what his prowess and military efficiency had been was clearly indicated by his being placed in command of the Territory of Michigan, and finally he was made governor of that Territory for many years, showing throughout the long service unimpeachable administrative ability.

In 1831 he was made Secretary of War by President Jackson, and largely sympathized in 1832 with the President in his resolute purpose to crush out nullification.

In 1836 he was appointed minister to France, where his most important act was a vigorous argumentative protest against the quintuple treaty that Great Britain sought by a joint proposal with other European powers for the suppression of the slave trade, to maintain the right of search on the high seas, but where only a small portion of the high contracting parties could give or were expected to give practical service or attention. It is enough to say that our minister's earnest protest dissuaded the French Government from signing the treaty and therefore defeated it. Soon after our own Government made a treaty with Great Britain for a mutual effort to suppress the slave trade, which, while not authorizing a search of American by British vessels, did not explicitly forbid it, as General Cass thought it should have done, and therefore, feeling himself indirectly discredited, he asked to be recalled, which request was granted. His controversy on this subject with Lord Brougham, and also with the Secretary of State, Daniel Webster, attracted at the time considerable attention and occupied much space in the public prints.

The omission of any declaration against the right of search was perhaps less conspicuous in 1842 than in our treaty of peace in 1815, when the exercise of that right was understood to have been the principal cause of the war of 1812, but Great Britain then found out and has known ever since that any practical reassertion of the right would be regarded by us as a sufficient cause for war. Most certainly General Cass would not have concluded the treaty of 1815 without an open and explicit provision against the right of search, but this probably would have been a humiliation to which Great Britain would not have submitted.

After his return from France he was a candidate, in 1844, for the Presidency. Always acknowledging his allegiance to the principles of the Democratic party, he cordially accepted the measures for which the party then contended, and announced that he was against a national bank and in favor of the annexation of Texas. He was against the Wilmot proviso, and upon the question of whether new States should be admitted in the Union with or without slavery he held that it should be left to be determined by the people of the Territories, and this his opponents described as "squatter sovereignty." He also, in relation to the tariff, declared—

> That in the imposition of duties necessary with the proceeds of the public lands to provide this revenue incidental protection should be afforded to such branches of American industry as may require it. This appears to me—> not only constitutional, but called for by the great interests of the country.

In the Democratic convention, however, Martin Van Buren had the lead, and only lacked twenty votes of a two-thirds majority, but the friends of General Cass declined to supply the few votes so greatly needed, and Mr. Polk, of Tennessee, finally received the nomination.

General Cass, in 1845, was elected to the Senate, and at once joined in the earnest assertion of our rignt to all of Oregon up to the Russian boundary. He would, as he declared, "not surrender one inch of it to England," and it may be doubted whether any of us would today be satisfied with less than "all of Oregon" were the question now an open one. At that time it might, it is true, have led to a third war with Great Britain. On the resolution of Senator Allen, of Ohio, against the interposition of the powers of Europe in the political affairs of America, he was for vigorous action, for an American policy, and declared:

> We shall lose nothing at home or abroad, now or hereafter, by establishing and maintaining an American policy—a policy decisive in its spirit, moderate in its tone, and just in its objects—proclaimed and supported firmly but temperately.

At the Baltimore Democratic convention in May, 1848, General Cass was once more a candidate for the Presidency, and after several ballots obtained the nomination by the required majority of two-thirds, his chief contestants being James Buchanan and Levi Woodbury. General Cass at once resigned his seat in the Senate and retired to his home in Michigan, quietly awaiting the result. In his letter of acceptance, as his predecessor, Mr. Polk had done, he announced his purpose, if elected, not to be a candidate for re-election.

Later, the so-called "Barn-burner" friends of Mr. Van Buren, feeling that he had been neglected by his party, and not opportunely helped by General Cass in 1844, united on a Free-soil ticket, nominating Mr. Van Buren for President and Charles Francis Adams for Vice-President. General Cass, having been defeated and General Taylor elected, was re-elected to the Senate, where he took part in the important debates of that important epoch, generally supporting the compromise measures of Mr. Clay and opposing both Southern rights dogmas and the Wilmot proviso; but, though present, he declined to vote on the question of the fugitive-slave law.

In 1852 he was for the third time a prominent but unsuccessful candidate for the nomination to the Presidency. His claims were widely conceded, but his party decided that a candidate who had never lost a race would be more available, and nominated and elected Franklin Pierce, of New Hampshire.

In 1857 he accepted the position of Secretary of State under President Buchanan. The great crisis in our national affairs was rapidly approaching, and in 1860 President Buchanan, in his message to Congress, denied the existence of the power in the Constitution by which the General Government can coerce a State. This was not openly disapproved by General Cass in the Cabinet meeting when the message was first read. Eight days afterwards, however, he reasserted the Jacksonian principles of 1832–'33, that "the Union must be preserved," and when the President refused to reinforce Major Anderson and reprovision Fort Sumter he resigned his place in the Cabinet.

This last act in his public career of fifty-six years shows that he was, like "Abdiel, faithful found among the faithless," an ardent lover of the Union, and did not lack the courage of his convictions. The act greatly endeared him to all supporters of the Government, many of whom thronged to his house to listen to the sage and temperate counsel of a firm believer in the ultimate triumph of the Union with not a State blotted out.

He was, as has been stated, for six or seven years marshal of Ohio, for several years in active military service, governor of Michigan Territory for eighteen years, five years Secretary of War, minister to France for six years, eleven years in the United States Senate, and three and one-half years Secretary of State—a most unexampled tenure and diversity of official services, all requiring comprehensive knowledge and ability, both in civil and military affairs, whether as an executive officer, diplomat, or statesman, and the general voice of his countrymen has been that in none of these high positions was he found deficient, but that he discharged every duty with absolute fidelity, with stainless purity in private life, and with honor to himself, his State, and the country for which he had early shown himself ready to stake his life.

Let us welcome the statue of Lewis Cass as a felicitous contribution to our American Pantheon, where are clustered precious memories that will be for all future generations an inspiration to noble deeds and unselfish devotion to the institutions of a free, enlightened, and independent people.

Mr. CHANDLER Mr. President, the present occasion naturally suggests an inquiry into the plan and purpose of Congress in establishing the National Statuary Hall. The movement originated in the act of July 2, 1864, which authorized the President—

> To invite each and all the States to provide and furnish statues, in marble or bronze, not exceeding two in number for each State, of deceased persons who have been citizens thereof, and illustrious for their historic renown or from distinguished civic or military services, such as each State shall determine to be worthy of this national commemoration; and when so furnished the same shall be placed in the old hall of the House of Representatives, in the Capitol of the United States, which is hereby set apart, or so much thereof as may be necessary, as a national statuary hall, for the purposes herein indicated.

Rhode Island was the first State to respond to this invitation, and in January, 1870, the statue of Nathaniel Greene was received by Congress. This was followed in January, 1872, by the statue of Roger Williams.

Connecticut, early in 1872, presented statues of Jonathan Trumbull and Roger Sherman.

New York, in 1873 and 1874, placed in the hall statues of George Clinton and Robert R. Livingston.

Vermont, in 1876, erected the statue of Ethan Allen, and in 1881 that of Jacob Collamer.

Massachusetts presented, in 1876, statues of John Winthrop and Samuel Adams.

Pennsylvania, in 1883, presented the statue of Robert Fulton, and in 1884 that of Peter Muhlenberg.

Maine, in 1878, placed in the hall the statue of William King.

Ohio, in 1886, erected the statue of James A. Garfield, and in 1888 the statue of William Allen.

New Jersey, in August, 1888, presented the statues of Philip Kearny and Richard Stockton.

Michigan to-day tenders to the nation the statue of Lewis Cass.

A memorandum concerning the National Statuary Hall, further mentioning the statues received prior to and including February 18, 1889, I will insert in the RECORD:

NOTE.—The statues of Washington, Jefferson, Hamilton, Lincoln, and Edward D. Baker, of Oregon, were not presented by their States, and are not, therefore, included in the above list.

New Hampshire has as yet taken no action in response to the national invitation. By universal consent in our State the first place among New Hampshire's earlier citizens, illustrious for their historic renown or from distinguished civic or military services, will be assigned to John Stark, the gallant Indian ranger and fighter, the brave soldier of the Revolution, who fought at Bunker Hill, led the van at Trenton, was conspicuous at Princeton, and was the hero of the battle of Bennington, which was fought August 16, 1777, mainly by New Hampshire troops, who achieved the victory which cut off the retreat of Burgoyne and his army and made possible their capture at Saratoga. He was born in Londonderry August 28, 1728, became the last surviving general, except one, of the Revolution, and died at Manchester, May 8, 1822, at the great age of 94, the most famous soldier of the Granite State.

The second selection by New Hampshire will be made from among several of her distinguished sons, all worthy and eminent, but preeminence among whom it will be difficult to determine.

New Hampshire is, however, as well as Michigan, honored by the presence in the national gallery of the statue this day presented. Lewis Cass was born at Exeter, in New Hampshire, October 9, 1782. He soon emigrated to Ohio, and thence to Michigan, but he was followed throughout his long career by feelings of pride justly entertained by the people of his native State. As a lawyer, member of the Legislature of Ohio, marshal of that State, volunteer soldier, colonel and general in the war of 1812, governor of Michigan, Secretary of War, minister to France, United States Senator, Secretary of State, he proved himself at all times worthy of the respect and admiration not only of his native and of his adopted State but also of the people of the whole country. As a representative of New Hampshire in this Chamber, I desire to thank the people of Michigan for the appropriate memorial which they this day place in the national Capitol to one of the most distinguished sons of New Hampshire, and one of the most eminent citizens of Michigan and of the Union, and which Congress now accepts in behalf of a grateful people.

It does not fall within my province on this occasion, after the full narratives and eloquent eulogies of the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Vermont, who have preceded me, to recite at any length the words or the deeds of General Cass. My brief contribution will be confined to an attempt to fix attention upon a few of the special circumstances of his life which seem to me to have materially aided in forming his strong and remarkable character, and to a consideration of his relations to the most important question of his public life, the controversy over slavery.

In the first place, the character of General Cass must have been largely influenced by his familiarity with the patriotic services of his father and uncle in the war of the Revolution. It appears that his father, Jonathan Cass, with his brother Daniel, enlisted in the Revolutionary army at the outbreak of hostilities, and fought side by side at Bunker Hill; and his father was in the conflicts of Monmouth, Trenton, Princeton, Germantown, and Saratoga. About the close of the war Lewis Cass was born, and he soon began to realize how momentous had been the recent Revolutionary struggle, and with what devotion and patriotic ardor his father and his uncle had sacrificed the comforts of home and periled their lives in order to secure the independence of the colonies. Such ancestry and such surroundings in his early and susceptible youth inevitably made a deep impression upon the mind and heart of the boy, and doubtless largely contributed to the development in him of that energy, patriotism, and devotion to the Union of the States, which under all circumstances of hope and joy, or of doubt and gloom, were an inseparable part of his character and life.

Highly beneficial to the subject of these remarks must also have been his school education and his own experience as a school-teacher. Exeter Academy was founded by John Phillips in 1781, and soon became a school of note; and young Cass, born in Exeter, was as fortunate in receiving the help of that academy as have been in later years other distinguished men in enjoying the advantages of a school which has become so justly celebrated. After leaving the academy he became a school-teacher, and was thus engaged at Wilmington, Del., when his father took his family thence to Ohio. Until recent years nearly every son of New England who has become prominent in professional or public life has been able to recur to the fact that in his youth, when obtaining his education, he taught a village school. Such experiences in the capacity of teacher have been of quite as high a value to the teacher as to those who have been taught; and it may safely be affirmed that to this early and fortunate connection with Exeter Academy and to his practice as a teacher of others General Cass mainly owed that intellectual discipline and literary culture and ability which he displayed when long years after, having in the mean time been a soldier and a frontier pioneer, he became an orator upon the floor of the United States Senate.

To the military experiences of General Cass must also have been due much of the confidence and firmness which he afterwards displayed. Enlisting in the war of 1812 he soon became a colonel and was captured at the fall of Detroit under General Hull; returning, indignant, to Ohio, he received a commission as brigadier-general, joined the army under General Harrison, and participated in the victories of this distinguished commander, by whom he was commended for his ability and bravery. The whole military career of General Cass was in the highest degree honorable; and in searching for the causes of his distinguished success in after years great importance must be attached to the effect of his military experience in forming and strengthening the character which guided and energized the work of his life as a public man.

Hardly less important than his military experience in the formation of his character must be placed his long service as Territorial governor of Michigan. Beginning in 1813 and not ending until 1831, these eighteen years of varied labors and achievements, involving the settlement of troublesome Indian questions and all the difficulties incident at that day to the government of a Western Territory slowly growing toward statehood, must have been fruitful in events and experiences which tended to shape and develop those traits which were soon to find scope for their influence on the broadest national field.

Coming now to consider the career of General Cass as a statesman and a publicist, it would be interesting, if time were afforded, to review the principal incidents of his eventful life during the thirty years from 1831 to 1861. There were many phases to his work as Secretary of War. He was compelled to continue to deal with Indian questions, for which he was so well fitted, particularly with the difficulties with the Cherokees. As minister to France he showed himself an able diplomatist, and his persistency in resisting the right of search, notwithstanding the quintuple treaty was satisfactory to Mr. Webster and the national administration, undoubtedly caused the defeat of that treaty through the non-concurrence of France, resulting from the vigorous protest of Mr. Cass. He was a many-sided man, and during his long public career, which can not be said to have ended until five years before his death, which occurred on the 17th of June, 1866, he dealt with many public questions, always with ability, zeal, and patriotic devotion to his country's interests. But his relations to the public controversies over slavery were the most important of his life, and to considering those alone will the remainder of my remarks be directed. It is impossible to comprehend his public life without such consideration; it is needful while so engaged to speak with candor and fairness and with becoming reserve.

Concisely stated, General Cass's political action with reference to the slavery question, which was the overpowering national issue from his entry into the Senate, March 4, 1845, until he left the Cabinet of President Buchanan, December 14, 1860, was this: He advocated the Mexican war and he opposed the Wilmot proviso, notably in his famous Nicholson letter of December 24, 1847. In 1848 he was a candidate for President on a platform and with a letter of acceptance so much favoring slavery that Mr. Van Buren became a third-party candidate on an anti-slavery platform and caused the defeat of General Cass and the election of General Taylor. Later, in the Senate, he continued his opposition to the Wilmot proviso and was a leading advocate of the compromise measures of 1850, and of the repeal of the Missouri compromise, in 1853. Entering the Cabinet of President Buchanan as Secretary of State, he supported the Kansas-Nebraska policy, and favored during the winter of 1860–'61 the Crittenden resolutions, designed to make the abolition of slavery in the States by national action impossible without the consent of all the States.

From this recital it appears that General Cass was one of those national Democrats who believed in maintaining in the broadest and fullest extent those compromises favoring slavery which entered into the framing of the national Constitution, and that he was opposed to all those views hostile to slavery which finally found expression in the organization in 1856 of the Republican party. The conflict between these two sets of opinions has now so far passed into history that it ought to be possible to discuss the question without partisanship and with some hope of reaching a just judgment. In looking back to 1852 and the previous years it must be admitted that anti-slavery condemnation of Mr. Cass and those Democrats who thought and acted with him must also be extended to all the leading members of the Whig party.

Both parties in 1852 indorsed the compromises of 1850 and nominated their respective candidates—General Pierce, the Democrat, and General Scott, the Whig—upon the platform of adherence to those compromise measures and of disapprobation of anti-slavery agitation. If both parties were wrong at that time it is necessary to maintain that out of the 3,144,201 voters in the Presidential election of 1852 who voted, 1,601,474 for Pierce, 1,386,578 for Scott, and 156,149 for Hale, only the latter number were correct in their position on the slavery question; and even if, in view of later history, this assertion may be confidently made, yet it still remains impossible to charge upon the great mass of voters of this country unworthy motives or a lack of patriotism in assuming their positions upon this troublesome question.

But how, it will naturally be asked, is it possible for those Americans who earnestly affirm that the compromise measures of 1850 were a mistake, that the repeal of the Missouri compromise was a grievous wrong, and that the many concessions to slavery were fatal mistakes, also to admit that the motives of the advocates of such wrongful measures were as honest as their opponents and were patriotic statesmen whom the country justly honored while living, and to whose memories, now they are gathered to their fathers, the American people should pay such tributes of respect and affection as those which are now being offered to the memory of the favorite statesman of Michigan? Simply in this way, as I humbly conceive—by ascribing to General Cass and his political associates the lofty motive of a determination that nothing whatever should be allowed to endanger or destroy the Union of the States. To do them full justice we must go back to the early years of the century. At the present time, after one hundred years under the Constitution and the Union, whose various parts have become firmly cemented together by the sad but helpful experiences of the great civil war, the Union seems to be and really is beyond danger of destruction for a long period, perhaps for centuries to come; but this confidence was by no means felt in the days of those men whose lives we are now contemplating.

The Union had hardly begun when the slavery question threatened trouble, and there came many fears, naturally arising even if not well founded, that to tolerate controversy over slavery would bring about a dissolution of the Union. It seemed easy then for the anti-slavery men to say that those fears were groundless, but the recent events from 1861 to 1865 have proved that they were based upon real dangers. At all events General Cass and his associates so believed and so acted. The Union was much to them. For independence some of them had fought. They were near to the days of the Revolution. They and theirs had made sacrifices for the Union, and it embodied for them their whole hope for a prosperous future for their posterity. Under these circumstances they maintained that it was only by what they considered a faithful observance of the Constitution and by discouraging agitation on the subject of slavery that the inestimable blessings of the Union of these States could be made perpetual.

I am not prepared myself to say that in taking this view of their political duties these men were absolutely unselfish or wholly sincere, or in every way patriotic, but such has been the opinion of some anti-slavery writers and speakers when they have endeavored to dispassionately review the incidents of the great anti-slavery conflict before its culmination in civil war.

Mr. Webster, who had always leaned strongly toward the anti-slavery side, at last, in his speech on the 7th of March, 1850, approved the compromise measures of that year, and thus brought bitter anti-slavery denunciations upon his head. But Mr. Blaine, in his "Twenty Years of Congress," is inclined to attribute Mr. Webster's action at this crisis to sincere sentiments of patriotism. He says of Mr. Webster in this connection:

> He belonged with those who could remember the first President, who personally knew much of the hardships and sorrows of the Revolutionary period, who were born to poverty and reared in privation. To these the formation of the Federal Government had come as a gift from Heaven, and they had heard from the lips of the living Washington, in his farewell words, that "the Union is the edifice of our real independence, the support of our tranquillity at home, our peace abroad, our prosperity, our safety, and of the very liberty which we so highly prize, that for this Union we should cherish a cordial, habitual, immovable attachment, and should discountenance whatever may suggest even a suspicion that it can in any event be abandoned." Mr. Webster had in his own lifetime seen the thirteen colonies grow to thirty powerful States. He had seen three millions of people, enfeebled and impoverished by a long struggle, increased eightfold in number, surrounded by all the comforts, charms, and securities of life. All this spoke to him of the Union and of its priceless blessings. He now heard its advantages discussed, its perpetuity doubted, its existence threatened.
> A convention of slaveholding States had been called to meet at Nashville for the purpose of considering the possible separation of the sections. Mr. Webster felt that a generation had been born who were undervaluing their inheritance, and who might, by temerity, destroy it. Under motives inspired by these surroundings, he spoke for the preservation of the Union. He believed it to be seriously endangered. His apprehensions were ridiculed by many who, ten years after Mr. Webster was in his grave, saw for the first time how real and how terrible were the perils upon which those apprehensions were founded.

> The thoughtful reconsideration of his severest critics must allow that Mr. Webster saw before him a divided duty, and that he chose the part which in his patriotic judgment was demanded by the supreme danger of the hour.

Whether or not the course of Mr. Webster can be thus justified and must be adjudged to be patriotic, opinions will differ, and every one must decide for himself. If Mr. Webster was right, equally so was General Cass. For the Union to establish which his father had fought; for the Union in the service of which he had himself risked his life in battle; for the Union of those States which, so feeble at first, he saw beginning to move forward toward a wonderful greatness, of which he, however, in his most hopeful visions had no adequate comprehension—for this Union he was willing, and others like him were willing, to yield too much to slavery and to the South. But it certainly is our duty in this generation, when the black cloud of slavery has forever passed away, to endeavor to charitably and favorably judge those whose sole controlling motive may have been devotion to the Union of the States which even then so much blood and treasure had been spent to accomplish.

But however pure and patriotic may have been the motives of General Cass in his political course, it is sadly true that his sufferings were intense as the culmination approached of those dark events which preceded and opened up the war of the rebellion. Personal humiliation also tended to embitter his existence. The State of Michigan, which had been justly proud of her favorite and greatest son, and had always sustained him by her votes, ceased from her devotion, and, on January 10, 1857, Zachariah Chandler was elected as his successor in the Senate. The same writer from whom I have quoted, in an introduction to a biography of Mr. Chandler, says:

> It is a noteworthy fact, not infrequently adverted to, that the political opinions of Michigan, both as Territory and State, for a period of sixty years, were represented and indeed, in no small degree, formed by two men of New Hampshire birth. From 1819 to 1854 General Cass was the accepted political leader of Michigan, and only once in all that long period of thirty-five years did her people fail to follow him.

Notwithstanding the desertion by his State he continued to be a representative of the national Democracy, which came at once to his support. He passed immediately from the Senate into the Cabinet of President Buchanan and continued his efforts for the preservation of the Union by further yielding to the demands of the advocates of slavery. But as the evil and terrible days of civil war were approaching, even he begun to feel that the policy of conciliation and concession might be carried too far. When President Buchanan decided not to reinforce Fort Sumter General Cass's indignation was aroused, and he resigned from the Cabinet and was succeeded by Jeremiah S. Black, and about the time of the inauguration of President Lincoln, in March, 1861, he returned to his home in Detroit full of forebodings for his country. I have been told by more than one person who saw him at this time of the sadness and gloom which had settled down upon him on account of the distracted condition of the country he had served so long, and I also find his condition aptly described by General Garfield in his speech in the House of Representatives in commemoration of the life of Zachariah Chandler. He said:

In the stormy spring of 1861, when the foundations of the Republic trembled under the tread of assembling armies, I made a pilgrimage to the home of the venerable Lewis Cass, who had just laid down his great office as chief of the State Department, and for an hour I was a reverent listener to his words of wisdom. And in that conversation he gave me the thought which I wish to record. He said, "You remember, young man, that the Constitution did not take effect until nine States had ratified it. My native State was the ninth. It hung a long time in doubtful scale whether nine would agree; but when at last New Hampshire ratified the Constitution, it was a day of great rejoicing. My mother held me, a little boy of six years, in her arms at a window and pointed me to a great man on horseback and to the bonfires that were blazing in the streets of Exeter, and told me that the horseman was General Washington and the people were celebrating the adoption of the Constitution. So," said the aged statesman, "I saw the Constitution born, and I fear I may see it die."

This occurrence was on Wednesday, November 4, 1789, while Washington as President was making his Eastern tour, as he passed from Portsmouth, through Exeter, to Haverhill, Mass.

General Garfield proceeded:

He then traced briefly the singular story of his life. He said, "I crossed the Alleghany Mountains and settled in your State of Ohio one year before the beginning of this century. Fifty-four years ago now I sat in the General Assembly of your State of Ohio. In 1807 I received from Thomas Jefferson a commission as United States marshal, which I still preserve, and am probably the only man living to-day who bears a commission from Jefferson's hand." And so, running over the great retrospect of his life and saddened by the bloody prospect that 1861 brought to his mind, he said, "I have loved the Union ever since the light of that bonfire and the sight of General Washington greeted my eyes. I have given fifty-five years of my life and my best efforts to its preservation. I fear I am doomed to see it perish."

How solitary and sad indeed was the condition of this patriotic old statesman going home to Michigan to die. All his labors and sacrifices seemed to him to have been in vain. Although, as the world esteems achievements, he had attained a high degree of success in life, yet he thought of his defeat as a candidate for President; he realized that he had been forced from the Senate, and he now saw, simultaneously with the defeat of his party which he loved, the country which he had served going rapidly, as he believed, to inevitable dissolution and destruction. It is remarkable that with such depression of spirits, aged upwards of eighty years, General Cass continued much longer to survive.

But Providence had kindly decreed that he should not pass away from earth in doubt whether his country was to live or die. Before his death in 1866 glad tidings reached this son of the Revolution, soldier of the war of 1812, and pioneer of the magnificent Commonwealth of Michigan; to this grand statesman and true patriot came the welcome and glorious announcement that the country of his affection had indeed safely passed through the fiery furnace of civil war, to be in its new and freer life stronger and more enduring than he had ever dreamed it could become—for the reason that the great source of all his fears during his long lifetime of patriotic service had in the heat of the conflict disappeared forever and forever, and the Union of these States, saved by doing justly, at last stood a nation, exalted by righteousness; "redeemed, regenerated, and disenthralled by the irresistible genius of universal emancipation."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the consideration of the unfinished business, which should be resumed at this hour, will be informally laid aside until debate upon the pending resolution shall have been concluded.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, in expressing my cordial approval of the resolution and my concurrence with the statements and sentiments expressed on this occasion by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER], I also desire to state that, as a Senator from Alabama, I am glad of the opportunity of uniting with them in doing honor to the memory and fame of Lewis Cass.

Alabama never for a moment forgot to hold Lewis Cass in honored and affectionate remembrance as a patriot, a soldier, a statesman, and a legislator.

In December, 1860, he closed a continuous public service of more than a half century, in which every act was honorable, by his resignation from the Cabinet of President Buchanan as Secretary of State. In that act was expressed a total dissent from the attitude held by the people of Alabama on a subject that had begun to grow up into a sectional dispute when Lewis Cass was born, and was ended by the sword in the last years of his life.

The side of that question that had become so serious to the South, on account of the value of the property involved and its social bearings, had to him some very repulsive features. But he saw a people included in its toils who had not created the evil, but had found it among them as an inheritance. He found that the compact of union contained guaranties for its protection, and he was the sworn friend and supporter of that compact.

Down to the hour when the sword became the arbiter of these controversies he smothered his aversion to slavery that he might bear true allegiance to the Constitution, and he endeavored to interpose that shield for the protection of the South.

We parted, at the close of the seventh decade of our Union, as men part when one man goes out to death and the other to assured life and prosperity; but being friends, their parting is equally sad to both. So Cass and the South parted.

He had always been faithful to the Constitution and just to the South, and in parting with us to assume toward us the attitude of a public enemy he did not withdraw any declaration he had ever made as to the character of the Southern people or the motives that he recognized as being sincere which led them to protect their rights, as they understood them, under the Constitution of the United States.

In 1855, when the great issue between the sections had taken definite shapes, and a terrible conflict was impending, he wrote this to the Detroit Free Press:

I have never known the time when the Democratic party was called upon by higher considerations to adhere faithfully and zealously to their organization and their principles than they are at this day. Our confederation is passing through the most severe trial it has undergone. Unceasing efforts are making to excite hostile and sectional feelings, against which we were prophetically warned by the Father of his Country, and if these are successful the days of the Constitution are numbered.

The continued assaults upon the South, upon its character, its constitutional rights, and its institutions, and the systematic perseverance and bitter spirit with which these are pursued, while they warn the Democratic party of the danger, should also incite it to united and vigorous action. They warn it, too, that the time has come when all other differences which may have divided it should give way to the duty of defending the Constitution, and when that great party, coeval with the Government, should be united as one man for the accomplishment of the work to which it is now called, and before it is too late.

When the struggle that he apprehended had passed the States still lived, and Lewis Cass still lived to see that the principles of government he had so long and so ably advocated were adequate, far beyond his hopes and expectations, to the restoration to the Union of these imperishable States. His belief was that the sovereign power and life of the States was the immortal part of the Union, as the spirit is the immortal part of man, and that nothing could destroy the Union while these living States should maintain its perpetuity. He saw that if the Southern States had perished nothing would have remained but the territory in which, and the people through whose powers, new States would have to be constructed if a new Union was to be formed.

But the States survived, and with them the Union; and General Cass lived to witness that, under this form of restoration, upon the basis of the indestructibility of the States, and through their rights as States, the people were again brought within the enjoyment of the rights and liberties reserved to them and protected by the Constitution of the United States.

He was rejoiced to find the fruits of his labors so abundant and excellent. He belonged to the class of men whose honorable fame is recorded in the gratitude of succeeding generations, "for their works do follow them."

The public life of General Cass was devoted to the practical affairs of the country connected with the great trust committed to him by the people. He applied to these affairs the principles of government that he believed were correct, after mature consideration, and did not stagger under any responsibility, however great; neither did he diverge from his line of duty to conciliate opposing opinions. He had none of that mean spirit which sometimes makes cringing demagogues of men who are honored with high places. Being indebted, as I believe, to the principles of American government in which he was profoundly instructed, and to the Constitution of the United States and its true and just construction, in accordance with the views of men like Lewis Cass, for whatever of liberties we now enjoy, I am sure that I represent the people of Alabama in doing honor and reverence to the memory of this great American.

There is a rivalry in the thoughts of this generation as to his most distinguishing characteristic, whether it is best described by his title of general, governor, jurist, diplomatist, or legislator. It is conceded by all the people that in either of these great offices he exhibited eminent abilities.

It is not to the discredit of that capacity to direct public affairs with wisdom which has loaded a continent with evidences of the greatness of American statesmanship that it has not been acquired in the schools, or that so many of our grandest characters have been developed and established, in their younger days, through the hardships of personal toil and, frequently, of privation.

In the volunteer army, in the fields and workshops, in the teaching of primary schools, and under the necessity of labor for earning a support and education many of our greatest men have spent their boyhood and early manhood. In these vocations they learned to know the people and to love them, and under this inspiration they consecrated their powers, with affection and self-denial, to the true purposes of our Government.

Lewis Cass was trained under such influences. They gave him faith and strength and enriched him, as he earnestly and bravely followed the course of duty, with the grateful affections of the people, who always felt the prouder the higher he ascended in station and power. His name and fame are identified with Michigan in a way that strongly resembles the historic relation between Thomas Jefferson and Virginia. We think of Michigan and Cass, when we think of the history of either, as being almost identical.

It may be said of Cass and Michigan that they grew up together. He was made Territorial governor of Michigan in 1813 by James Madison and held that office for eighteen years. He was ex officio superintendent of Indian affairs in the Northwest during the greater part of his service as governor. Through his wise and just administration he negotiated more than twenty treaties with the Indians and laid the foundations of several of the great States of the Northwest, whose territory we thus freed from Indian occupancy. Michigan, in 1813, was almost at the western verge of the horizon of civilization, then called "the far West." When Cass died Michigan was near the center of population in the United States, and now it is thought of as a part of the far East.

We boast, continually, and why should we not, of the miraculous growth of our country in every form of progressive development and improvement. But we should never forget to honor the men who have so provided in laws and administration for the exercise of these tremendous forces, that every human being and every interest has had the free and full opportunity to grow and increase without molestation from the powers that conduct governments. A principle is at the bottom and around the shores of this ocean of human activities that holds in restraint and tempers its ceaseless movements.

In the history of the public life of Lewis Cass, it is found that he relied upon the restraints of the Constitution, upon the legislative and executive powers, and their faithful and self-denying maintenance as the earth with its rock-ribbed coasts is relied upon to keep the turbulent seas within due bounds.

His influence was a positive power in government and his wisdom was accepted as a guide in every strait in which the country was placed. He was among the foremost men of his age in the useful employment of his great powers for great public advantage.

The earnest ardor of his patriotism was the result of circumstances differing from those that now surround us. Now, we are a rich and powerful people, who have learned from each other, in the bloodiest of all wars, that the inherent power of our population is equal to any ambitious purpose we could desire to accomplish, and the fear or dread of the power of any other nation is a thought that is not entertained. There is now an element of aggressiveness in the ardor of our patriotism without which it is open to suspicion.

Lewis Cass entered upon public life before this Capitol was burned by the British, and he heard with dismay of the flight of our President from Washington. He did not then feel safe, nor did anybody feel secure of even the final independence of our country. His ideas of patriotic duty included personal sacrifice and privation as a debt to the country that was liable to be paid in blood at any day. When he was a lad his eyes were dripping with tears as he mourned with all civilized nations over the death of George Washington.

It was in such a period of patriotic sentiment that his aspirations were guided and his ambition was chastened. This was a good time of preparation for a man who was destined to have an influential voice in the young Republic. He lived in an atmosphere that was purified and blest with the living presence of George Washington. As he grew older the great intellect of Thomas Jefferson was clearing the highway of American constitutional liberty of the impediments of Federalism, kingcraft, and "the divine right to rule," which were so difficult to remove. In this plain road he laid his course and held it until he had marched with Michigan to the grand ascendency we now hold, yet to be greatly increased.

He considered in his well-balanced and courageous mind the truth as it was stated and expounded by this wonderful statesman. He welcomed the Jeffersonian exegesis of our Constitution and adopted with earnest conviction the plan and creed of government in which liberty has its citadels, and this made him always a thorough and conscientious Democrat. He never departed from the faith, and was seldom embarrassed with serious doubts as to his line of duty. When he was called upon to exercise a doubtful power, he did not rush forward with the zeal that is born of egotism or of the lust of illicit authority and seize upon it. He thought it safest for the people that he should not too broadly construe in his own favor the limited powers delegated to him as their representative in the Constitution.

He was the cherished friend of Andrew Jackson, whose unfailing judgment of men discovered in Lewis Cass the highest elements of honor, power, and ability. He invited General Cass into his Cabinet as Secretary of War at a time when that place was conspicuous in our history for its great responsibilities and delicate trusts. In this Department he has had no superior for devotion to his country, for courage in the assertion of its rights, or for tact in dealing with its most complex and important interests.

Thus from his boyhood to the full ripeness of his manhood he lived in the presence and company of the greatest men this country or the world has ever produced as their worthy associate. Such associations gave early maturity to his thoughts and convictions and added to the strength and impressiveness of his character.

Lewis Cass was a strong and self-sustaining man; a central figure, conspicuous and pronounced in its individuality, around which national influences were grouped in powerful support of national honor, pride, and progress. Yet he was a plain, positive, and unpretentious citizen, who had and enjoyed the sincere love and confidence of the people, who knew him by intuition, trusted him without reserve, and silently accredited him as a protector of their rights and liberties. He appeared amongst his great co-workers in the councils of government in bold prominence, as Michigan appears on the map of the States, almost insular, strong in resources, and peculiarly endowed with the powers of aggression and defense.

His name is linked with that of a State which is destined to a most important influence in the future of the Republic, and in history they will never be separated. It is a great reward of enlightened, faithful, and laborious service to the country to be thus identified with the history of an American State. The States are imperishable, and their immediate care of the personal interests and happiness of the people excites in the heart of every true man the deepest sense of grateful and proud affection.

Lewis Cass freely and fondly indulged this filial regard for the State of Michigan. He foresaw its splendid future when he settled at Detroit and made Michigan his future home.

Far retired from the seaboard Michigan is, in the commercial and military sense, a maritime State. It has a coast-line longer than any State in the Union, except California. Its hill country abounds in iron and copper of the best quality. Its forests are a treasure of wealth, and its arable lands yield grain and grasses in ample supply.

This great peninsula points to the Arctic circle across the waist of Canada like an outstretched arm. Around its coasts are commodious harbors that invite the trade and commerce of many States, comprising some of the most productive areas of the United States and Canada. Its commercial and military command of the Great Lakes and their shores is absolute when it needs to be made absolute.

On its eastern face the peninsula of Michigan is on the flank of the water-shed of the St. Lawrence River; and upon its western face it confronts the inlet from the Pacific through the western coasts of the British possessions, and holds in easy command the basins of Lake Winnipeg and Hudson's Bay.

If the behests of the people of British descent on this continent shall ever require Canada and the United States to engage in war, or to seriously contemplate that cruel arbiter as the power to decide questions provoked by ambitious rivalries, we would find in Michigan the true point of strategic advantage.

General Cass lived to see the wonderful development of Michigan, and to listen to the undivided opinion of Americans as to the future greatness and natural importance of this strong Commonwealth. Cass and Michigan grew rapidly and with solid growth. Michigan would have grown without the aid of his counsels, it is true, but who can deny that the firm statesmanship of Lewis Cass gave to Michigan and all the other States a high degree of security and peace in many dangerous emergencies? In political affairs Cass took position on the border and in the center of the border line, and looked out, like a true and faithful sentinel would, over the ways by which an enemy might approach. In his attitude towards his compeers he was insulated without being separated from them. He was united in fervent attachment with his countrymen of all classes, while he maintained his individuality with severe dignity.

In his diplomatic career his resources were strong, useful, and abundant, and were employed with the highest advantage to his country. In that service he was measured without disadvantage by comparison with the greatest men of his day. Michigan now comes by invitation of Congress and presents to the United States the statue of the man upon whom she bestows her first and highest honors in this Capitol.

Let these States here assembled welcome her coming with proud congratulations.

Should she return another such as Lewis Cass to this Senate, who would not stand uncovered while he raised his hand and bowed his heart to swear that he would support the Constitution of the United States?

The whole country would feel that in the purity of that pledge the Constitution would find another powerful supporter and defender, whose fealty to it would never relax under temptation nor yield to any human power.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the Senators representing Michigan and Alabama and New Hampshire and our venerable and beloved colleague who has spoken of General Cass from his personal recollection, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], have performed adequately all the duty which this occasion requires of Senators so far as is necessary to mark the public gratitude to the State of Michigan for the gift of this statue of her illustrious citizen. But I think one other observation ought to be made indicating the special cause we have of gratitude to that State for its great wisdom and discrimination in the selection of the artist who has contributed this interesting portraiture to the art treasures of the Capitol.

I have seen the statue, and without claiming for myself any experience or taste which entitles me to pronounce a judgment more than all other men, I think I am not mistaken in affirming that this statue will be regarded always as one of the very finest, if not the very finest, work of its kind which has yet been contributed to our gallery under the joint resolution passed in 1864. It is a figure manifestly accurate in portraiture, and not only that, but it is a figure full of strength, spirit, and life.

The young artist who is the author of this work, although not yet mature in his powers, has already made himself famous by The Minute Man at Concord, one of the very few American statues that are alive; by the beautiful statue of John Harvard, made for the University at Cambridge; by the ideal figures upon the Boston post-office, and by that most wonderful portrait bust which represents and preserves in the memory of those who knew him the venerable features of our illustrious poet and sage, Ralph Waldo Emerson.

The State of Michigan has been both wise and fortunate in the selection of the artist, and that also ought to be mentioned as one of the reasons for the public gratitude to the people of that State.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE. Mr. President, I second the motion for the adoption of the pending resolutions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER].

The resolutions were agreed to unanimously.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 16th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 1198) for the relief of William H. Robertson and Edward L. Hedden, late collectors of customs for the district of the city of New York;

An act (S. 3858) in relation to dead and fallen timber on Indian lands; and

An act (S. 2305) to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the Executive Departments.

CONGRESSIONAL ELECTIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business, being the resolution reported by the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] from the Committee on Privileges and Elections in relation to Congressional elections.

Mr. BROWN. I rise to a question of privilege.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia rises to a question of privilege. Does the Senator from Texas yield?

Mr. COKE. I yield for that.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. BROWN. I present the certificate of the governor of Georgia, countersigned by the secretary of state, under the great seal of that State, of the election of my colleague, Hon. ALFRED H. COLQUITT, by the Legislature of Georgia to serve for the term of six years in the Senate of the United States, to commence with the 4th of March next. I ask that the certificate be read and placed on the files of the Senate.

The credentials were read, and ordered to be filed.

TERRITORY OF OKLAHOMA.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask the Senator from Texas to yield to me for the purpose of making a report from the Committee on Territories.

Mr. COKE. I yield for morning business.

Mr. CULLOM. I am directed by the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10614) to organize the Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes, to report it without amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. BUTLER. I offer a substitute for the bill just reported by the Senator from Illinois, as representing the views of the minority of the Committee on Territories.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What disposition does the Senator from South Carolina desire made of the substitute?

Mr. BUTLER. Let it be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. PLATT. In connection with the report which has just been made, I desire to say that I do not agree to the report, and that I support the substitute which has been offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to say that very early after the substitute is printed I shall seek to call up the bill for consideration.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CULLOM submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Commerce, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMPTON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

DISTRICT JURORS.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senator from Texas to yield to me a moment that I may offer a resolution requesting the President to return a bill to the Senate to allow correction of a clerical error.

Mr. COKE. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. HARRIS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 3640) to amend sections 851, 856, 857, 858, 861, and 862 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia.

THE ELEVENTH CENSUS.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator from Texas yield to me a moment to make a suggestion?

Mr. COKE. I will yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HOAR rose.

Mr. HALE. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I rose, not to interrupt the Senator from Maine, but to say that I think it will be convenient to all the members of the Senate if we can settle now what shall take place in the Senate at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Texas. I suggest that that should be done. I desire to say that after the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Texas or at some other time convenient to the Senate I should like to make a few observations on the pending resolution, but I will not insist upon going on to-day. Indeed, I would prefer not to go on to-day if there be other business which the Senate desires to attend to.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. COKE. For a moment.

Mr. HALE. I only wish to make a suggestion as to the order of business at the end of the remarks of the Senator from Texas. I gave notice last week that to-day, after the morning business, I would ask the Senate to take up the census bill, which Senators will all realize is a matter of great importance. It has been kept along by the ground being occupied by appropriation bills, and the time has clearly come when it ought to be passed.

I hope at the end of the remarks of the Senator from Texas, as no Senator seems desirous upon that subject to go on immediately, that the census bill may be taken up. There are not many amendments, I may say, to the House bill; it was a very carefully guarded bill, and I hope it will take but little time of the body. But every one will see that it is most important that it should be brought on and passed before the next appropriation bill comes up.

Mr. HOAR. Is the Senator not ready now?

Mr. HALE. In answer to a question by the Senator from Massachusetts I can say that I am ready now and have been ready for a week, but the ground has been occupied in other ways. Therefore, I ask that at the end of the remarks of the Senator from Texas the bill I have alluded to may be taken up.

Mr. HOAR. Informally laying aside the resolution of the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. HALE. Informally laying aside that resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to give notice that to-morrow morning after the routine business, whatever may be pending, I shall move to proceed to the consideration and disposition of the conference report on the direct-tax bill. I give the notice now, so that Senators may be prepared, that after the morning business to-morrow I shall move to proceed to the consideration of the report with a view of disposing of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that at the close of the remarks of the Senator from Texas upon the unfinished business, being the resolution reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill for taking the eleventh census.

Mr. HOAR. I understood the Senator to add to that request, the present business being informally laid aside for that purpose.

Mr. HALE. Of course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. So the Chair understood. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

INDEBTEDNESS OF PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. FRYE. What is the position of the Pacific railroad funding bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is on the Calendar.

Mr. FRYE. How has it been displaced from its order before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By a motion to take up the pending resolution, which was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. I should not have supposed that any Senator would have made that motion without preserving the rights of the bill, I being absent for the reason that I was, and it was entirely unnecessary to displace it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reason of the Senator's absence was assigned before the motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. The pending resolution came from the committee of which I am chairman, although reported by another member of the committee. I am quite sure that every member of that committee would agree that the Senator from Maine having been absent in consequence of a domestic affliction, the bill in his charge shall be restored to the place it would have had if he had remained present. He will lose nothing whatever by the taking up of the resolution.

Mr. FRYE. There will be a meeting of the Committee on Pacific Railroads to-morrow morning and I will then have it determined whether that committee will ask for the restoration of the bill to its place. It had been very carefully kept in its place for two or three weeks. I was called away suddenly without being able to come here or communicate with any one touching its condition, and I was very much surprised to find that it had been displaced.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. 139) to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861, and the report of the conference committee thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 7718) for the relief of Milo McCrillis;

A bill (H. R. 11879) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890;

A bill (H. R. 11777) granting the right of way to the Fort Smith, Paris and Dardanelle Railway Company to construct and operate a railroad, telegraph, and telephone line from Fort Smith, Ark., through the Indian Territory, to or near Baxter Springs, in the State of Kansas; and

A bill (H. R. 10240) for the relief of J. Edwin Pilcher.

RETURN OF DIRECT TAXES.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] gave notice that he would seek to dispose finally of the conference report on the direct-tax bill to-morrow. I ask for an order to print 500 copies of the bill as reported by the conference committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

CONGRESSIONAL ELECTIONS.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections in relation to Congressional elections.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, I shall occupy the attention of the Senate as briefly as possible this morning, having already consumed a great deal of time with the matter under discussion.

I have laid before the Senate testimony taken by the Committee on Privileges and Elections which I deemed necessary should be placed before the Senate in order to a proper understanding of the condition of things in Washington County, Texas, and because that evidence had not been submitted in the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections and had not been allowed the weight to which it was justly entitled.

I do not pretend that this testimony is uncontradicted. I do mean to say, however, that the witnesses who deposed to it are the men of character, the men of property, the men of influence, and the controlling men in the county of Washington. I do mean to say that they are men whose testimony would be accepted as truthful upon any question on which they might be called to testify in any community in any State in this Union where their character and their standing were known; and therefore I say that the weight and mass and credit of the testimony that I have laid before the Senate outweigh infinitely that upon which the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections is predicated.

I have always believed that an investigation ordered by the Senate, to be made by one of its committees, when entered upon was a judicial proceeding, was a judicial hearing or in the nature of one, and that all the testimony which goes before the committee upon the matter to be investigated should receive due consideration and be weighed for all that it is worth in summing up the final conclusions of the committee on the subject which the committee is called on to investigate.

If I have a correct understanding of the duties of a committee of this body, I say it respectfully to the honorable Senators composing the Committee on Privileges and Elections, but I say it with all the emphasis of which I am capable, that the committee in this instance has departed from the understanding which the Senate has and which the country has of what were its duties in making the investigation and report. I repeat what I have said on a former occasion, that the report of this committee is one-sided, is partial; it is based upon the testimony of the prosecuting witnesses, and it gives no credit, no consideration, no weight to the exculpatory testimony that was produced before the committee.

The testimony has been laid before the Senate, and in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD has gone to the country. I am willing that the country shall determine which bears inherent evidence, in its body and upon its face, of truth, the testimony relied upon by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, or that which was ignored by that committee. The question is simply one of weight of testimony. On one side are the intelligence, the character, the standing, the influence, and the property of the country where these people live and where they are known; on the other, is the testimony for the most part—for I will not condemn all—but for the most part of people of exactly the opposite character.

Mr. President, I will not deal in generalities; I will go to the specifications of the memorial which this committee were instructed to investigate, and first I will take this specification:

We, your petitioners—

That is, the three memorialists, Stephen A. Hackworth, James L. Moore, and Carl Schutze—

Your petitioners are white citizens of the United States and dared to believe and maintain the right to be Republicans in politics.

For this, their only crime, your petitioners are now exiles from their homes, having been compelled to leave under serious threats of assassination, and abandon their property or accept for it such prices as were proffered them.

Mr. President, I am not going to repeat the testimony, I am not going to reiterate that which has been read for the last three or four days in the Senate Chamber, sworn testimony taken by the Committee on Privileges and Elections and furnished in this volume, but unfortunately not in the committee's report. I will simply refer to it, and gentlemen who have heard the testimony will remember well that of all the testimony read here scarcely a witness failed to say that the memorialists, Hackworth, Moore, and Schutze, were as safe in Washington County as he himself was, that they left home voluntarily, and that they received for their property when they left every dollar that it was worth. The purchaser of the property of Hackworth, who gave Hackworth $1,150 for it, after holding it a year sold it for a thousand dollars, and he said it was all he could get, and Hackworth had for two years been offering it for $1,200.

I give that as a sample with reference to these three persons. They say their property was sacrificed. Moore's property was sold in the same way for its value as was Hackworth's. Schutze had no property, and the testimony all shows scarcely any controversy about it that these men had determined since 1884, when they were beaten for office, to leave Washington County, but concluded they would make another effort in 1886, and remained there for that purpose. They were beaten again, and then they sold out and left voluntarily, as every witness whose testimony I have read to the Senate swears, without compulsion, and when they were in no danger whatever from remaining there.

Mr. President, I shall have very little more to say on this subject, because it seems to me the testimony is so clear, so conclusive, so overwhelming that there is no more room for controversy about it. These men left because they had fallen so low in public estimation, they had become so much the objects of aversion, not to Democrats, not to white men alone, but to many Republicans and to many of the colored people as well, that they could no longer make their living in Washington County, and they left.

I do not think that the Senators who made this report will seriously argue that this allegation of the compulsory exile of these three persons from Washington County is a fact, but will admit that it has been proved that there is no foundation at all for the allegation.

The next charge in the memorial is as to the hanging of three negroes at Brenham and the destruction of three ballot-boxes. I desire to repeat here now what I said in the opening of this debate, that I have no word of excuse, of palliation, or of justification for the lawless men who destroyed those ballot-boxes. I believe that lawlessness of this sort ought to be punished wherever it occurs, but I do say that I do not condemn it any more strongly, I do not regret it any more sincerely, than do the people of Washington County, Texas, where it occurred; and the effort to fasten responsibility upon that people for the lawless acts of a few individuals should not have been made, because it is not sustained by the testimony.

The boxes at three polling places were destroyed, at Graball, at Lott's Store, and at Flewellen, in Washington County. I presume there are some thirty or forty polling places in Washington County. The county in which I reside, voting about the strength of Washington County, has nearly forty polling places. I presume that Washington County has not less than thirty and possibly forty polling places. Two of those boxes, the Graball and Lott's Store boxes, were raided and captured, each one of them by a body of masked and armed men. That is a fact that nobody can successfully deny.

The boxes were captured while the votes were being counted at one of them and the other after the vote had been counted. In the testimony it is shown that every effort was made to discover the men who captured these boxes. In one of the boxes at the time it was raided the testimony shows that 225 votes had been counted, because the capture occurred during the count, and that of these 116 were for Kirk for county judge and 110 for Schutze on the other side, Schutze representing the Republican ticket and Kirk the People's ticket, for which the Democrats voted. When these raids were made they were made in the night by only a few men, some three or four. In one of them there were only three, because the box was captured when one of the officers, accompanied by a friend, was taking it from the country precinct where the votes were cast to Brenham, the county seat. The other was raided by some three or four men armed and with masks on.

I say that there has been not one particle of testimony connecting the people of Washington County with either of these transactions or showing a guilty knowledge on their part of them—not a particle.

Mr. President, that is the testimony. One of the boxes had voted the People's ticket up to the time the raid was made as far as the count had proceeded, giving 116 to 110 for the candidate of the People's ticket against the Republican ticket. The other at the election in 1884 gave a majority for the People's ticket. It is simply a question of fact as to who raided these two boxes, as to who destroyed the ballots, and as to whether or not the people of Washington County are justly chargeable with any responsibility for it.

I assert here that this record shows that the people of Washington County had nothing to do with it; that the raiding of these boxes was the act of bad men, men who ought to have been punished, and men who, if they could be ascertained, would be punished, and that the people of Washington County are not responsible for them. The people of Washington County are as much opposed to this species of lawlessness as gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber. There are bad men in Washington County as there are in every other county in every State in the United States.

Why is it that these transactions in Washington County are selected for investigation here when similar transactions affecting the ballot occur all over the United States, North, South, East, and West, equally criminal? I do not say that ballot-boxes are raided in every section, but I do say that bribery, bold and unblushing, does prevail in every section of this country except down South, for we have no money to bribe with down there. I hear of no Congressional investigation—not one—I hear of no inquiry in the bribery of the last election. Seventy indictments I am told have been found in the good State of Indiana, 90 per cent. of them against Republicans who were indicted for bribery; and yet no man has risen on this floor and asked to have an investigation there. Who will charge the good people of Indiana, who will charge the whole people of the great State of New York, where millions were paid out in bribes in the last Presidential election according to current report, who will charge the good people of the State of Rhode Island where current newspaper reports say bribery to a great extent prevailed in the recent election—who will charge the good people of any of these States with complicity in these crimes?

Why, then, should the people of Washington County be held responsible for raids on ballot-boxes when they are at their homes asleep or attending to their business? In this one county of Washington, in which the raiding was done, one single county out of one hundred and eighty in the entire State in which it is situated, it is sought to hold not only the people of the county but of the whole State responsible; and the report of the committee goes even further and says that this émeute in one single county in one State gives a fair idea of the condition of affairs in the entire South.

Ah, Mr. President, we are all alike in all the sections. We have the same people, we have the same human nature. Climate and circumstances and conditions slightly modify and make slight differences, but they are all in the main alike. In the South the people are more prone to violence than in the North, as the occasional and very rare raids by force on ballot-boxes show, but I have never heard of an election being influenced by bribery in the South.

It is force in the South, it is bribery in the North. The good people of neither section are responsible for these exceptional and comparatively rare offenses. When you come to see the difference between force and bribery you will perceive very clearly that of the two bribery is much more dangerous to our institutions, much more difficult to provide against, productive of very much greater insecurity. You can provide against the raiding of ballot-boxes, which depends on brute force. You can not provide against the corruption of the ballot-box with money. If the South should be inquired into on account of a few ballot-boxes being raided, why should not other sections be inquired into on account of the bribery, notorious and almost open, of voters in the recent election?

I call the attention of the Senate to one great fact, to one great transaction connected with this matter; which is, that the memorialists went to Austin, to the United States district attorney, and told the names of the witnesses as to all these transactions recited in their memorial touching the raids on and destruction of the ballots, and they had the whole power of the Government put in motion to bring to Austin, some hundred miles from where these people lived, witnesses to establish the truth of their allegations.

Witnesses were summoned and went before the grand jury. Indictments were found and those indictments were not quashed. They did not go off the docket on technicalities, but they were tried on their merits, and evey witness desired by these men was summoned, and their attendance enforced. They all appeared at Austin. The persons charged were tried before a Republican judge, who was an honest man but an intense partisan, and they were all acquitted. Every man of them was acquitted whom these memorialists have named in their testimony as men who were concerned in the conspiracy to raid the ballot-boxes and falsify the result of the election of 1886. The men were acquitted before Judge Turner, at Austin, Tex., and the place of the trial was nearly 100 miles from their homes, and the prosecution was an able one, the attorney-general having employed a lawyer of ability to assist in the prosecution. The Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS], in his remarks the other evening, admitted the earnestness, the zeal, and the ability of the prosecution.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the case attempted to be made by the honorable Committee on Privileges and Elections breaks down right here. There was no hearsay evidence at Austin before the Federal court. It was near where the offenses are said to have been committed; it was near the people among whom the offenses were said to have occurred; and the city of Austin, I am safe in saying, has a large Republican population who at least had no unjust prejudices against the prosecutors. The jury was summoned from all over the State, not composed of Washington County people, and every man named by these parties as being privy to the destruction of these ballot-boxes was tried and acquitted.

Mr. President, the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, when this odorous individual, Stephen A. Hackworth, who while he was in office in Washington County was covered all over with indictments for malfeasance and misfeasance in office and the indictments were quashed because the statute did not happen to embrace just such offenses as were described in the indictments—this report says that Mr. Stephen A. Hackworth was honorably acquitted. He was never tried on the merits of the case, but the indictment was defective. This report says that he was honorably acquitted, and the committee go on to show their faith by their works in basing their report mainly upon his testimony.

If Hackworth by the quashing of these indictments was acquitted and was restored to credit, ought not these citizens of Washington County, every one of whom was indicted on the testimony of these memorialists, to stand acquitted also? They were tried on the very question, on the very issue now before us, before a Republican judge and under an able and zealous and earnest prosecution, and I say ought not they to stand acquitted also? And if they are acquitted there is no case before the Senate, because all the parties accused in the testimony of the memorialists were among those indicted and acquitted.

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, while claiming that by the acquittal or the quashing of the indictments against Hackworth he is exonerated and that he is a credible witness, continue to prosecute all the men charged with the offense of conspiracy to destroy the ballot-boxes in Washington County, although they have been tried and acquitted. It is an inconsistency to say the least of it. If one side is acquitted so ought to be the other.

I have been speaking with reference to the Graball and the Lott's Store boxes, which were raided in the night by armed and masked men—one of them by three men who were armed and masked, when the officer was carrying the returns to Brenham, and the other by two or three men while the officers were counting the votes.

So much with reference to these two boxes. With reference to the killing of Bolton at the Flewellen box, it occurred about 11 o'clock at night, and in consequence of the disturbance created by the killing (for the man Bolton was shot down in the room where the officers were counting the votes, just as he came into the door) there was a general scattering of everybody there, and in going they did not stand on the order of going, but went. They scattered the ballots, turned over the boxes, and left everything just as it happened to fall. The ballots, etc., were found the next day scattered over the room. It is charged that Bolton was disguised and armed and accompanied by other armed men who with him entered the room for the purpose of capturing the ballot-boxes.

This charge is stated as a fact in this report, as if there was no controversy about it, when I say—and I do not put my own assertion forward as evidence, but I say it upon the testimony in this volume—that Bolton was not armed, that he was not disguised, and that he went into the room where the vote was being counted as any other citizen would, and as he opened the door was shot down by a negro opposite him with a shotgun.

Bolton was a very popular young man in Washington County; he was a very fine young man, and the manner in which he was killed produced great excitement there. Not only was he shot down, but, as the testimony shows, he was shot down by the advice of Glider and Lockett, two men who were there all day working for the Republican ticket, and by the way, two men who left immediately after the killing of Bolton—left for parts unknown and have not been heard of since, according to the testimony.

Bolton had on what is called a yellow slicker. That is part of "the disguise" spoken of—a yellow slicker, which is an oil-cloth coat worn by the farmers and laboring people all through the South to protect them from the rain and cold; and this was a cool night and Bolton had on one of these oil-cloth slickers, and I refer Senators to the testimony taken—I will not repeat it, because I have read it here—at the coroner's inquest, and I refer to the testimony of a number of other witnesses who were sworn, and who testified that Bolton had on no disguise; that all he had on was a slicker, and after he had been killed a handkerchief was laid over his face. It was put there by some good Samaritan, who found the body lying there lifeless. And yet they say he was disguised, while honest men and good men, officers of the election there, say he had no arms, that he had no pistol, that he was not disguised in any manner, shape, or form any more than anybody else that they could see, and he was shot near the door of the room where the vote was being counted, and he fell at full length across the threshold of the door and lay there so that everybody could see him.

The box where this man was killed is put down as one of the raided boxes. The testimony does not sustain the allegation that that box was raided. Whether the box was raided or not depends upon whether Bolton when killed was masked and armed and about to raid the box. The officers of election and several negroes were present who saw the man killed and saw him after he was killed, all of them swear that there was no disguise about him and no arms. The testimony that there was no disguise, that he had no arms, is absolutely overwhelming in its weight and force; but one negro who at the coroner's inquest swore that he was not disguised, after some time had elapsed and somebody had manipulated him, comes forward and swears that he was disguised and armed.

When the transaction was fresh, when he was swearing in the neighborhood and in the presence of the men who had seen the dead body as well as himself, he swore that there was no disguise on the man and that he had no arms. So I say that this Flewellen box was not raided; the Lott's Store and the Graball boxes were, but by men who have never been identified, notwithstanding the efforts to identify them and punish them, notwithstanding the whole power and force of the Government was brought to bear in the Federal court at Austin, and all the witnesses that money could bring there and all that the process of the court could bring, failed to produce testimony to sustain a conviction.

Mr. President, the raiding of these ballot-boxes, the expulsion of these individual memorialists from Washington County, and the hanging of three negroes at Brenham are the specifications made under the general charges that have been preferred against the people of Washington County. Three negroes were taken out of jail at Brenham and hanged; there is no doubt of that fact, taken by a mob in the dead hour of the night. Turn to this memorial and you will see that the men who signed it say that these negroes were delivered up to a masked mob by the civil authorities of Washington County.

Mr. President, take the testimony of the witnesses who have been sworn in this case, and it will be found that this is the truth of the matter: A negro named Polk Hill was the man who shot and killed Bolton at the Flewellen ballot-box that night. At the time that Polk Hill killed Bolton there were with him some seven or eight other negroes, armed with shotguns.

The killing of Bolton produced a very great excitement. He was a popular young man and it produced a profound excitement throughout the county. Warrants were issued for the arrest of the men who were with Polk Hill. There were eight men arrested under these warrants, taken to Brenham, the county seat, and put in jail. The civil authorities of Washington County, fearing that the lives of these negroes were in danger from popular excitement, sent all of them except Polk Hill to the city of Houston, some 70 or 80 miles off, I believe, and Polk Hill they sent to the Milam County jail for safe keeping.

This was done to protect these negroes against violence. It was done to ward off the danger of lynch law. After awhile—I do not know how long a time intervened—the feeling quieted down, the people ceased to be excited and to talk about it as they had done, and the authorities, not desiring to pay a high rate of board, I presume, charged in a city like Houston for keeping these prisoners, sent down and brought them back and put them in the Brenham jail. They did not send for Polk Hill, the man who committed the murder, the man against whom it was supposed feeling might still exist. He was left in the place of safety where he had been put. The others, not being so guilty as he, it was supposed could be safely brought back to Brenham and kept in jail there, and they were brought back.

I do not know how long they had been back, but they were there, returned there from Houston, when one dark night a body of armed and masked men appeared at the jail. The testimony universally of the witnesses is that no apprehension was being felt about them. They would not have been brought back if any apprehension of their safety had been felt. But on that night those armed and masked men made their appearance at the jail and overpowered the guard. These memorialists say that the civil authorities delivered the prisoners up to the mob. They have alleged falsely. These masked men overpowered the guard, held guns on them, and took out of the jail three of the eight men and hung them. That is the history of that transaction. Polk Hill, the murderer, the man who fired the gun, is alive in Texas now, and in jail.

Mr. GEORGE. Has he not been tried?

Mr. COKE. I do not know whether he has or not. Those three men were taken out and hanged because it was believed that they were present aiding and abetting Polk Hill in the murder of Bolton. Yet this report says that they were hanged in order to destroy testimony as to the raiding of the Flewellen box. The only witness who swore at the coroner's inquest that Bolton was disguised and was armed was one of these eight negroes who was in the Brenham jail at that time, and he was left there and was not taken out and hanged.

I refer you to the testimony of D. C. Giddings, and his testimony is worth something wherever he is known. I refer you to the testimony of the witnesses I have read in the hearing of the Senate. They say universally that when those negroes were taken out and hanged nobody in Washington County ever heard it hinted or suggested that they were hanged in order to get rid of their testimony.

Colonel Giddings says they were hanged because it was believed that they had assisted in the murder of Bolton in cold blood. He says that was what the people believed, and the witnesses whose testimony I have read here swear to the same thing. Colonel Giddings is known here in Washington, he is known here in the Senate Chamber, he is known in the other House, and what he would swear to on any subject which he pretended to be acquainted with, every man who knows him believes; and so the other witnesses who swear to the same facts will be believed.

I call attention to the testimony of Thompson, of Eldridge, of Muller, of Tristram, of all the witnesses whose testimony has been read to the Senate, to the effect that the people of Washington County have not heard a mention or a hint or a suggestion that these negroes were hanged in order to get rid of their testimony. It was the creation of the brain of Hackworth and Schutze and Moore—an afterthought, and nothing else.

Mr. President, it was a deplorable occurrence. It was an occurrence which is deplored by every good man in Washington County, and there are thousands of them. But it was done as these things are so often done in the West, the Northwest, and the Southwest, as they are so often done when blood is demanded for blood.

I will venture the assertion that there is not a county in any State in the South or in the West where there have not been at some time or other unlawful executions of that sort.

Bolton, a young man in the prime of his life and youth, when he walked into that room had his brains shot out by the negro Polk Hill. The best evidence of the conservatism of the civil authorities and people of Washington County is that that man is alive and being dealt with in accordance with law.

Mr. President, that is all there is about this hanging at Brenham. It was the work of an irresponsible mob, done against the will, without the consent, without the knowledge, without the sympathy of the good people of Washington County; and any effort to fasten it upon them, as this report does, upon the perjured testimony of the miscreants who filed this memorial, is an injustice to the Senators themselves who did it.

These are the specifications under the general charge made in the memorial: First, the expulsion of the memorialists from home; next, the raiding of the three ballot-boxes, and lastly, the hanging of the three negroes at Brenham. I have made a very brief review of the testimony on these three points. On the first point, the expulsion of these memorialists, the testimony is clear, overwhelming, convincing, of their degradation, of their vileness, that they were naturally spewed out of the body politic which they infested, not by violence, but by absolutely and perfectly natural causes. They were so mean, they wereso degraded, they were so vile that they felt themselves they had better go elsewhere in order to try to make a living, and they went voluntarily, as the testimony conclusively shows. They got all their property was worth when they went. One or two of them have been back there since and they have not been interrupted. When men come here to the United States Senate and say—

> Your petitioners are white citizens of the United States, and dared to believe and maintain the right to be Republicans in politics.
> For this, their only crime, your petitioners are now exiles from their homes, having been compelled to leave under serious threats of assassination, and abandon their property or accept for it such prices as were proffered them, it does seem that such a declaration, in the face of the fact that the county of Washington from which they say they were expelled gives from 700 to 800 and 900 majority for the Republican ticket, is an absolute absurdity. Because they dared to be Republicans, they say, they had to leave Washington County, in the face of the fact that there are from 600 to 900 majority of Republicans in the county.

Mr. GEORGE. Still remaining?

Mr. COKE. Still remaining, and Riggs Hackworth, the brother of Stephen A. Hackworth, an active, aggressive Republican, was elected a justice of the peace in the election of 1886, and is exercising and discharging the duties of his office there now. An active, aggressive Republican, he was elected justice of the peace in the county-seat precinct of Brenham, and is discharging the duties of the office now and doing well, yet these miscreants tell the Senate of the United States that they were compelled to leave Washington County for the only crime of being Republicans.

Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the great center of interest in the election of 1886, when the disturbances occurred which have been investigated, was in the contest between Kirk on the People's ticket and Schutze on the Republican ticket for the county judgeship of Washington County. That was the contest which created all the excitement. The Senate will remember that I have heretofore detailed the circumstances under which in 1884 the Republicans and Democrats combined and made a People's ticket in order to oust Hackworth, Schutze, and Moore and their following from the offices in which they had been plundering the people, although Washington County gave from 600 to 900 majority for Grant, for Hayes, and for Garfield.

It was in 1884 that this combination was made. Schutze, Hackworth, and Moore had no means. They were political agitators among the lowest population of the county and the most ignorant negroes. They eked out a precarious living in the connty from 1884, when they were expelled from office, until 1886, when they concluded that they would make another desperate effort. Hackworth had been covered all over with indictments for his official villainies. He was not a candidate again, but Schutze was put forward by Hackworth for county judge of Washington County, and Kirk was placed on the People's ticket, composed of Republicans and Democrats. Kirk on the People's ticket and Schutze on the Republican ticket made the contest which excited all the feeling in the county.

Now, who was Schutze? I told you a day or two ago who he was. The counter-memorial that was signed by the citizens of Washington County in defense of themselves against the slanderous charges of this infamous trio says of Schutze what I shall read. Here is what the people of Washington County say about Schutze and Schutze's record before he came there:

> Schutze, it is believed, came to Brenham about 1871, as alleged by him. We are informed that he was the keeper of a restaurant in the city of Austin before he came to Brenham. He was there arrested under the charge of swindling, and after several weeks of imprisonment was released after being made to disgorge.

He went down to Washington County. He there got into the office of justice of the peace, and the testimony is that he employed negroes to go out and inveigle other negroes into games of chance in order to get an opportunity to indict them.

Mr. GEORGE. You say that is in the testimony?

Mr. COKE. Of course. I repeat what I have read before. It is in the testimony; and other witnesses swear that he employed men to inveigle negroes into gambling and then issued warrants for them, and then the testimony says that they would pay him privately, so that his docket did not show it, to dismiss the charges. Every sort of immorality, every sort of rascality and villainy is charged against him and is proved against him in the testimony that I hold in my hand.

One witness when asked as to his standing says, "Oh, he is a low, vile man." Another when asked his character says, "It is as bad as it can be." He was a German and many of these witnesses were Germans living in Washington County. Some of these witnesses were Union soldiers, one of them a wounded soldier who is drawing a pension from the Government. Many of them are Republicans. The infamy of the man is established beyond question or doubt, and yet Hackworth or he and Moore contrived to get him at the head of the Republican ticket for the chief judicial office of Washington County, and the great center of interest in that election was the contest between him and Kirk.

Mr. President, I can not, I never will, justify the raiding of ballot-boxes. I will never justify lynch law. I believe the men who do these things ought to be punished for them. But if ever any people in the world could possibly be justified for any such conduct it would be when such a monster of immorality, of corruption, of depravity, and of vileness as this man Schutze is threatened to be foisted on them as their chief judicial officer. Yet if you look through this report of the honorable Committee on Privileges and Elections you will rise from its perusal eminently ignorant of any such facts as I am telling you, which have been proved conclusively and overwhelmingly by the testimony in this volume.

Mr. President, look at Washington County, see the character of her population, one-third German, considerably less than a third white Americans, and the balance negroes. It is exactly the place for the race issue, just the country for the friction that comes from the contact of different races and different nationalities. It is the oldest county in Texas. It is the county in which the Texas declaration of independence was promulgated. It was the seat of wealth and culture before the war. In the destruction of values that has followed since the war people have been reduced, many of them, to poverty who formerly were in affluent circumstances. That county has in it a German population that is not inferior in intelligence, in conservatism, in character, to the German population to be found in any other county in any other State in this Union, and it has a native American white population which is equal to any that can be found anywhere. It has also this great mass of negro population, and in this county of differing and diversified nationalities and race the demagogue and the agitator and those who are willing to make money and pelf out of social disorder find an inviting field for their nefarious operations. These bold, bad men, Hackworth, Schutze, and Moore, worked it for all it was worth. In 1884, as I have shown, they were by a combination of the honest men of the county, irrespective of party, expelled from office, and were again defeated in 1886 by the same means.

They could not hold up any longer; they had nothing to live on; they had to go somewhere to make a livelihood. They had fallen so low because of the vileness of their characters that they could not expect patronage of any sort from the people of Washington County, and they left; and desiring to get per diem as witnesses and to pose as martyrs here at the national capital, in the hope of getting some sort of recognition from the Republican party when it should come into power, they came here and presented this memorial, every word of which in the spirit and intent with which they uttered it has been proved to be false.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] said a day or two ago that people ought to be content to be judged by their peers in the jury box. I concur with him in that opinion. These people in Washington County ask that they be judged by theirs, and as you have not here the conditions they are surrounded by and by which they ought to be judged, they ask you to surround yourselves, if you can, in imagination with the circumstances that environ them when you come to judge of their conduct.

The county judge of Washington County exercises an extensive jurisdiction, and especially he has general jurisdiction over the estates of deceased persons, over county roads, over all financial matters of the county, and over everything pertaining to the business administration of the county. When this man Schutze, vile, low, a "moral leper," as one witness called him, was threatened to be foisted on the county as county judge, it is not wonderful that a few men were found in Washington County less discreet than others who were willing to do the unlawful acts which have been the subject of this investigation.

Senators who live in States that for two or three hundred years have been educated and habituated to law and order ought to remember that in the newer States and Territories of the South and Southwest, where especially this great issue of race confronts the people, they ought not to be judged by the same rules that apply in their communities.

I call the attention of the Committee on Privileges and Elections to the fact that Washington County is but one county out of one hundred and eighty in the State of Texas, and that Washington County votes only some 5,500 out of a vote of nearly or quite 400,000 in Texas. If with the energy and zeal and unscrupulousness and malice of these memorialists only one case of this sort can be found, I ask Senators if instead of being evidence of a bad state of affairs it is not evidence that we have a very respectable condition of things in the State of Texas?

Something was said by the Senator from New York in the conclusion of his remarks the other day about the murder of Joe Hoffmann in Washington County. The murder of Joe Hoffmann is a subject that the committee was not authorized to inquire into. So far as I am concerned I wish it had been, and I wish the committee had inquired into it. My information is that the shot which killed Joe Hoffmann was not aimed at him. It killed him, though, and a man by the name of Holt. My information is that Holt was the man intended to be killed according to the general supposition. Holt was a Democrat and always had been. He was a very active and aggressive man. He had been in a number of difficulties in some of which men had been killed. Holt was a man whose personal prowess was feared, and he had enemies, and the belief exists among those who are conversant with the circumstances that the shot was fired to kill Holt and not Joe Hoffmann. The Senator from New York gave his impression and belief about it; I give mine.

Leaving this Joe Hoffmann matter, because it has no business here in this discussion, it is in proof by all the witnesses that the election in 1886 in the daytime and until the polls closed was perfectly quiet; that there was no disturbance anywhere. There was no disturbance that anybody gave any account of in any of the testimony, and I have gone over it all.

Mr. President, when the subject-matter of this investigation comes to be boiled down, and we get at the pith and marrow of it, the matter complained of here by these memorialists was the work of a few men, perhaps not a dozen in all, who violated the laws of the State and of the county and the public sentiment of the country in doing what they did, and the effort to put that upon the people of Washington County, as made in this report, and upon the State of Texas, and to characterize the entire South with it, is one that the Senators who made the report will not hereafter refer to as the part of their life-work upon which they are entitled to the greatest amount of credit.

Mr. President, I have just one thing more to say with reference to the general race question in the South, and it is this: You can no more regulate by statute the race question than you can regulate the coming and going of the seasons by law. The Great Architect of the universe made men as they are. He made the races as they are. He implanted in them their instincts, their capabilities. He made some strong and some weak, and you can not by a law weaken the strong and strengthen the weak so as to put one above the other. He made the Anglo-Saxon as he is. He made him with a brain to conceive and a nerve to execute and a will that has made him the master wherever his foot has been planted. No law can change it; no statute can modify it or regulate it. It is a fact as fixed as any other fact in creation.

The framers of our Constitution knew the race for whom they were preparing an instrument of organic law, and they made the Constitution for the men who constituted the country. They knew for whom they were legislating in an organic way when they reserved to the States and the municipalities the powers of local self-government and delegated to the General Government the powers necessary for the common defense and general welfare of all the States. They knew they were legislating for a people who were capable in the highest degree of self-government, and while they threw wide open the gates to immigrants from every nation in the world, they legislated upon the theory that the race did not inhabit the earth that could come here and dominate the Anglo-Saxon people of this country under such a Constitution.

The right of local self-government is inviolable in the Constitution of the United States. All we ask, all that any man asks in the South, is that the Constitution of the United States be observed. There are weak white men as there are weak black men. The stronger white men dominate the weak, in accordance with law, as the stronger race dominates the weaker races of other colors. All we ask is to stand by the right of local self-government as reserved and established in the Constitution of the United States.

The black man is as free as the white man. There has been something said recently about taking the right of suffrage from him. For one, while I would never have given it to him until he was prepared for it, now that he has got it I would not take it from him if it was in my power to do it. I would defend him in the possession and enjoyment of it. Giving him the ballot is one of those things that once done can not be undone. He has the ballot, which is his shield of defense. Whenever a negro feels like wielding the force of his ballot in his defense he always can do it, and always does it.

If the superior intelligence, the superior virtue, the superior property-holding of the white man give him the advantage under the laws and under the Constitution, he is entitled to it. Hereafter the negro may gain it. If in a contest between the races virtue, intelligence, and property shall be the factors which determine who shall be supreme, if the negro can get ahead of us you will find that he will do it.

Let us alone. Do not uphold such men as Schutze and Hackworth, these agitators; men who go down among the ignorant riff-raff of the country and excite and disturb them, not for the public good, not for public ends, but for their own base and infamous purposes. Do not take that sort of men up, who are unworthy of credit, outcast from society, and strengthen them for a war upon us. Do not take those people up, for when you do give them aid and comfort you are stirring strife; you are liberating and turning loose upon the people where they come from the very worst elements of society. But let the country govern itself; let the States govern themselves; let the municipalities govern themselves; and when, by mere force of public opinion, such men as the creatures who presented this memorial are spewed out do not put them back upon the people.

Let us alone, Mr. President. If I had to say how this race question should be settled I would adopt the language attributed by a newspaper in an interview the other day to the honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]. I thought it was worthy of the sagacity for which I believe he is distinguished far beyond the men ordinarily in this country. He says the way to end that question is to let the people of each State attend to that question as a local concern of their own. I do not know whether he was correctly represented or not, but that was the representation made of what he said on this question. Whether it is his opinion or not, it is mine.

Let the people of each State alone. Let the men control who know each other, the men who are peers, the men who are raised together, the men who are neighbors, the citizens of the community, and the citizens of the State. They understand all the questions better than anybody else can; let them settle it. You can not formulate a statute to settle it, but they can settle it and they will settle it, with the aid of time. Each day adds to their experience, and each year they will profit by the experience of the year before, and every year they are becoming more conservative, more and more wise.

Mr. President, I have consumed a great deal more time than I intended, and I desire to conclude what I have to say in a very few words. If you will let the people of the South alone, if you will give no aid and comfort to agitators who disturb the public peace in that country, this race question will be settled sooner than you think. The negroes will divide; they will not be solid. The white men will divide; they will not be solid. And the negroes will enlist the interest and the sympathy of those who vote with them of the white men and they will take care of themselves. They are acquiring property; they are becoming educated.

The State of Texas, slandered by these men and arraigned here in this memorial, has paid since 1865 $4,000,000 solely for the education of colored people. We have a school system now as good as the system of any State in the Union, and the negroes are equal participants with the whites in the benefits of it.

The negroes are being educated. They are getting so that demagogues and base men can not lead a great many of them.

Just let us alone, and I venture the assertion that we will make better citizens of the negro population than any legislation can possibly do. We are bound to them and they to us by ties which we can appreciate. Right here in Washington County, did I not read in testimony to you yesterday of two or three colored witnesses who said that they always had to go to the white people, and especially to the Democrats, to get them to go on their bonds, to get their assistance in their litigation, and everything of that sort? The kindliest possible feeling exists between the races all over the South.

The negroes are docile, they are confiding and conservative until a bad man goes in among them who is able to enlist and abuse their confidence and then he can convert them into devils.

Let us alone. With equality before the law, which every negro in the South has; with an equal share in the school fund, which every negro child with us has; with an equal vote with every white man in the selection of officers, with perfect freedom of individual action, these people are being educated, they are growing more civilized, they are becoming better citizens.

Just let us alone; just let the negroes take care of themselves. If they are left to take care of themselves there will not one of them get into a difficulty where twenty do now in the disturbances that are created all over the South just before every election. There will not one in twenty of them get into any sort of trouble that do now. Good feeling will exist between the whites and the blacks, and they will get along better, and those whom God has in His creation of men and of the world decreed by the structure and organization of their brain and of their muscle, whether white or black, shall rule, will rule as He has built and equipped them to rule.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COKE. I decline to yield for a question. I do not desire to be abrupt to the Senator, but I decline to be questioned. I prefer to go on and conclude my remarks.

The day will come, Mr. President, when this question will be settled, when this race question and this sectional question will find a solution. It is not now; it will come when some man arises high enough and broad enough and virtuous enough and patriotic enough and courageous enough to take hold of it and impress upon the people of these United States the folly, the ruinous consequences of keeping up this eternal strife, one who will treat this race question as the great American question it is; high above party politics. That man will come. He will come, and I know not whence he will come. He can not come from the South; he must come from the North or the East. When he comes, he will come not with a jeweled crown upon his head, nor with a royal scepter in his hand, but for all that he will come with the homage of every man, woman, and child in this broad country poured out to him, and they will crown him with the highest civic honors of the Republic and hail him as the great pacificator and benefactor of his country.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. I desire simply to ask the Senator from Maine to allow me to take the floor on the pending resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent of the Senate, at the close of the remarks of the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] was to move the census bill.

Mr. HOAR. I do not propose to proceed this afternoon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Massachusetts as entitled to the floor when the resolution next comes up for consideration.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution at this time.

The joint resolution (S. R. 137) providing for additional telegraphic facilities in the city of Washington during the inaugural ceremonies on the 4th day of March, 1889, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 138) to print 10,000 copies of the compilation of the inaugural addresses of the Presidents of the United States, from George Washington to Benjamin Harrison, for the first century of Presidential inaugurations, with authenticated incidents connected therewith, biographical sketches of the Presidents from official sources, together with steel-plate portraits of the Presidents and steel-plate illustrations of the Capitol and White House; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BLACKBURN introduced a bill (S. 3977) to pay the claims of David W. Bouldin; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3978) to pay E. H. Martin for property seized by the United States; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORGAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12008) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, to report it with sundry amendments, and I submit a report in writing to accompany the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be printed.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to give notice that at the earliest possible moment to-morrow I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of this bill if the census bill is disposed of. I suppose the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] will call that up in the morning at the earliest opportunity if it is not disposed of to-day.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to give notice again that if the Senate intends to pass the direct-tax bill it must be done to-morrow, because it is the last day. The report of the committee of conference has already been adopted by the Senate and it is pending on a motion to reconsider, and I therefore intend to call it up to-morrow morning after the routine business and insist on its consideration.

Mr. ALLISON. That is a privileged motion.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is a privileged motion.

Mr. HALE. I shall push the Senate to continue the consideration of the census bill until it is finished. I propose to go on as far as possible to-night, to complete it before adjournment, if possible.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. 2737) granting a pension to Anna Krumpholz;
A bill (H. R. 4203) granting a pension to the widow of Adam Shrake;
A bill (H. R. 5390) granting a pension to John Limeric;

A bill (H. R. 12540) to increase the pension of Theodore White; and
A bill (H. R. 12542) for the relief of the heirs of Noah W. Yoder.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of the Interior, communicating, in answer to a resolution of the Senate of August 29, 1888, information as to the extent to which the division of the waters of the Platte and Arkansas Rivers and their tributaries in Colorado for irrigation and other purposes affects the flow of waters of those streams in the lower valleys; which was referred to the Select Committee on Irrigation and the Reclamation of Arid Lands, and ordered to be printed.

DISTRICT POLICE-COURT JURY.

Mr. SPOONER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3132) to provide for trial by jury in the police court of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 1, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 2.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment, so that section 2 will read:

"SEC. 2. That if upon the trial of any such cause as aforesaid in the said police court an exception be taken by or in behalf of the defendant to any ruling or instruction of the court on matter of law the same shall be reduced to writing at the time, or it may be entered on the minutes of the judge and afterwards settled in such manner and within such time as now provided by rule of the supreme court of the District of Columbia in cases in that court, and then stated in writing in a bill of exceptions, with so much of the evidence as may be material to the question or questions raised, which said bill of exceptions shall be signed by the judge of the said police court. Any party aggrieved by any order or judgment made or pronounced by said court in a case in which under the law the accused is entitled to a trial by jury, may, if the same involve the merits of the proceeding, appeal therefrom to the general term of the supreme court, and the clerk of the police court shall forthwith send up copies of the information or complaint, with all the proceedings thereon, duly certified, and upon such appeal the general term shall review such order or judgment, and affirm or reverse the same, as shall be just: Provided, however, That no appeal shall be allowed after thirty days from and after the signing of such bill of exceptions as aforesaid: And provided further, That the judge of the police court may stay execution of the judgment of the said court upon the entering by the defendant into a recognizance with sufficient surety, to be approved by said judge, conditioned for his appearance at the general term of said supreme court then in session, or if no such general term be in session, then the next general term, there to prosecute the said writ of error and abide by and perform the judgment of said supreme court in the premises; but nothing contained in this section shall be construed as repealing section 1073 of the Revised Statutes so far as the same relate to cases in which under the law the defendant is not entitled to a trial by jury."

And the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 4, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 5, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 6, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 7, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 8, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 9, and agree to the same.

CHAS. J. FAULKNER,
JNO. C. SPOONER,
C. B. FARWELL,
Conferees on the part of the Senate.

JNO. J. HEMPHILL,
BARNES COMPTON,
WM. W. GROUT,
Conferees on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

THE ELEVENTH CENSUS.

Mr. HALE. Now I ask that the census bill, which it was agreed should be taken up, shall be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent of the Senate, at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Texas the pending business was to be laid aside for the consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 1659) to provide for taking the eleventh and subsequent censuses.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I rise for the purpose of asking the Senator from Maine if he will yield to a motion for an executive session.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator will not push that request. I am very desirous to go on for half an hour or perhaps an hour with the census bill, and we may be able to complete it before adjournment.

Mr. HARRIS. I simply rose to ask the Senate from Maine if it was agreeable to him to let me make that motion.

Mr. HALE. I would rather go on to-night with this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HALE. Now I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be read for action on the committee amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length in Committee of the Whole, and if there be no objection the amendments of the committee will be acted upon as they are reached in the text.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Eleventh Census with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 4, after the word "taken," to strike out "on or" and insert "as;" so as to read:

That a census of the population, wealth, and industry of the United States shall be taken as of the date of June 1, 1890.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 7, after "chief clerk," to insert "and one disbursing clerk;" in line 8, after the word "salary," to insert "each;" and in line 9, after the word "division," to strike out "and one disbursing clerk;" so as to read:

SEC. 3. The Superintendent of Census shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; and he shall receive an annual salary of $6,000; and for the purposes of taking the eleventh census of the United States the Secretary of the Interior may from time to time, as the necessity therefor arises, appoint a chief clerk and one disbursing clerk of the Census Office, at an annual salary each of $2,500, two stenographers, ten chiefs of division, at an annual salary each of $2,000, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 27, after the word "census," to insert "or at an earlier date, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior;" so as to read:

And upon such compilation and publication of said census, or at an earlier date, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, the period of service of said clerks and employés shall end.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, after the word "thereof," in line 40, to add:

All examinations for appointment and promotion under this act shall be in the discretion and under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, line 8, before the word "number," to strike out "total;" so as to read:

The number of supervisors shall not exceed one hundred and seventy-five.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, line 9, after the words "one hundred and seventy-five," to strike out:

Each supervisor shall, before entering upon the duties of his office, take and subscribe the following oath or affirmation: "I, ——— ———, supervisor, do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support the Constitution of the United States, and perform and discharge the duties of the office of supervisor of census according to law, honestly and correctly, to the best of my ability;" which oath shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of the Interior.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

The Superintendent and the supervisors shall, before entering upon the duties of their offices, respectively, take and subscribe the following oath or affirmation: I, ——— ——— (Superintendent or supervisor, as the case may be), do solemnly swear or affirm that I will support the Constitution of the United States, and perform and discharge the duties of the office of (Superintendent or supervisor, as the case may be), according to law, honestly and correctly, to the best of my ability; which oaths shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the quotation marks be retained in the paragraph on page 5 from line 11 to line 15?

Mr. HALE. I think not. They should be omitted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will be omitted.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of section 5.

Mr. HALE. At the end of section 5 I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of section 5 it is proposed to add:

Whenever it shall appear that any portion of the enumeration and census provided for in this act has been negligently or improperly taken and is by reason thereof incomplete, the Superintendent of the Census, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, may cause such incomplete and unsatisfactory enumeration and census to be amended or made anew under such methods as may in his discretion be practicable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of section 6.

Mr. HALE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in after line 12, on page 7, which was left out by accident.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 6, line 12, after the word "census," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That in the aggregate no supervisor shall be paid less than the sum of $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on the Eleventh Census was, in section 8, line 22, after the word "judge," to insert "or clerks;" so as to read:

Which said oath or affirmation may be administered by any judge or clerk of a court of record, or any justice of the peace, or notary public empowered to administer oaths; which oath, duly authenticated, shall be forwarded to the Supervisor of Census before the date fixed herein for the commencement of the enumeration.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 10, line 1, after the words "shall be," to strike out the word "further;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 10. And it shall be the duty of each enumerator to forward the original schedules, duly certified, to the supervisor of census of his district, as his returns under the provisions of this act.

The next amendment was, in section 11, line 7, after the word "returned," to insert "and for each surviving soldier or widow returned 5 cents;" so as to read:

The compensation of enumerators shall be ascertained and fixed as follows: In subdivisions, where the Superintendent of Census shall deem such allowance sufficient, an allowance not exceeding 2 cents for each living inhabitant, 2 cents for each death reported, 15 cents for each farm, and 20 cents for each establishment of productive industry enumerated and returned, and for each surviving soldier or widow returned 5 cents, may be given in full compensation for all services.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask the chairman of the committee what provison is made for ascertaining who are the surviving soldiers' widows? Does the bill permit a mere voluntary statement, or does it require a statement to be made under oath? I refer to the amendment in section 11, lines 7 and 8.

Mr. HALE. That is made a part of the regular schedule, and in another portion of the bill it is provided what that information shall be, that it shall contain the organization in which the soldier served and the length of his service. It is taken like every other piece of information that is incorporated in the regular schedules.

Mr. REAGAN. I understand that; but my inquiry was as to whether this information is to be given on oath.

Mr. HALE. It is like all the other information that is given.

Mr. REAGAN. Is there a provision that all the information given is to be under oath? I should think if we are to take mere volunteer statements we may find a great many soldiers' widows.

Mr. HALE. It is like every other interrogatory that is addressed in this inquiry. We must depend largely on the vigilance of the enumerators.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on the Eleventh Census was, in section 11, line 12, after the word "enumeration," to strike out "For" and insert "Rates of compensation for;" and in line 13, after the word "subdivisions," to strike out "rates of compensation;" so as to read:

Provided, That the subdivisions to which the above rate of compensation shall apply must be designated by the Superintendent of Census at least one month in advance of the enumeration. Rates of compensation for all other subdivisions shall be fixed in advance of the enumeration by the Superintendent of Census, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, according to the difficulty of enumeration, having reference to the nature of the region to be canvassed and the density or sparseness of settlement, or other considerations pertinent thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 11, line 34, before the word "time," to insert the word "the;" so as to read:

The Superintendent of Census shall prescribe uniform methods and suitable forms for keeping accounts of the number of people enumerated or of the time occupied in field-work for the purpose of ascertaining the amounts due to enumerators, severally, under the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 12, after the words "may be," at the end of line 2, to insert "according to estimates based on the tenth census;" so as to read:

SEC. 12. That the subdivision assigned to any enumerator shall not exceed 4,000 inhabitants, as near as may be, according to estimates based on the tenth census. The boundaries of all subdivisions shall be clearly described by civil divisions, rivers, roads, public surveys, or other easily-distinguished lines.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 13, line 8, after the word "fined," to strike out "in a sum;" in line 12, after the word "years," to strike out "or by fine" and insert "and be fined;" and in line 16, after the word "fined," to strike out "in a sum;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 13. That any supervisor or enumerator who, having taken and subscribed the oath required by this act, shall, without justifiable cause, neglect or refuse to perform the duties enjoined on him by this act, or shall, without the authority of the Superintendent, communicate to any person not authorized to receive the same, any information gained by him in the performance of his duties, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined not exceeding $500; or, if he shall willfully and knowingly swear or affirm falsely, he shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and, on conviction thereof, shall be imprisoned not exceeding three years, and fined not exceeding $800; or if he shall willfully and knowingly make false certificates or fictitious returns, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction of either of the last-named offenses, he shall be fined not exceeding $5,000 and be imprisoned not exceeding two years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 14, line 3, before the word "employment," to insert "appointment or;" in line 4, after the word "clerk," to insert "or other employé," and in line 6, after the word "clerk," to insert "or other employé;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 14. That if any person shall receive or secure to himself any fee, reward, or compensation as a consideration for the appointment or employment of any person as enumerator or clerk or other employé, or shall in any way receive or secure to himself any part of the compensation provided in this act for the services of any enumerator or clerk or other employé, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $3,000, or be imprisoned not more than one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 15, line 3, after the word "district," to insert "or subdivision;" in line 4, after the words "then any," to strike out "agent" and insert "representative;" so as to read:

SEC. 15. That each and every person more than twenty years of age, belonging to any family residing in any enumeration district or subdivision, and in case of the absence of the heads and other members of any such family, then any representative of such family shall be, and each of them hereby is, required, if thereto requested by the Superintendent, supervisor, or enumerator, to render a true account to the best of his or her knowledge of every person belonging to such family, in the various particulars required by law, and whoever shall willfully fail or refuse shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in a sum not exceeding $100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 15, line 13, before the word "agent," to strike out "general;" in line 14, before the word "director," to strike out "managing;" in the same line, before the word "officer," to strike out "general;" in line 19, before the word "willfully," to insert the word "shall;" in line 20, after the word "information," to strike out "such officer or agent;" and in line 21, after the word "fined," to strike out "in any sum;" so as to read:

And every president, treasurer, secretary, agent, director, or other officer of every corporation from which answers to any of the schedules provided for by this act are herein required, who shall, if thereto requested by the Superintendent, supervisor, or enumerator, willfully neglect or refuse to give true and complete answers to any inquiries authorized by this act, or shall willfully give false information, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and on conviction thereof shall be fined not exceeding $10,000, to which may be added imprisonment for a period not exceeding one year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 16, line 3, after the word "jurisdiction," to strike out "where such offenses shall have been committed;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 16. That all fines and penalties imposed by this act may be enforced by indictment or information in any court of competent jurisdiction.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 17, line 11, before the word "schedules," to insert "form of the;" so as to read:

SEC. 17. That the schedules of inquiries at the eleventh census shall be the same as those contained in section No. 2206 of the Revised Statutes of the United States of 1878, as amended by section 17 of the act entitled "An act to provide for taking the tenth and subsequent censuses," approved March 3, 1879, with such changes of the subject-matter, emendations, and modifications as may be approved by the Secretary of the Interior; it being the intent of this section to give to said Secretary full discretion over the form of the schedules of such inquiries.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 17, line 14, after the word "taken," to strike out "in the same" and insert "on a special;" and in line 15, after the word "names," to insert "organizations, and length of service;" so as to read:

Provided, however, That said Superintendent shall, under the authority of the Secretary of the Interior, cause to be taken on a special schedule of inquiry, according to such form as he may prescribe, the names, organizations, and length of service of those who had served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States in the war of the rebellion, and who are survivors at the time of said inquiry, and the widows of soldiers, sailors, or marines.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 17, line 19, after the word "marines," to insert:

And provided, That the population schedule shall include an inquiry as to the number of negroes, mulattoes, quadroons, and octoroons.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 17, after the word "census," in line 34, to insert:

He shall also, at the time of the general enumeration herein provided for, or prior thereto, as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, collect the statistics of and relating to the recorded indebtedness of private corporations and individuals, and make report thereon to Congress; and he shall collect, from official sources, information relating to animals not on farms.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 17, line 41, to change the word "volums" to "volumes;" in line 45, after the words "public indebtedness," to insert "recorded indebtedness;" so as to read:

The only volumes that shall be prepared and published in connection with said census shall relate to population and social statistics relating thereto, the products of manufactories, mining, and agriculture, mortality and vital statistics, valuation and public indebtedness, recorded indebtedness, "and to statistics relating to railroad corporations, incorporated express, telegraph, and insurance companies."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. The quotation marks should be erased.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will be omitted in the enrolling of the bill, if there be no objection.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on the Eleventh Census was, in section 17, line 47, after the words "a list of," to insert "the names, organizations, and length of service of;" so as to read:

"A list of the names, organizations, and length of service of surviving soldiers, sailors, and marines, and the widows of soldiers, sailors, and marines."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. There are more quotation marks there that I do not understand the use of.

Mr. HALE. I have just asked that they all be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will be omitted in the enrollment of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on the Eleventh Census was, in section 18, line 14, after the word "manufacturing," to insert "mining;" so as to read:

Whenever he shall deem it expedient the Superintendent of the Census may withhold the schedules for manufacturing, mining, and social statistics from the enumerators of the several subdivisions, and may charge the collection of these statistics upon experts and special agents, to be employed without respect to locality.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 18, line 25, after the word "his," to strike out "judgement" and insert "judgment."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 18, line 36, before the word "traveling," to insert "necessary;" so as to read:

Provided, That the same shall in no case exceed $6 per day and actual necessary traveling expenses.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine what is meant by the committee by the phrase "their economic relations," in line 19 of this paragraph? What is the precise idea the committee would convey by that phrase? In regard to the fisheries, for instance, would it include the matter which has been in dispute in the Senate in relation to the nationality of the persons engaged in that particular employment, etc.?

Mr. HALE. It is not intended that anything of that kind shall be gone into in that sense. It is only in the narrow sense of the word that the Senator's suggestion would apply.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator be kind enough to state what he means by "their economic relations?"

Mr. HALE. I will send for a dictionary and tell the Senator at a later period.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator says he does not know, I will let it pass.

Mr. HALE. I do not say that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator objects to the word "economic," I shall not oppose striking it out. It has no force under this plan of taking the census.

Mr. HOAR. I put the question to the Senator hardly seriously at first, but it does seem to me, speaking seriously, that that is a very vague and indefinite phrase to be the direction and guide of executive officers in the discharge of such a duty as this, and I should think the words ought to be stricken out.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator has any idea that that phrase will give rise to too broad an investigation or that it will open the course that was taken by the last census to be pursued, I have no objection to its being stricken out.

Mr. HAWLEY. May I ask the Senator what is the necessity for the whole, not only the words "their economic relations," but the whole of it:

And said Superintendent may employ experts and special agents to investigate.

Suppose you strike out what follows, and leave it, as it would be then:

May employ experts and special agents to investigate the manufacturing, railroad, fishing, mining, cattle, and other industries of the country, etc.

It seems to me it would be better to strike out the whole sentence.

Mr. HALE. That is what I suggest.

Mr. HAWLEY. Do you want to strike out the whole sentence?

Mr. HOAR. Strike out only the words "economic relations."

Mr. HAWLEY. Why not strike out the whole sentence? How is he going to investigate the railroads, etc.? Their statistics are provided for elsewhere.

Mr. HOAR. Where?

Mr. HAWLEY. I suppose they are. "Investigation" does not mean "enumeration."

Mr. HALE. If the condition of these corporations, their annual returns, the amount of capital employed, the amount of labor, the values moved by them, and all these things are to be investigated, that can not be done by the ordinary enumerators. The Senator will see that, and therefore it is necessary to provide for experts. This is the provision that authorizes to be embodied into the census what I take it no Senator would object to. If the Senator from Massachusetts believes that the words "economic relations" would make too broad a field, the word "relations" may be left standing, striking out "economic."

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me I will make a suggestion—I will not press it against his larger experience and study of this question—whether it would not be well to strike out, after the words "special agents," the words "to investigate in their economic relations" and insert "to collect the statistics of manufacturing, railroad, fishing, mining, cattle, and other industries of the country, and telegraph, express, transportation, and insurance companies as he may designate and require."

That will put the railroad and manufacturing, fishing, and cattle, and mining, and other industries on the same level, the same condition which the bill now puts telegraph, express, transportation, and insurance companies. There would seem to be at first blush no reason for making the distinction between the statistics of a railroad company and the statistics of a transportation company.

Mr. HALE. I will say to the Senator that some fault was found with the last census because the conditions of manufacturing and other corporations were not fully gone into and were not given in a way that would show the entire facts. I think when these investigations are made as to these companies, they ought to go pretty thoroughly into them and show what their investment is, what their plant is, and all that; and if the Senator narrows it too much and leaves it simply like the condition of the telegraph and express companies, he may not get just what the country wants.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me I am not narrowing it, but broadening it. To collect these statistics must be larger than to investigate one particular relation, to wit, the "economic relations," whatever they may be, and neither of us has any very distinct idea of what that means.

Mr. HALE. I should hardly think, from my knowledge of the way the word "statistics" is applied, that that would be considered as broader than the phrase "economic relations."

Mr. HOAR. I will leave it, then, "to investigate and ascertain the statistics." That will include both. I would strike out the words "economic relations," which are narrower words, and which nobody comprehends the meaning of with any precision.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HOAR. I move, after the word "investigate," to strike out the words "in their economic relations," and insert in lieu thereof the words "and ascertain the statistics of," and then I will move to strike out the words "and the statistics," in line 21.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 18, line 19, after the word "investigate," it is proposed to strike out "in their economic relations" and insert "and ascertain the statistics of;" so as to read:

And said Superintendent may employ experts and special agents to investigate and ascertain the statistics of the manufacturing, railroad, fishing, mining, cattle, and other industries of the country.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. Then I move to strike out the words "the statistics."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 21 of the same section it is proposed to strike out the words "the statistics;" so as to read:

And said Superintendent may employ experts and special agents to investigate and ascertain the statistics of the manufacturing, railroad, fishing, mining, cattle, and other industries of the country, and of telegraph, express, transportation, and insurance companies as he may designate and require.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on the Eleventh Census was, in section 20, line 1, after the word "six," to strike out "millions of" and insert "million four hundred thousand;" so as to read:

SEC. 20. That the sum of $6,400,000 is hereby fixed and limited as the maximum cost of the census herein provided for, exclusive of printing, engraving, and binding, and it shall not be lawful for the Secretary of the Interior or the Superintendent of Census to incur any expense or obligation whatever, in respect to said census, in excess of that sum; and the sum of $1,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available, and continue available until the completion of the eleventh census.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the beginning of section 22, to strike out:

That the Superintendent of Census, with the consent of the President, may at any time remove any supervisor of census, and fill any vacancy thereby caused or otherwise occurring; and the—

And insert the word "any;" so as to make the section read:

Any supervisor of census may, with the consent of the Superintendent of Census, remove any enumerator in his district, and fill the vacancy thereby caused or otherwise occurring; and in such cases but one compensation shall be allowed for the entire service, to be apportioned among the persons performing the same in the discretion of the Superintendent of Census.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of section 23.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine one other question. I inquire whether the "color," in line 5 of section 23, includes what is a proper scientific description of race?

Mr. HALE. Another part of the bill has provided that the statistics shall be taken segregating mulattoes and quadroons.

Mr. HOAR. Where is that?

Mr. HALE. In section 17, on page 14, line 21.

Mr. HOAR. Then should not this be "race" rather than "color?"

Mr. HALE. I should say that under those conditions "color" would be better than "race."

Mr. HOAR. How would you put an Indian or Indian half-breed under this term "color?" Would you call him white or red?

Mr. HALE. I should think that he would come under the head of that contradistinction that goes by color.

Mr. HOAR. We never have used the term "color" as applicable, for instance, to the Chinese or to Indians. We do speak of the negro race as the colored race, but in regard to all other races it is different. For instance, there are residents of Armenia and Persia, a good many of whom are coming into this country, and there are some in my own city, and I should think—I make the suggestion with great deference to the Senator—that the words "color or race" should be put in there.

Mr. HALE. I should not like to have the word "color" struck out, because we have made that description of the different classifications of the black race. The words "or race" might be inserted after the word "color," in line 5, of section 23.

Mr. HOAR. I will move that amendment.

Mr. HALE. I will consent to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 23, line 5, after the word "color," it is proposed to insert the words "or race;" so as to read:

The names with age, sex, birthplace, and color or race of all persons enumerated, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I ask now to go back to section 20, on page 18, line 8, and strike out the word "of" before the word "dollars." It now reads "one million of dollars."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on the Eleventh Census was, in section 25, line 7, after the word "otherwise," to strike out "provided" and insert "provide."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. HALE. I have one or two amendments to offer. In section 11, line 8, after the word "or," I move to insert the word "soldiers;" so as to read:

And for each surviving soldier or soldier's widow returned, 5 cents.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire of the Senator whether the word "soldier" includes "sailor" in the technical sense as used in this bill, or whether the language should not be "soldier or sailor?"

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The language in section 17, on page 14, line 19, is "soldiers, sailors, or marines."

Mr. HALE. We had better use the same language here, but I do not think it would be essential, because this is only a reference to the returns, and where we provide specifically for the manner of returns we use the words "soldiers, sailors, or marines." This is only a reference to that in order to fix the amount the enumerators shall have.

Mr. HOAR. That suggestion would make it, as a matter of legal interpretation, still more clear that the word "soldiers" did not include "sailors." If we say "soldier or sailor" in one place and then "soldier" alone in another, the sailors would be excluded.

Mr. HALE. They ought to be included.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would suggest "soldiers, sailors, and marines, and their widows."

Mr. HALE. That is better—"soldiers, sailors, and marines, and their widows."

Mr. HOAR. That would not be right. It is singular—"soldier, sailor, or marine."

Mr. HALE. Say "soldier, sailor, or marine, or the widow of such soldier, sailor, or marine."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 11, line 8, it is proposed to strike out the words "soldier or soldier's widow" and insert in lieu thereof:

Soldier, sailor, or marine, or the widow of such soldier, sailor, or marine.

So as to read:

And for each surviving soldier, sailor, or marine, or the widow of such soldier, sailor, or marine returned, 5 cents.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Now, at the request of the gentleman in charge of this bill in the other end of the Capitol, I offer, to come in at the end of section 3, the following amendment:

The clerkship of the Committee on the Census of the House of Representatives is hereby made annual, the clerk to be paid a salary of $2,000 per annum from and including the 4th day of March, 1889, and a sum sufficient to pay said salary at that rate is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; and the Clerk of the House of Representatives is hereby authorized to continue the rental of the room now occupied by the House Committee on the Census in the Butler building, at the rate of $50 per month, the same as is now paid, until such time as the House of Representatives may make other provision for said committee.

Mr. HOAR. Should not that be in one of the regular appropriation bills rather than in this bill? It seems to me that there is no other instance of providing for a committee clerk in a general law.

Mr. HALE. The amendment, of course, can not go in if there is any objection to it. I stated why I offered it. It is right and ought to be done, but if any Senator objects to it on the ground——

Mr. HOAR. I shall not object to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not understand that it is open to a point of order.

Mr. HALE. If there be no objection, I think it ought to go in.

Mr. GORMAN. I object, Mr. President. I do raise the point of order on that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not understand how a point of order can lie. This is not a general appropriation bill.

Mr. HALE. The amendment is not subject to a point of order, but it is an innovation made desirable because it has been left out of the legislative, etc., appropriation bill, which has already passed both the House of Representatives and the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator insist on the motion to amend?

Mr. HALE. Unless some Senator really objects to it I should like to have it in the bill, but I do not feel like pushing it.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Maine what a clerk of the House Committee on Census would be doing between the 4th of March, 1889, and the 1st of December, 1889?

Mr. HALE. Well, Mr. President, I withdraw the amendment. I desire to have the bill completed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to make a suggestion in regard to section 3. After providing for the requisite number of clerks of various classes, ten of class 4, twenty of class 3, and thirty of class 2, it proceeds to say:

And upon such compilation and publication of said census, or at an earlier date, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, the period of service of said clerks and employés shall end.

I make no argument now upon the amendment made at end of that section adding—

All examinations for appointment and promotion under this act shall be in the discretion and under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, because the work in the Census Bureau will be merely temporary and the bureau as organized will last but a year or two or three, but I call attention to this possible injury that may be inflicted.

The period of service of said clerks and employés shall end.

If the Superintendent of the Census is wise he will avail himself of the services of a considerable number of clerks who were employed in the work of the former census and after the close of their work there obtained positions in the Departments elsewhere. I would say that the ten clerks of class 4, the twenty clerks of class 3, and the thirty clerks of class 2 may in all probability be obtained, and very competent and careful persons, too, by temporary details from other branches of the service; but this would turn them out at the end of their census services. It ought to be possible to detail them for that work and then let them return and not lose their privileges under the civil-service act. I would therefore amend by inserting, after the word "end," in line 25 of section 3, the words:

Provided, That clerks transferred or detailed for service under this act from existing branches of the civil service shall not lose their positions or rights under the "act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States."

Mr. HALE. That is right. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be stated from the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, line 29, after the word "end," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That clerks transferred or detailed for service under this act from existing branches of the civil service shall not lose their positions or rights under the "act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. I simply record my objection to the amendment made at the end of that section, putting the whole matter of examinations for appointment and promotion under the control of the Secretary of the Interior, but, inasmuch as that may be administered without a gross violation of the existing law or without a gross departure from it, I do not wish to make an argument upon the subject.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PRINTING OF GOVERNMENT SECURITIES.

Mr. GORMAN. The bill (H. R. 9623) to provide for printing Government securities in the highest style of the art was reported adversely from the Committee on Finance the day before yesterday and was indefinitely postponed. I ask that the vote by which the bill was indefinitely postponed may be reconsidered, and the bill placed on the Calendar.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope that will be done. I intended to make that request myself, because it ought to be here for discussion at the time the question shall be considered on the sundry civil bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the vote by which the bill was indefinitely postponed will be reconsidered and the bill placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the Committee on Finance. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

CONGRESSIONAL ELECTIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes the consideration of the resolution reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections in relation to Congressional elections, on which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. GORMAN. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 1 minute p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 19, 1889, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 18, 1889.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. Dr. CUTHBERT, of Washington, D. C.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

JOHN M'GILL, JR.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, recommending an appropriation in the general deficiency appropriation bill to pay John McGill, jr., of Benton County, Tennessee, the amount heretofore appropriated for his benefit and paid to an attorney not entitled to receive the same; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

BYWATER, TANQUERAY & CO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, with a letter from the Secretary of State, recommending an appropriation to reimburse Messrs. Bywater, Tanqueray & Co., of London, for losses sustained by payment of certain drafts on the Secretary of State; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SLOOP CICERO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting conclusions of fact and of law in the spoliation claim in the matter of the sloop Cicero; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF WASHINGTON AND GEORGETOWN RAILROAD COMPANY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the annual report of the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company for the year 1887; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say in regard to this report that it was received at the Speaker's room in February, 1888, but was mislaid and was not discovered until last Saturday, which accounts for the delay.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. GRANGER, indefinitely.

To Mr. BURNETT, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

MINORITY REPORT—INTERNAL-REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. SAYERS, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Appropriations, was granted leave to file the views of the minority on the bill (H. R. 12131) to amend the internal-revenue laws; which were ordered to be printed with the report of the committee.

LARD AND COMPOUND LARD.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HATCH. I find by reference to the printed Calendar that House bill No. 11027 defining "lard," also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of compound lard, was reported to the House on July 28, 1888, as a substitute for House bill No. 6138. The report was made from the Committee on Agriculture by Mr. CONGER, and was referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. RANDALL. I reserve all points of order as to this being a privileged matter.

Mr. HATCH. I find by reference to the RECORD of the proceedings of that day that the following took place:

Mr. CONGER. I ask unanimous consent to file a report.

The SPEAKER. Consent has just been given to all gentlemen having reports to file them with the Clerk.

Mr. CONGER. I know; but I wish to ask unanimous consent in this case that the views of the minority may also be presented hereafter and filed with the report of the committee.

The SPEAKER. Without objection that will be done, and the gentleman will send the report to the desk.

Then the following entry appears in the RECORD:

Mr. CONGER, from the Committee on Agriculture, reported as a substitute for the bill (H R. 6138) to regulate the manufacture and sale of counterfeit or compounded lard, a bill (H. R. 11027) defining "lard," also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of compound lard; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The minority of the committee were authorized to file their views to accompany the report on said bill.

There is substantially the same entry in the Journal. It is evident, Mr. Speaker, that this was an improper reference of the bill. Neither Mr. CONGER'S attention nor mine was called to it until within a day or two, when on looking for the bill we found that it was on the House Calendar instead of on the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and I move that the bill be referred to its proper Calendar; that is to say, the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, as of the date July 28, 1888, when the House made the improper order, and with the same number of the report, namely, No. 3082.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask that the original bill be produced and the superscription read.

Mr. ROGERS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Does this require unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman presents it as a matter of privilege. The gentleman from Pennsylvania reserves the point of order.

Mr. ROGERS. And I desire to reserve all other points of order, if there are any.

Mr. HATCH. I am trying to get at the proper order in the matter, so that there may be something of regularity in the proceedings of the House.

The SPEAKER. The original bill as presented to the House, the Chair is informed, is at the Government Printing Office.

Mr. RANDALL. Where is the print of the original bill?

The SPEAKER. That is at the Clerk's desk, and the Clerk will read the title of it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11027) defining "lard," also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of compound lard. July 28, 1888, read twice, referred to the House Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. RANDALL. Now I make the point of order that the House has a right to send a bill of that character or any other character to any committee that the majority of the House may see fit; that the action of the House did send that to one of its committees, and that the motion to change the reference is not a privileged motion.

Mr. HATCH. I find by reference to the RECORD on the previous page this entry:

Mr. CHIPMAN. I ask unanimous consent that gentlemen having reports from committees to make may be permitted to hand them in at the Clerk's desk for proper reference.
The SPEAKER. Without objection that order will be made.
There was no objection, and it was so ordered.
The following reports were filed by being handed in at the Clerk's desk.

Then follows the list of reports until we come to the entry that I have already read, when Mr. CONGER said: "I ask unanimous consent to file a report," and the Speaker said, "Consent has just been given to gentlemen who have reports to file to hand them in at the desk."

Now, evidently by this record this bill was never presented in the open House. The Speaker, acting for the House of Representatives, never sent this bill to the House Calendar. It was simply the error of a subordinate officer of the House; and the gentleman knows that no man who ever occupied the chair, even for an hour, would send a revenue bill to the House Calendar unless some action had been taken by the House upon it. It is an error, and I think it is the duty, and I think it is within the power, of the Speaker to order this bill properly placed without any action of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think so now.

Mr. HATCH. I have taken the precaution to make this motion in the open House that members might be notified of the condition of the Journal.

Mr. RANDALL. This was done seven months ago, and why this error has not been pointed out earlier I do not know.

Mr. HATCH. I will state that I did not find it out until Saturday, when the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] asked me about the bill, and I hunted up the bill and could not find it upon the proper Calendar. I hunted over the index and found that the bill had been placed on the wrong Calendar. There has not been a time when the bill could have been taken up until now.

Mr. RANDALL. A motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union has been in order almost any day for some time.

Mr. HATCH. I think if the gentleman will read the RECORD he will find that there have been but very few mornings when that order could have been made.

Mr. RANDALL. I think there have been a good many mornings. It is true I have been absent a good deal. I have no doubt they will be made.

Mr. HATCH. I think they will be, I know I have been watching very anxiously for several weeks for an opportunity to call up this bill, and I propose to do it at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to have a decision.

The SPEAKER. The question arose in the Forty-sixth Congress as to whether it was a matter of privilege to correct an erroneous reference to a committee, and the then occupant of the chair decided that it was, and the House sustained the decision. Since that time two or three questions of a similar character have arisen in the House, and have been decided in the same way. The Chair thinks that an erroneous reference of a bill to one of the Calendars of the House stands upon the same footing. It involves simply carrying out the rules of the House, and therefore the Chair thinks that the presentation of the question is a matter of privilege, but it is not the province of the Chair to correct the error by referring it to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. It is for the House to say whether it will or will not do so. The gentleman from Missouri moves that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, as of the date July 28, 1888, when the House made the improper order, and the Chair puts that question to the House.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 86, noes 30.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum. (To Mr. HATCH.) Has this reference to the cotton-seed oil?

Mr. HATCH. Oh!——.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH moved to reconsider the vote by which the change of reference was made; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FUR-SEAL AND SALMON FISHERIES OF ALASKA.

Mr. DUNN. I desire to report back to the House the bill (H. R. 12432) to amend section 1963 of the Revised Statutes, and to provide for the better protection of the fur-seal and salmon fisheries of Alaska, and for other purposes, and ask present consideration.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1963 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 1963. Within one year prior to the time when the lease heretofore made by the Secretary of the Treasury to 'The Alaska Commercial Company,' of the right to engage in taking fur seals on the islands of St. Paul and St. George, pursuant to the act of July 1, 1870, chapter 189, or when any future similar lease expires, or is surrendered, forfeited, or terminated, the Secretary of the Treasury shall lease to proper and responsible parties, for the best advantage of the United States, having due regard to the interests of the Government, the native inhabitants, their comfort, maintenance, and education, as well as to the interests of the parties heretofore engaged in the trade and the protection of the fisheries, the right of taking fur seals on the islands herein named, and of sending a vessel or vessels to the islands for the skins of such seals, for the term of twenty years, at an annual rental of not less than $50,000, to be reserved in such lease and secured by a deposit of United States bonds to that amount; and the additional sum of not less than $3.50 for each fur-seal skin taken and shipped from the islands of St. Paul and St. George during the continuance of any lease, to be paid into the Treasury of the United States, and every such lease shall be duly executed in duplicate, and shall not be transferable; and the Secretary of the Treasury is empowered to make all needful regulations for the collection and payment of the same, and to secure the comfort, maintenance, education, and protection of the natives of those islands, and also to carry into full effect all the provisions of this chapter, except as otherwise prescribed. And he shall give at least sixty days' notice of the letting of said lease, by publication in at least one daily paper published in the cities of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Chicago, New Orleans, St. Louis, and San Francisco, inviting bids for the same."

SEC. 2. That section 1956 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was intended to include and apply, and is hereby declared to include and apply, to all the waters of Behring Sea in Alaska embraced within the boundary lines mentioned and described in the treaty with Russia dated March 30, A. D. 1867, by which the Territory of Alaska was ceded to the United States; and it shall be the duty of the President, at a timely season in each year, to issue his proclamation and cause the same to be published for one month in at least one newspaper published at each United States port of entry on the Pacific coast, warning all persons against entering said Territory and waters for the purpose of violating the provisions of said section; and he shall also cause one or more vessels of the United States to diligently cruise said waters and arrest all persons and seize all vessels found to be, or to have been, engaged in any violation of the laws of the United States therein.

SEC. 3. That section 1969 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

SEC. 4. That the erection of dams, barricades, or other obstructions in any of the rivers of Alaska, with the purpose or result of preventing or impeding the ascent of salmon or other anadromous species to their spawning grounds, is hereby declared to be unlawful, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to establish such regulations and surveillance as may be necessary to insure that this prohibition is strictly enforced; and every person who shall be found guilty of a violation of the provisions of this section shall be fined not less than $250 for each day of the continuance of such obstruction.

SEC. 5. The Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries is hereby empowered and directed to institute an investigation into the habits, abundance, and distribution of the salmon of Alaska, as well as the present condition and methods of the fisheries, with a view of recommending to Congress such additional legislation as may be necessary to prevent the impairment or exhaustion of these valuable fisheries, and placing them under regular and permanent conditions of production.

During the reading,

Mr. BIGGS said: I merely want to make a parliamentary inquiry as to whether the bill will be subject to amendment after being read.

The SPEAKER. Whenever a gentleman obtains the floor of his own right, if the previous question has not been ordered, the bill is subject to amendment.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded.

Mr. ROGERS. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROGERS. Is it too late to make the point of order that this bill should be considered in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. CRISP. I raise the question of consideration.

Mr. ROGERS. I make the point of order that the bill must first be considered in Committee of the Whole, because it involves an expenditure of the public money.

Mr. DUNN. I do not think the bill provides for that or involves any expenditure of public money not now provided for by law. It does not increase any salaries nor make any new expenses, and besides that I make the point that the point of order itself is made too late.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the proper time to make the point is after the bill has been read and the House is informed as to its contents. The Chair will examine the bill.

Mr. ROGERS. I suggest to the Chair that it is subject to the point of order not only in the latter part of the second section, where it directs the policing of all these waters by our vessels, but also in the fifth section, requiring the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries to institute an investigation there; and perhaps also in the first section.

Mr. BLAND. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the bill involves the disposition or transfer of public property. It proposes to lease a portion of the property of the United States to this company.

The SPEAKER. The United States revenue vessels of course police all those waters now.

Mr. DUNN. Of course. The revenue laws have already been extended over all that region.

Mr. BLAND. But does not this extend the lease? I understand that it does.

Mr. DUNN. There is not a single provision in the bill imposing any additional expense on the Government. It does not require anything to be done, either by the Government officers or Government vessels, that is not now required by law. It does not create any office nor change the salary of any office, nor the compensation to be paid to any public officer.

The SPEAKER. The rule of the House in the third subdivision of Rule XXIII provides that—

All motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people, all proceedings touching appropriations of money, or bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriations to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, or releasing any liability to the United States for money or property, shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Now, so far as the Chair observed the reading of this bill, and so far as he has been able to examine the bill since, it does not involve any of these features. Under the law as it is now the United States revenue vessels police these high seas, harbors, etc., and the fact that the bill proposes to dispose of a privilege which belongs to the Government for a compensation to be paid by the parties who are to enjoy that privilege does not make the bill one appropriating public property within the meaning of the rule. It is rather a bill to sell or dispose of public property. The last section of the bill, to which the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] refers, simply imposes an additional official duty upon the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, but makes no appropriation to pay for it, and provides no compensation for the performance of that additional duty. Therefore the Chair thinks the bill is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. ROGERS. How about the last clause of the first section?

The SPEAKER. That simply provides for the publication of notice. It provides that when the Secretary of the Treasury proposes to let this contract he shall give notice in the public press. The Chair does not think that varies the case at all. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] raises the question of consideration against this bill.

Mr. DUNN. I hope the gentleman from Georgia will allow me to make a very brief statement.

Mr. CRISP. How much time does the gentleman think this bill will take?

Mr. DUNN. I think the bill can be passed within an hour. The proposed amendments of the law are very simple and very few, and they are really very important and urgent.

Mr. CRISP. If I could be assured that the bill would not take more than an hour I would not raise the question of consideration.

Mr. DUNN. I assure the gentleman that the time of the House will not be needlessly consumed, but that every fair opportunity will be given for a complete understanding of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] to raise the question of consideration.

Mr. CRISP. If there can be an understanding that we can get a vote on the bill in an hour I shall not raise the question of consideration.

Mr. DUNN. I would not like to ask the House to agree to that, but I will give the gentleman my word that I will use every means to expedite the disposition of the bill within the hour. I assure the gentleman of that, but I must be fair with the House in the consideration of this bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Is there anybody who desires to discuss the bill?

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed an order requesting the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the report of the committee of conference on the bill (S. 139) to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all money collected under the direct tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861.

FUR-SEAL AND SALMON FISHERIES, ALASKA.

Mr. CRISP. If the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] will ask unanimous consent that the vote be taken in an hour I will not raise the question of consideration.

Mr. DUNN. I assure the gentleman that I will make every effort to dispose of the bill as quickly as possible.

Mr. CRISP. I know the gentleman will do that, but I should like to have an understanding with the House.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that debate be closed upon this bill and amendments and the vote taken at twenty minutes of 2 o'clock, or sooner.

Mr. ROGERS. To that I object.

The SPEAKER. The question of consideration is raised against this bill.

DIRECT-TAX BILL.

Mr. CASWELL. Pending that I desire to submit a conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send it up.

Mr. DUNN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUNN. I understand that the report which the gentleman desires to present is a conference report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understands.

Mr. DUNN. Does that interfere with the privilege of considering this bill under the report made?

The SPEAKER. It does. The bill which the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] has presented is privileged, according to the practice of the House, simply because he has leave to report at any time; but when it comes up it has no other privilege than a bill which comes up in the ordinary manner.

Mr. DUNN. Then the consideration of the conference report will have what effect?

The SPEAKER. It will suspend the consideration of this bill so long as the conference report is before the House.

Mr. DUNN. I hope the gentleman will withhold that report for the present.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report.

Mr. CASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I am informed at this moment that a message has just been received from the Senate asking the House to return this conference report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was about, with the consent of the House, to present the request of the Senate, which the Clerk will now read.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, February 18, 1889.

Ordered, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the report of the committee of conference on the bill (S. 139) to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to this request?

Mr. CASWELL. I will withdraw this report if——

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to this request? The Chair hears none. The Clerk will be directed to return the report to the Senate.

Mr. CASWELL. Has the order been made for the return of the report?

The SPEAKER. It has been.

FUR-SEAL AND SALMON FISHERIES.

Mr. ROGERS. Having had an understanding about a matter in which I am more interested than in this Alaska bill, I withdraw my objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks consent that the debate on the bill reported by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] be closed and the vote taken on the bill and all amendments thereto not later than twenty minutes before 2 o'clock. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CRISP. I withdraw the question of consideration.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, in presenting the bill which is before the House for consideration I will not take time (for it will not be necessary) to review or recapitulate the substance of the report presented or the evidence taken by the committee in the course of the investigation ordered by the House. That investigation was for the purpose of obtaining information upon an important question of internal administration relating to the fur-seal and other fisheries in Behring Sea and Alaska, to ascertain the interests and rights of this Government in those waters and in those fisheries, and to inform Congress as to the wisdom of the policy heretofore pursued, the success or failure of that policy. The laws under which those interests have been administered followed immediately upon the acquisition of the Territory of Alaska by the Government of the United States in virtue of the treaty made with Russia in 1867.

Our Government took by that treaty all the rights, powers, interests, jurisdiction, and dominion of Russia in that Territory and over those waters. We took every right, every privilege, and every immunity which Russia had. The Territory was purchased chiefly because of the great value of the marine products of Behring Sea as well as for its importance to this Government as part of the domain that we should have on this continent. Chief amongst these interests was the fur-seal rookery on the Pribylov Islands. When we purchased Alaska it was found that under the laws of Russia those islands were held as a Government reservation and leased to the Russian-American Company. That lease involved the exclusive privilege of taking a limited number of seals upon those islands. All experience has proved that the only way to preserve the fur-seal rookeries of the world has been to make of them Government reservations and place them under absolute governmental protection. The nature of the fur seal is such that its extermination is just as easy as its preservation. The seals have fixed and settled rookeries which they visit and upon which they haul up once in every year for the purpose of delivering their young and nurturing and nursing them up to an age when they can go to sea, after being taught to swim and to take care of themselves.

This rookery is one of three now remaining in the world. All others have been completely destroyed, the seals having been exterminated because they were not under the protection of any government which prohibited their complete and indiscriminate destruction by seal hunters. We have about four million seals visiting that rookery. It is the largest seal rookery in the world. There are, as I have said, but two others. One is a little one on the Commander Islands, in the Russian part of the Behring Sea, and a smaller one still is at the mouth of the La Plata River, in South America, under the protection of the Government of the Argentine Republic. The rookery on the Commander Islands is under the protection of the Government of Russia, and is similarly administered to ours.

The committee, in the course of its investigation, found that the policy settled by the Government has been entirely satisfactory and successful—singularly successful, I am glad to be able to say.

The herd of seals have been protected and taken care of reasonably well, although the committee have ascertained that there has been laxness in the protection of the herd in the open seas during the last three years; and that is provided for in the amendatory law now proposed. In regard to the revenues derived from this source, the minimum fixed by law was $250,000—$50,000 per annum in a lump sum and $2 for the skin. At the end of the present lease the Government will have received directly and indirectly from this industry about $9,500,000. The expense will not exceed $350,000. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to renew that lease, or to make another lease, after this one expires. It expires on the 1st day of May, 1890. The Secretary of the Treasury is of the opinion that it can not be renewed, nor can any offer for bids be made until after this lease expires.

The rookery is now under the protection of a $500,000 bond for the preservation and protection of seal life and the Government's interest there. That bond will expire and there will be a hiatus in the revenues and in that protection if the Secretary of the Treasury is not authorized to make another lease before this one expires. In this way one year of revenue and one year of the sealing industry will be lost. If he is not authorized to make a lease before this one expires, the new lessee can not execute his bond, arrange his plans, and enter upon his privileges there before the sealing season would be over, because that season commences the 1st of June and terminates in October. After that the seals could not be taken. The first amendment proposed by the bill is to require the Secretary of the Treasury to make a new lease within one year prior to the expiration of the old one, so that a new bond, a new lease, new obligations will have been entered into and perfected and all of the arrangements completed, so that when the old lease expires the new one will be ready to go into operation and the work continued uninterruptedly.

The next change in the law is to repeal that section of the Revised Statutes which imposes a revenue tax or duty of $2 per skin on each of the skins taken and shipped away, and instead of that we put in another section of the law a consideration of not less than $3.50 for each skin taken and shipped away from the islands as a part of the consideration for the lease. It is a question whether if the $2 on each skin were to be treated as a tax it could be held to be constitutional. It is at least a question of doubtful constitutionality, as there can be no such export duty laid or internal-revenue tax assessed upon a designated article shipped from that particular place, and in order to meet what the committee believe to be a difficulty in this regard they made the rate per skin a part of the consideration for the lease instead of leaving it in the doubtful attitude of a revenue tax.

The provision is made that it shall not be less than $50,000 per annum or not less than $3.50 per skin, which raises it from a minimum of $250,000 to a minimum of $400,000 per annum and whatever may be paid above that; and I feel authorized to say to the House I am well assured the bids will run up to from $500,000 to $700,000 per annum under the operation of the new arrangement to be secured by the passage of this bill.

The next provision is to tighten up and make certain the protection to seal life in these waters. The law prohibits any person from killing any fur-bearing animal in the Territ ry of Alaska, or any fur-seals in the waters of Behring Sea, except under authority of the United States Government and the regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury in pursuance of the same. The regulation of the Secretary of the Treasury now prohibits any one from killing fur-bearing animals on the land except the natives of Alaska, and it leases the privileges to kill the fur-seals in Behring Sea to a lessee who is permitted to kill only upon the islands, and is not permitted to kill any female seal at all, or permitted to kill any seal in the b. eeding rookeries, or any except what are known as the "bachelor seals," the males under six years of age, which are not permitted to go into the breedi g rookeries by the old bulls who hold dominion there. The breeding rookeries are not disturbed by any one, are not permitted to be disturbed, so that those killed are only the surplus young bulls under the age at which they go upon the rookeries.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. DUNN. Certainly.

Mr. CUTCHEON. What has been the maximum rate derived from these leases hitherto?

Mr. DUNN. Three hundred and seventeen thousand five hundred dollars per annum.

Mr. CUTCHEON. This bill provides a minimum of $500,000.

Mr. DUNN. Under the old law the minimum was $250,000 per annum, but it has been raised to $317,500; $5,000 on the annual rate and 62½ cents per skin, or $62,500 on the amount taken for skins.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I do not like to interrupt the gentleman, but I would like to ask this further question.

Mr. DUNN. It does not interrupt me at all. I shall be glad to give any information upon the subject.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I notice there is a provision that this lease is to continue for twenty years, and if it will not interrupt the course of the gentleman's argument I would like to know the object of that just here.

Mr. SPINOLA. It is too long a period.

Mr. DUNN. It is only necessary to say that that is the existing law. The statute of 1870 authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to lease these rookeries for periods of twenty years, and it contemplated apparently no change, because it authorized the Secretary to make another lease when the existing lease expires, and so on ad infinitum. The committee did not think it wise to reduce the period. A shorter lease will not bring the Government as much per annum as the longer lease.

Mr. CUTCHEON. And you regard that as a continuing law?

Mr. DUNN. It is a continuing statute. The law seems to have been permanent in all of its features, and the only change which the committee find advisable to recommend to the House is to make the tax or payment required on each skin a part of the consideration for the lease, and place it all under the protection of the bond of the lessees, which is $500,000, covering the revenue for any one year, and increase the amount to be paid for the privilege.

The lessees are also required to provide a supply of fuel, a supply of salted fish, and schools for the natives. This lessee has complied with all of the requirements, and in addition has furnished to the natives good houses and a stove in each house, free of rent, with medical attendance and supplies free of charge, and supports and maintains all the widows and orphans who are not able to participate in the work done upon the islands. That work, under regulations of the Treasury Department, is limited to natives upon the islands, and no one else is permitted to enter upon it.

Formerly the lessee of the company paid them $10 per year each man for the work, working about one hundred men at an expenditure of about $10,000 per annum for this labor. This company pays them in addition to its supplies and houses $40,000 in money for doing the work of killing and skinning the seals, salting the hides and putting them in the salt-house; and for the work of taking them from the salt-house and transporting them to the Government vessels and shipping them from the islands it pays at the rate of $1 per day; so that natives earn between $40,000 and $50,000 per annum in money, which is divided among less than three hundred people, seventy-five or eighty of them being laborers, men engaged in that labor, who divide the proceeds, which amount is distributed under a classification arranged and agreed upon by the chiefs of the natives, the Government agent, and the company's agent, according to the merits of the person engaged in the work, and the committee find it a very fair and a very just apportionment.

They purchase goods from the lessees at a rate of 25 per cent. above the wholesale prices in San Francisco, and they also have seal meat free of charge. So that they are the best provided for and the best protected laborers in the United States. The next change in the law is that which simply relates to the regulations of the Government for the protection of seal life. These four million seals haul up on these islands, commencing with the last days of May, and they are all in and upon the rookeries by the middle of June or earlier. The female seals deliver their young immediately upon hauling up upon the rookeries. They and the bachelor seals go to sea every day hunting food. The old bulls, who exercise dominion over the rookeries, do not leave them. They remain to protect the young, each overlooking his own harem. Thus from two and a half to three million seals go to sea every day. They go from 40 to 60 miles from the land. They swim on the surface of the water and are easily visible to the hunter. They are easily killed; and they are taken in the water. It is there that the pirate hunter kills the seals and not upon the rookeries. They do not go there, where the seals are simply killed by being knocked upon the head. That is the manner in which it has been customary to kill them. The pirate hunting stands out 20, 30, and 40 miles from the land. They intercept and capture the seals by hundreds of thousands as they go to sea for food and return to the island. They kill them indiscriminately, male and female, old and young. The evidence shows that out of seven seals killed in the water by hunters they recover about one. So that in killing twenty or thirty thousand a year, which the evidence shows the unlawful hunters have been doing, they destroy two or three hundred thousand seals, making a destruction of seal life largely in excess of that authorized by law, and entailing a corresponding loss to the Government in revenue, amounting to seven times the skins recovered from the unauthorized and unlawful hunters. So that it is all-important that these seas be protected and vigilantly patrolled by revenue-cutters or naval vessels (revenue-cutters are sufficient), and unlawful hunters given to understand beyond all doubt that their vessels will be seized and themselves arrested and punished according to law.

The contention made by those who have heretofore been arrested and whose vessels have been seized is that this Government had no jurisdiction over that sea. That authority was exercised by Russia strictly, and without relinquishing that power we bought the country (the country ceded to the United States, as described by the boundaries marked out upon that map) upon the sea and upon the land. The sea and the land were conveyed as the territory and dominion granted to us by Russia.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Upon what ground have the releases of vessels seized been made? I understand they were released.

Mr. DUNN. Some have been condemned and some have been released. The courts of the United States have sustained the jurisdiction of this Government over the sea and the right of the Government to protect the fisheries. There may have been at some time, as I understand, pending some negotiations about the Eastern fishery question, when there was some leniency on the part of the executive department in releasing some of the vessels, but retaining their cargoes of contraband skins pending test cases that were made to determine the question. I do not understand that in any case the rights of the United States were waived or relinquished. There were a number of vessels seized—some twenty vessels, perhaps.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I understand that the matter had been determined. The question was whether this was an open sea or a closed sea, and the State Department had released these vessels.

Mr. DUNN. There has been no decision by the State Department that in any way has made the concession that it is an open sea. If there has been any leniency on the part of any Department of the Government it has merely been a conciliatory step, but one which did not relinquish in any way the rights of this Government or any interest of this Government. Nor do I understand that there is any such thing in contemplation. But the committee became satisfied from investigation that the policing of that sea ought to be made more rigid, definite, and certain, and that it ought to be done so that there will be no indulgences granted to any violator of the law in that sea. It must be done so as to protect the legal hunting of seals, an industry amounting from a million and a quarter to a million and a half dollars a year, out of which the Government is now receiving more than $300,000 per annum, and will hereafter receive $500,000 or more, and upon which absolutely depend the lives and existence of all the Aleuts of Alaska. They will become dependent upon the Government if the fur-seal fisheries of Alaska are destroyed, as they are now in a fair way to be. The Aleuts will perish with the lives of the salmon and the fur-seal. There are no other resources there to maintain the lives of this population. No civilized inhabitants go to those parts of the Territory except during a temporary season in each year, when they go to prosecute industries in which they are engaged at the particular points where they are located.

The committee therefore thought it was important that the President should issue his proclamation at the beginning of each year warning all persons against entering that sea for the purpose of violating the existing laws, and also requiring him to have that sea diligently patrolled by armed vessels of the United States, one or more, as the exigencies of the case may require. If Congress passes this bill and emphasizes its opinion with distinctness and in tones which none can misunderstand or mistake, there will be an end of unauthorized and unlawful hunting and depredation upon the valuable interests there. It is impossible and out of all consideration, it would be preposterous to open those seal rookeries to hunters to go there at will and prey upon them. The herds of seal would not last three years. It is impracticable for the Government to administer that interest itself or to go into the fur business. It is not to be thought of that the Government shall become a fur merchant. The only policy that has been found to be practicable at all, the policy which the experience of a hundred years in dealing with seal life shows will alone preserve that life, has been to put the seals under the protection of the Government and lease the privilege of catching them to responsible parties, holding those parties strictly responsible, not only for the payment of the money which they contract to pay, but also for the protection of the seals. So this provision requires the President to issue his proclamation and to send armed vessels of the United States to patrol the sea and protect those interests.

No government in the world has asked this Government to abandon that seal rookery to the common depredations of hunters who roam the seas. No government has asked for that; but, on the contrary, it is understood that other governments are more than willing that the seals shall be protected and preserved, and it only remains for the Government of the United States to be firm, positive, and unmistakable in its policy. No government has any interest there of sufficient magnitude to warrant any such contention as has been suggested, and in my opinion none will ever be made. It is not the part of wisdom or the part of humanity for the Government to abandon or suffer the destruction of that interest.

Mr. CUTCHEON. What section is repealed by this?

Mr. DUNN. The section which made $2 a skin a tax, and it transfers the $3.50 a skin to another section, the first section of the bill, amended to conform as I have indicated to the House.

The next provision of the bill relates to the preservation of the salmon fisheries. Now, Mr. Speaker, the salmon fisheries there are, perhaps, the best and richest that remain in the world, because their value has been only recently discovered, and it is only recently that the fishermen have gone there. The salmon visit all those streams to spawn in fabulous numbers. A correct and truthful account of the vast multitudes of salmon that visit those streams once a year for spawning purposes would sound to this House and to the country like a "fish story." [Laughter.] Yet it is true, and that entire interest is liable to destruction unless it is protected. If members will read in one of the appendices to the report of the committee the report from the Fish Commission which appears there, they will get all the data on this subject that they will require. The industry of taking and canning salmon there reaches now nearly $5,000,000 per annum, and the plant will be doubled this year. One single river on Kodiak Island, a short river, yields more than twelve hundred and fifty thousand dollars' worth of canned salmon per annum, and, as in the fur-seal rookeries, the greed of men in that fishery is in a fair way to completely destroy the fish within a very few years. The scientists of the Fish Commission tell me that the salmon spawn but once. When they reach the spawning age the male and female ascend the stream together to the spawning ground, where the spawn is delivered by the female and fertilized by the male, and then both fish die.

Mr. ADAMS. Is that information from the Fish Commission?

Mr. DUNN. Yes, that is the information given me by the Fish Commission. Both fish die. Now, their spawning grounds are the little lakes at the headwaters of the rivers, and unless they are permitted to go there they die in their exertions to reach the spawning ground, and the spawn is expelled in the tides of the sea and is carried out and lost. The facts reported by the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries are that these greedy canning companies go there and erect a wire-net dam across the rivers (which are shallow) and impound all the fish opposite to their canneries and then their men stand with a fork like a hay-fork and fork out the fish and dump them into the canning houses. The fish are not permitted to ascend to the spawning ground at all, so that those that are not caught and canned die there.

Mr. ADAMS. I have heard that at some places what is called the salmon-wheel is used.

Mr. DUNN. That is in the Columbia River.

Mr. ADAMS. Is it not true that the salmon-wheel can be used in the waters of Alaska?

Mr. DUNN. It has not been found that the wheel is used there anywhere; possibly because the fishermen do not need it. With the fish corraled and impounded and massed so that they form a dense, compact body all the way from the surface of the water to the bottom, the fishermen do not need the wheel; all they need is a fork to fork out the fish as I have described.

Mr. ADAMS. Then it was not the intention of the committee by the language in section 4 to declare unlawful the erection of a wheel?

Mr. DUNN. The committee simply desired to prohibit the obstruction across the river which prevents the ascent of the salmon to the spawning grounds as tentative legislation; and the next section directs the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries to make a thorough investigation and hereafter report what may be necessary in the way of legislation which will permanently preserve and protect those fish and allow them to continue in regular course of propagation.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Still, if a wheel would be an obstruction which would impede the ascent of the salmon, it would come——

Mr. DUNN. I will say to the gentleman that there is not a wheel in Alaska now, and it is not likely that one will be placed there before the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries can make his investigation and report. At the next session Congress can undoubtedly mature an act of permanent legislation for the preservation and protection of those valuable fisheries. An industry can be fostered and developed there which will make an earning that will probably reach $10,000,000 or more per annum. The world's chief supply of salmon will in all probability be drawn from those fisheries hereafter, as the world's chief supply of seal fur is now drawn from that rookery. While our rookery yields 100,000 skins per annum to the authorized lessees and twenty to twenty-five thousand to the pirate hunters, the rookery in the Russian possessions yields from 30,000 to 40,000 skins per annum, and that at the mouth of the La Plata probably not more than 5,000 skins per annum. So that if this rookery of ours is preserved and the lives of the female seals protected, the increase must necessarily be rapid and large; and from it will doubtless be drawn the world's chief supply of seal fur, growing up and increasing in a corresponding ratio.

The value of the skins has gone up very largely under the influence of this lease. These lessees sold their first take of seal-skins for less than cost—less than $5 per skin. Their last skins were sold at about $15 per skin. So that they have sold perhaps the twenty-years take at an average of nearly $10 per skin. The skins now cost them, laid down in London, about $8—within $8 per skin. London is the market of the whole world in this business. All fur-seal skins are taken there and manufactured there—except a few thousand up here in New York—and distributed from there to the other parts of the world. So that England makes more out of the industry as the manufacturer and distributor than we do with the nursery of seal life in our hands and under our protection.

These, Mr. Speaker, are the provisions of the bill; and now I desire in the remaining time to yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY]——

Mr. HOLMAN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] a question.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCCREARY). Eight minutes.

Mr. DUNN. I reserve that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] to ask that he be notified ten minutes before the arrival of the time agreed upon for taking the vote.

Mr. DUNN. I desire to reserve the residue of my time and to yield to my colleague [Mr. DINGLEY]. Before doing that, however, I ask unanimous consent to answer questions.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to ask the gentleman from Arkansas whether, in view of the importance of this contract and in view of the unfriendly criticism with reference to the last contract, which was made in 1870, it would not be better to provide that the contract now contemplated shall be subject to the approval of the President of the United States.

Mr. DUNN. This contract is to be made by the Secretary of the Treasury, who is one of the clerks of the President. I can not imagine that he would make a contract without the President's approval.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, if the gentleman thinks the proviso I have suggested is not necessary I will not press it.

Mr. DUNN. That is the view of the committee, and the proof taken before the committee shows that the former lease was made in obedience to the direction of President Grant.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; but President Grant did not directly approve the lease.

A MEMBER. The proviso suggested had better be put in.

Mr. DUNN. I do not think the proposed amendment amounts to anything.

Mr. HOLMAN. I apprehend that this bill when we come to vote upon it will not be open to amendment. I therefore say now that I think the term of the contract should be reduced to ten years, and that the contract before going into effect should be approved by the President of the United States.

Mr. DUNN. Nothing more disastrous to that interest could occur than to reduce the terms of the contract to ten years. The successful prosecution of this industry requires a plant worth more than $1,000,000, nearly $2,000,000. The operators have to enter all the fur markets of the world and spend large sums of money to promote the fashions in fur in order to secure markets for the seal fur. No man or set of men can afford to do that under a contract running for the short period of ten years. In this matter the interests of the lessees must be consulted in order to make it worth while to preserve seal-life there.

Mr. HERMANN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question as to the construction of one clause in this bill, especially this language which is proposed as a part of section 1963, and which sounds very significant:

> The Secretary of the Treasury shall lease to proper and responsible parties, for the best advantage of the United States, having due regard to the interests of the Government, the native inhabitants, their comfort, maintenance, and education, as well as to the interests of the parties heretofore engaged in the trade and the protection of the fisheries.

Mr. DUNN. That is the language of the existing law, and under the Secretary's construction of it he obtained $67,500 more than the minimum which the law requires to be paid. He has construed that, of course. You understand that the lives of the natives are dependent on this business, as they have no other means of existence. Of course the people under the control of those engaged in this business are entitled to decent consideration.

Mr. HERMANN. In section 1, page 2, referring to section 1963 of the Revised Statutes, I desire to know what is the meaning of the following very significant language as to the power conferred on the Secretary of the Treasury in leasing the sealing privileges:

> The Secretary of the Treasury shall lease to proper and responsible parties, for the best advantage of the United States, having due regard to the interests of the Government, the native inhabitants, their comfort, maintenance, and education, as well as to the interests of the parties heretofore engaged in the trade and the protection of the fisheries.

I desire to know what construction is put on the last lines, and as to whether a certain discretion is not conferred on the Secretary of the Treasury so far as to favor parties now engaged there?

Mr. DUNN. It is right and just and equitable that the interests of the parties who are now engaged there should be taken into consideration.

Mr. HERMANN. I understand the party now engaged there is the Alaska Commercial Company, and is not this in the interest of that company?

Mr. BIGGS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Arkansas a question.

Mr. DUNN. I have not time to yield.

Mr. BIGGS. Will we have an opportunity to present amendments?

Mr. DUNN. I understand I have only eight minutes remaining.

Mr. DINGLEY. I believe the agreement is that the vote shall be taken at twenty minutes to 2 o'clock.

Mr. DUNN. How much time does my colleague on the committee desire?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There are only twelve minutes of time remaining altogether.

Mr. DINGLEY. If I can have the attention of the House for a few minutes——

Mr. SPINOLA. One side of this question has only been heard. I hope those who are opposed to this bill will have an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. DINGLEY. I can not be taken off the floor in this way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas is entitled to the floor, and has yielded to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY].

Mr. SPINOLA. But those who are opposed to this measure should have some opportunity to be heard. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. DINGLEY. I can not be taken off the floor by a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SPINOLA. Gentlemen should submit to what is decent and proper.

Mr. DUNN. I have yielded to my colleague on the committee [Mr. DINGLEY].

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, there are two important matters presented in this bill which should receive the attention of the House.

The first section of this bill authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to again lease the seal rookeries on the islands of St. Paul and St. George in Behring Sea, in the Alaska Territory, to take effect on the expiration of the present lease in May, 1890. It provides that the policy of the Government in reference to these seal rookeries, which has been maintained since the purchase of Alaska, shall be continued.

In 1870 the Government adopted the policy of leasing to that party which the Secretary of the Treasury considered the most advisable for the Government the right to kill such number of fur-seals on the islands of St. Paul and St. George in Behring Sea as might be annually determined by the Secretary, under which lease $55,000 was required to be paid and $2.62½ for every skin of a seal killed. That contract expires a year from next May. This bill provides that before the expiration of the present contract the Secretary of the Treasury shall invite bids from individuals or companies for the privilege of killing fur-seals on the islands of St. Paul and St. George to whatever extent the Secretary of the Treasury may annually determine for the term of twenty years from the 1st day of May, 1890.

The first point to be considered is whether the House will authorize a continuation of this policy of leasing these fur-seal rookeries to that party which, under the circumstances, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury, will give the most for the privilege. There is in the bill provision for advertisement and direction to the Secretary of the Treasury to make the lease to that party proposing terms the most advantageous to the Government. There is a further provision increasing the minimum amount provided under the act of 1870; that is, at least $50,000 must be paid to the Government for the lease; and secondly, at least $3.50 be paid for each skin. The amount to be paid to the Government for the lease will be as much more than this as competition may lead bids to be made.

The first question is whether Congress will continue the policy of leasing the right to kill seals on the seal islands to private parties, or will adopt some other policy of administering these valuable rookeries. Those who have examined this matter generally agree that leasing to private parties is the only wise policy the Government can adopt. It is suggested that the Government itself take charge of these rookeries by their agents, kill the seals and send the skins for sale into the market. Investigation has convinced your committee that the Government can not successfully carry on this business, and that it is better we should invite proposals from companies and parties who desire to enter into it.

I need not detain the House to repeat the reasons for this conclusion. In the first place, the price of seal furs in the markets of the world is largely controlled by the manipulation of the sources of fashion in the great social centers of the civilized world. In 1870 a fur-seal skin in the markets of London was worth only $5. To-day it is worth $13.50. This increase of market value has been brought about largely by the manipulation of the centers of fashion, and it is not believed that this price can be maintained except through some private business company working in the direction that the present company has been working.

At the same time the value of the privilege of killing seals on the seal islands of Alaska is now so well known that, if the term of this lease covers the long period of twenty years, new companies are certain to raise the price bid for the lease so as to give the Government a fair share of the profits reaped by the excellent business management of the lessees. If the term of the lease should be seriously reduced new companies would be less likely to enter into competition with the old company because so large an expenditure would be required for the plant of a new company.

The second section, and in some respects the most important, distinctly declares that the acts of 1869 and 1870 protecting seal life in the Territory and waters of Alaska, were intended to apply to the waters of Behring Sea, and instructs the President to issue his proclamation annually and to take all necessary measures to enforce these protective laws. While these acts have always been properly construed by the Government of the United States to apply to the waters of Behring Sea, yet the specific affirmation made in this section will serve as an important notice to all the world, and especially to the marauders who rove over the waters of Behring Sea destroying seal life, that the Government of the United States intends to protect seal life in these waters as well as on the seal rookeries of Alaska. The importance of this protection in the waters of Behring Sea will be seen when the situation of the seal islands is considered.

Probably the most valuable features of our Alaskan purchase from Russia in 1867 are these fur-seal rookeries on the islands of St. Paul and St. George, in Behring Sea. These islands are 1,500 miles northwest of Sitka, which is almost the only point in this vast frozen territory inhabited by whites, and 600 south of Behring Straits; 300 miles from the mainland of Alaska and nearly in the center of the American portion of Behring Sea. On these desolate islands are the largest fur-seal rookeries in the world, more than twice as large as the only two other known rookeries combined—the one at the mouth of the river Plate yielding about twelve thousand skins, and the other, nearly opposite these islands, on the Russian coast of Asia, yielding about forty thousand skins per annum, while our Alaska rookeries yield one hundred thousand skins.

All the other fur-seal rookeries, notably those of the South Pacific, once very large and valuable, have been exterminated by indiscriminate killing of seals. These three have been preserved by governmental protection—the Plate rookery by the Argentine Republic, the Kamtschatka rookery by Russia, and the St. Paul and St. George rookeries by Russia from 1790 to the cession of Alaska in 1867, and since that time by the United States.

The necessity of governmental protection in order to preserve fur-seal rookeries like those on the seal islands of Alaska arises from the peculiar habits of the fur-seal. The fur-seal is not a fish, but an amphibious animal born on the land at the rookeries or breeding grounds on the shore, where they are accustomed to haul out annually in May or June to bring forth and care for their young. There they remain about five months, till October or November, the breeding males remaining all the time on the land, and the females going into the water every day to secure fish for food. If the breeding males and females were killed or disturbed on the rookeries they would soon be exterminated; or if the females who go out into Behring Sea for food are shot, for every one obtained by the marauders seven on the average sink and are lost, and for every female killed or wounded the helpless pups on shore starve. In order, therefore, to protect the rookeries it is necessary to protect seal life not only on the islands of St. George and St. Paul, but also in Behring Sea.

With this protection the seal rookeries on these islands can be easily indefinitely preserved, for the reason that the 100,000 seals which the lessees of the rookeries are allowed to kill each year are all non-breeding males—i. e., weak males that have been driven from the breeding grounds by the strong bulls, which are polygamous, and generally have from ten to fifteen female seals in their family. The non-breeding males herd outside the breeding seals, and are easily separated from them by the Aleut killers employed by the lessees of the islands. By such care in killing only non-breeding seals, and protecting the breeding seals on land and water the herd of seals on these islands, estimated at 4,500,000, is carefully preserved, and even increased, for the natural increase is sufficient to not only cover the 100,000 killed by the Government lessees (for which they pay the Treasury about $317,000 per annum) but also the large numbers destroyed by the natural enemies of the seal in the seven months in which they are absent from the island in the waters of the Pacific.

It will be seen, therefore, that in order to preserve the Alaskan seal rookeries and thus save almost the last source of supply of this valuable fur to the world, and secure the annual rental to the Government—already nearly $6,000,000 in the twenty years since the acquisition of Alaska, and soon to be increased perhaps to half a million per annum—it is absolutely essential to preserve seal life in Behring Sea while the female seals are roaming through the waters within 50 miles of the seal islands in quest of food. Unless the Government shall exercise sufficient control over these waters in the five months the seals are domiciled on the islands, it will take but a few years for marauders from the Pacific coast of the United States and of Canada to destroy the breeding seals and break up these valuable rookeries.

During the Russian occupation of these seal islands Russia steadily maintained and exercised her right to patrol and control all the waters of Behring Sea, basing her claim to regard Behring as a closed sea (mare clausum) on the fact that she had discovered and owned both shores and that it was not a sea leading to any routes of commerce. Her claim to the exclusive control of this sea down to the parallel of 55°, in the same manner that the United States controls Chesapeake and Delaware Bays, and Great Britain Fortune Bay, was not denied by any nation from the time of Russian occupation in 1745 to the cession of Alaska and the western half of Behring Sea and the islands in the same to the United States in 1867. In 1799 the Emperor Paul, by a formal ukase, asserted the exclusive control of Russia over Behring Sea, and no nation protested. In 1821, when Russia attempted to extend her exclusive control 4° south (to the parallel of 51°) into the North Pacific, the United States remonstrated against the extension on the ground that this ocean could not be regarded as a closed sea.

The remonstrance led to the treaty of 1824 between the United States and Russia, whereby the latter gave up her claim to extend her control to 51°, and gave the United States certain privileges north of 54° 40′ for the period of ten years, these privileges having ended in 1834. In 1825 a treaty was entered into between Russia and Great Britain whereby the latter power practically recognized Russian control of Behring Sea north of 55°.

Whatever rights Russia had to control the eastern half of Behring Sea she assigned to the United States by her cession of Alaska in 1867. Russia's treaty of cession to this country specifically describes the western boundary of the territory granted to the United States as proceeding—

> In a course nearly southwest through Behring Straits and Behring Sea, * * * so as to pass midway between the island of Attou (the westerly island of the Aleutian chain) and the Copper Island of the Kormandorski group to the meridian of 193° west longitude—and grants to the United States "the territories and dominion" within the described boundaries.

After the cession, on July 27, 1868, Congress extended the laws of the United States relating to customs, commerce, and navigation "over all the mainland, islands, and waters of the territory ceded to the United States by the Emperor of Russia." In July, 1868, Congress prohibited the killing of fur-seals "in the Territory of Alaska or the waters thereof." March 3, 1869, Congress declared "the islands of St. Paul and St. George, in Alaska," to be a special Government reservation. July 1, 1870, Congress passed another act to protect seal life, and authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to lease for twenty years the right to take fur-seals on the islands of St. George and St. Paul on certain terms. And August 21, 1870, this right was leased to the Alaska Commercial Company for an annual rental of $55,000 and $2.62½ for each seal-skin, the lessees to furnish certain supplies and schools for the Aleuts on the seal islands.

Since the United States Government has taken charge of the seal islands as a Government reservation it has steadily maintained that the acts of 1868, 1869, and 1870 included the waters of Behring Sea, and in 1887 our revenue-cutter seized fifteen vessels which were caught killing seals in this sea. The letter of Assistant Secretary French, in 1881, distinctly asserted this, and this letter has since been repeatedly referred to as explaining the intent of these acts.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will the gentleman allow me a question just there? What does the gentleman understand to be the present attitude of the State Department in regard to the control of Behring Sea by the United States, as to whether it is regarded as a closed sea or a part of the great ocean?

Mr. DINGLEY. I will say to the gentleman in reference to that point, although I have not time to enter fully upon the discussion of it, that I understand in so far as any correspondence is concerned which has been made public—and my colleague states it is also true as to that which has not been made public—the State Department has steadily maintained the position that Behring Sea is a closed sea, and is under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States for the purposes referred to. It is known to the House that the Secretary has been engaged in negotiations with the leading European powers to bring about an international arrangement for a close time for seals in all waters, but I am advised that there has been no intimation of a surrender of our claim to control Behring Sea. I understand that position has not been surrendered, although in the season of 1888 it is well understood that the revenue-cutter sent to Behring Sea to protect seal life was instructed not to seize any vessels in that sea, for reasons not yet disclosed, and hence no protection was given in that season—an unfortunate step, likely to greatly increase our difficulties in protecting seal life in these waters; and our information is that there are now hundreds of vessels fitting out for the purpose of killing seals in Behring Sea. If steps are not promptly taken on the part of the Government to protect seal life on those islands as well as the seals in the waters of Behring Sea, the time is not very distant when seal life will be completely extinct, and this valuable property belonging to the United States destroyed.

Mr. SPINOLA. How did Russia protect this property, or how did we protect it prior to the making of this contract?

Mr. DINGLEY. Ever since we have held control of the seal rookeries under the purchase from Russia, or rather since the acts were passed to protect seal life, this Government has protected, or endeavored to protect, seal life in Behring Sea by seizing all vessels killing these animals there just as Russia did before us.

Mr. SPINOLA. But prior to that time?

Mr. DINGLEY. There was no protection between 1867 and the passage of the seal-protection laws of 1869 and 1870.

Mr. DUNN. And there was a great destruction of seal life.

Mr. DINGLEY. The suggestion has sometimes been made that there is an inconsistency in claiming the right of our fishermen to catch fish outside of the 3-mile limit on the northeastern coast of British America, and at the same time insisting on our right to exclude sealers from the waters of Behring Sea outside of this limit. There is no parallel between these cases. By the treaty of 1818 with Great Britain our right to fish outside of the 3-mile limit on the northeast coast of British America is expressly recognized and conceded. But Russia always maintained her right to exclusive control of Behring Sea, and ceded all her rights to us.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to be permitted to extend my remarks on this question.

Mr. DUNN. I hope that right will be extended to all gentlemen who desire to avail themselves of it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. I shall object unless some time is given on the other side to discuss this question.

Mr. SPINOLA. I have an amendment to offer. I ask unanimous consent that the time be extended a half hour.

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

Mr. BIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. McADOO. I ask unanimous consent that leave be given to offer amendments, which shall be voted upon without debate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HATCH. I object.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Is it not possible to extend the time for debate by a vote of the House or upon a motion by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think it is. This order was made by unanimous consent, and has the effect of a rule of the House so far as the consideration of this bill is concerned.

Mr. DUNN. I desire to say that I feel under honorable obligation to the gentlemen on the floor not to do anything now which will procrastinate this bill.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. I withdraw my objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine to extend his remarks.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand that the objection of the gentleman from Illinois extended to the request of the gentleman from Maine, who had received consent to extend his remarks, but the Chair understood the objection to apply to the general leave to print.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. Then that is all right.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ADAMS. Does the order cut off the right to offer amendments? I did not so understand.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not so understand, but the order reads that at twenty minutes before 2 o'clock a vote shall be taken upon the bill and amendments, presupposing that amendments would be offered before that time and not after.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BIGGS. I rose to make a parliamentary inquiry, and asked if there would be opportunity to offer amendments while the sections were being read and after the bill was read, and the Chair decided that I could offer them at any time after the bill was read. Now I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair responded to the gentleman that whenever a gentleman obtained the floor in his own right he could offer an amendment after the reading of the bill. After that time the House, by an order, directed that a vote be taken at twenty minutes before 2 o'clock.

Mr. BIGGS. Such legislation has never been heard of in any parliamentary body.

The question was put on ordering the bill to a third reading; and the Speaker announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. DUNN. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 93, noes 10.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois, and Mr. SPINOLA. No quorum.

Mr. DUNN. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 145, nays 81, not voting 96; as follows:

So the bill was ordered to a third reading.

Pending the announcement of the vote,

Mr. WHEELER said: Before the vote is announced I would like to vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman in the Hall?

Mr. WHEELER. I was not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the gentleman, under the rules, can not vote.

Mr. WHEELER. If I had been present, I would have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. McMILLIN. I was detained at the other end of the Capitol on the Aqueduct tunnel investigating committee, and did not get into the House in time to vote.

The following pairs were announced on all political questions until further notice:

Mr. LEE with Mr. HARMER.

Mr. CLEMENTS with Mr. GOFF.

Mr. FORD with Mr. GUENTHER.

Mr. PIDCOCK with Mr. BRUMM.

Mr. PERRY with Mr. CROUSE.

Mr. GLOVER with Mr. BUNNELL.

Mr. BARRY with Mr. YOST.

Mr. COCKRAN with Mr. NUTTING.

Mr. GREENMAN with Mr. YARDLEY.

Mr. PHELAN with Mr. BUTLER.

Mr. WHITTHORNE with Mr. LYMAN.

Mr. McSHANE with Mr. LAIRD.

Mr. SNYDER with Mr. BOWEN.

Mr. NEAL with Mr. HOUK.

Mr. COLLINS with Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts; also on election contest of Sullivan vs. Felton. Mr. COLLINS would vote for Sullivan; Mr. ALLEN would vote for Felton.

On this vote:

Mr. COTHRAN with Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. SOWDEN with Mr. ABBOTT.

Mr. CRAIN with Mr. STRUBLE.

For this day:

Mr. RAYNER with Mr. DALZELL.

Mr. GRANGER with Mr. DAVENPORT.

Mr. BURNETT with Mr. KETCHAM.

Mr. CANDLER with Mr. LAIDLAW.

Mr. RUSK with Mr. McCORMICK.

Mr. MORGAN with Mr. CONGER.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. SPINOLA. Before that motion is submitted I desire to move to recommit the bill with instructions to amend in the first section, line 21, by striking out the word "twenty" and inserting "ten;" so as to make it read "for ten years," instead of "twenty years." Ten years now amounts to as much as twenty years when I was a boy. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend the proposed amendment by also requiring "that the contract be approved of by the President before taking effect."

Mr. DUNN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUNN. Has the bill reached a stage when a motion to recommit is in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has. The question now pending is on the passage of the bill. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] moves to recommit the bill with instructions, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 1, line 21, by striking out "twenty" and inserting "ten."
Also amend, in same line, by inserting "the contract to be approved of by the President before taking effect."

Mr. MCADOO. I offer an amendment to the instructions offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 39, after the word "same," insert: "Provided, That any person or persons may bring suit in the United States courts in the nature of a qui tam action to recover a penalty of $10 for each and every fur-seal skin taken by any lessees provided for in this bill over the number allowed by law to be annually taken by said lessees, or by any other person or persons, in violation of law, and one-half of said penalty shall go to the person or persons bringing said suit."

Mr. DUNN. I will now ask unanimous consent that each one of these amendments be voted upon in the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. Without debate?

Mr. DUNN. Without debate.

Mr. HERMANN. I desire to offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN], and then the Chair will put the request of the gentleman from Arkansas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out line 17, and the words "in the trade" in line 18, on page 2, of the bill.
The words proposed to be stricken out are "as well as to the interests of the parties heretofore engaged in the trade."

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] moves to recommit the bill with instructions, to which the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO] offers an amendment, and the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN] offers the amendment to the amendment which has just been read. Pending that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] asks unanimous consent that these amendments be voted upon in the House, without debate, in the order in which they have been presented. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. BIGGS. I object.

Mr. CANNON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON. Is it not in perfect order to amend in the second degree the motion to recommit?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has already stated that these amendments to the amendment are pending in the order in which they have been read. The request of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] is that the House give unanimous consent to take the vote on the amendments in the House without the motion to recommit.

Mr. BIGGS. I withdraw my objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DUNHAM. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there further objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. I object.

Mr. DINGLEY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DINGLEY. If this bill shall be recommitted will it have any privilege for consideration on being reported back?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will not.

Mr. DINGLEY. That will be the end of it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will lose its privilege. The question is on the amendment to the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Oregon, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out line 17, and the words "in the trade," in line 18.

The question was put on Mr. HERMANN'S amendment; and the Speaker pro tempore declared the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BIGGS. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 65, noes 17.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO] as amended. The Clerk will report the amendment as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 39, after the word "same," add: "Provided, That any person or persons may bring suit in the United States courts in the nature of a qui tam action to recover a penalty of $10 for each and every fur-seal skin taken by any lessee provided for in this bill over the numbers allowed by law to be annually taken by said lessees, or by any person or persons in violation of law, and one-half of said penalty shall go to the person or persons bringing said suit."
Also, strike out line 17, and the words "in the trade," in line 18.

Mr. DINGLEY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. There is some misunderstanding in this part of the House as to whether or no these are amendments on the motion to recommit, or whether unanimous consent was given.

The SPEAKER. They are amendments to the motion to recommit. If these amendments are agreed to and the House should recommit the bill, it will be with instructions to insert these amendments.

Mr. DINGLEY. Then, as I understand it, if the bill should be recommitted, it will have lost its privilege.

Mr. RANDALL. We want to provide for that matter. We might provide that the bill be reported back immediately, or that whenever reported back it shall have the same rights as when originally reported.

The SPEAKER. That would be a change of the rule.

Mr. RANDALL. I know; but the rule can be changed by consent.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I suggest that when these amendments of the motion to recommit with instructions are perfected, we have a vote in the House directly so as to dispose of the matter.

Mr. DUNN. That is exactly what I asked awhile ago; but objection was made.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAISH] withdrew his objection——

Mr. MAISH. I withdrew my objection to taking a vote on the amendments.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM], as the Chair understood, also objected.

Mr. DUNHAM. Yes, sir.

Mr. DUNN. I renew my request that by unanimous consent a vote be taken separately on each of these amendments and that then the question be taken on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] has just objected to that request. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is now upon agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] as amended, which is to recommit the bill with the instructions which will now be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 21, section 1, strike out "twenty" and insert "ten."
After the word "years," in the same line, insert "the contract to be approved of by the President before taking effect."
After the word "same," in line 39, page 3, add:
"Provided, That any person or persons may bring suit in the United States courts in the nature of a qui tam action to recover a penalty of $10 for each and every fur-seal skin taken by said lessees as provided for in this bill, over the number allowed by law to be annually taken by said lessees, or by any other person or persons in violation of law; and one-half of said penalty shall go to the person or persons bringing said suit."
Strike out line 17, and the words "in the trade" in line 18.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask, by unanimous consent, if this bill be recommitted the committee have leave to report it back at any time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] asks unanimous consent that if this bill be recommitted the committee have leave to report it back at any time.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is then upon the motion to recommit with the instructions which have been read.

Mr. DUNN. I hope this motion will be voted down. If the contract be limited to ten years——

Mr. SPINOLA. I object to debate.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 78, noes 28.

So the motion to recommit the bill with instructions was agreed to.

Mr. DUNN. I now report back the bill with the amendments for the consideration of the House.

The SPEAKER. The bill has been recommitted with instructions.

Mr. CRISP. I rise to a question of privilege. I call up the contested-election case of Sullivan vs. Felton.

Mr. DUNN. I must antagonize that proposition. I want to have this question disposed of.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. On that I reserve a point of order.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman make the point of order on the reporting back of the bill by the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas makes the point that the committee has not had a meeting, and that the report of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] can not now be submitted. The gentleman will have to defer the report till some other time.

Mr. RANDALL. Was not unanimous consent given——

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent was given that the committee be allowed to report back at any time, but the gentleman from Kansas makes the point that the committee has not yet had a meeting, and that the gentleman from Arkansas can not now make the report.

Mr. HATCH. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Arkansas be permitted to report the bill back orally, with the amendments placed upon it by the vote of the House. I hope the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] will withhold his matter for one moment.

Mr. CRISP. I have already yielded, with the understanding that this bill would be promptly disposed of——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia rises to a privileged question, which, of course, has priority, if insisted upon. The Chair will, however, state the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH]. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman from Arkansas may have leave now to report back this bill, under the instructions of the House, without a written report.

Mr. HATCH. And that the vote may be taken on it without debate.

The SPEAKER. And that the vote be taken on the amendments and the bill without debate. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] is entitled to the floor.

ELECTION CONTEST—SULLIVAN VS. FELTON.

Mr. CRISP. I call up the report of the Committee on Elections on the case of Sullivan vs. Felton, from the Fifth Congressional district of California. I desire to inquire of my friends on the other side whether they have any suggestions to make in regard to the time to be allowed for debate.

Mr. MCKENNA. I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The resolutions reported by the Committee on Elections will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

1. Resolved, That Charles N. Felton, the contestee, was not elected a Representative in the Fiftieth Congress from the Fifth Congressional district of the State of California, and is not entitled to a seat on this floor.

2. Resolved, That Frank J. Sullivan was duly elected to represent the Fifth Congressional district of California in the Fiftieth Congress, and is entitled to a seat therein.

The SPEAKER. On these resolutions the gentleman from California [Mr. MCKENNA] raises the question of consideration.

Mr. TAULBEE. I ask unanimous consent that members desiring to introduce bills may have permission to hand them in at the Clerk's desk.

Objection was made.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same, namely:

A bill (H. R. 7718) for the relief of Milo McCrillis;

A bill (H. R. 10240) for the relief of J. Edwin Pilcher; and

A bill (H. R. 11777) granting the right of way to the Fort Smith, Paris and Dardanelle Railway Company to construct and operate a railroad, telegraph, and telephone line from Fort Smith, Ark., through the Indian Territory, to or near Baxter Springs, in the State of Kansas.

Mr. CARLTON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a bill (H. R. 11879) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890; when the Speaker signed the same.

MUSCOGEE INDIANS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 3920) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Muscogee (or Creek) Nation of Indians in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. PEEL. I ask that unanimous consent be given the committee to report at any time.

Mr. BUCHANAN and others. Regular order.

CALIFORNIA CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—SULLIVAN VS. FELTON.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House proceed to consider the election case?

The question was put; and on a division there were—ayes 74, noes 78.

Mr. CRISP. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was put; and there were—yeas 129, nays 12, not voting 181; as follows:

The Clerk then read the names of those voting.

The following additional pairs were announced for the rest of the day:

Mr. COTHRAN with Mr. BUNNELL.

Mr. WISE with Mr. DORSEY.

Mr. BARNES with Mr. KELLEY.

Mr. CRAIN with Mr. SYMES, on this vote.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. No quorum has voted.

Mr. CRISP. I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The roll was called, and the following-named members failed to answer to their names:

Adams,	Crouse,	Kelley,	Perry,
Bacon,	Cutcheon,	Ketcham,	Phelan,
Baker, N. Y.	Dalzell,	Laffoon,	Pidcock,

The following members were announced as being absent with leave:

Bunnell,	Granger,	Perry,	Yost.
Burnett,	Laird,	Phelan,
Crouse,	Lyman,	Yardley,

For the remaining members absent from the roll-call, no excuses were made except in the following instances:

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I ask that my colleague [Mr. CANDLER] be excused on account of sickness.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BRYCE. I move that my colleague [Mr. BACON] be excused because of sickness.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave of absence for my colleague [Mr. NEAL] on account of sickness.

There was no objection.

Mr. LAGAN. I ask that my colleague [Mr. NEWTON] be excused on account of sickness.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOPKINS, of New York. I move that my colleague [Mr. NUTTING] be excused on account of sickness.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WISE. I move that my colleague [Mr. LEE] be granted leave of absence on account of sickness.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask by unanimous consent that my colleague [Mr. BURNETT] be excused.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BLOUNT). The Chair is informed that the gentleman has leave of absence.

Mr. HITT. I ask that Mr. SYMES, of Colorado, be excused, as he is sick at his home.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I move that my colleague [Mr. O'FERRALL] be excused, as he is unavoidably absent from the city.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I ask that Mr. WHITTHORNE have leave of asbence.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is absent with leave.

Mr. SOWDEN. I ask that the gentleman from New York [Mr. STAHLNECKER] be excused on account of sickness.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CRISP. May I ask, Mr. Speaker, how many members have answered to their names?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Two hundred and forty-six members answered to their names.

Mr. CRISP. I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs on consideration of the contested-election case, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Clerk will proceed to call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 134, nays 6, not voting 182; as follows:

YEAS—134.

No quorum voted.

Pending the announcement of the vote,

Mr. CRISP said: I ask by unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. CHEADLE. I object.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I am paired with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY], but as there is no quorum I have voted.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. GROSVENOR with Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, from 3 o'clock until Saturday next.

Mr. O'FERRALL with Mr. BUNNELL, for the remainder of the day.

Mr. BACON with Mr. MCCOMAS, for the remainder of the day.

Mr. HEARD with Mr. ROWELL.

Mr. CRAIN with Mr. SYMES.

Mr. MCMILLIN with Mr. MCKINLEY.

Mr. SOWDEN with Mr. BROWER.

The SPEAKER. On this question the yeas are 134, the nays 6. No quorum has voted.

Mr. CRISP. I move a call of the House.

The question was put, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

A division was demanded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 68, noes 41.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I demand the yeas and nays.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER announced 35 gentlemen had arisen in support of the demand for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CRISP. The other side.

The other side was counted.

The SPEAKER. Thirty-five gentlemen have arisen in support of the demand for the yeas and nays and 80 against it, more than a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 128, nays 47, not voting 147; as follows:

So the call of the House was ordered.

Pending the announcement of the vote,

Mr. CRISP said: I ask by unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. McKENNA. I object.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. HEMPHILL with Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR, for the remainder of this day.

Mr. ROBERTSON with Mr. THOMPSON, of California, for this day.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. CRISP. If it is in order at this time I desire to offer a resolution in relation to the absence of members.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is my purpose to move that the House adjourn.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to telegraph to such members of the House as may be absent from the city that their presence is necessary here for the transaction of the public business, and requesting their immediate attendance.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Pending that I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was put, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 91, noes 110.

Mr. GROSVENOR demanded the yeas any nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CRISP. I only want to have this resolution adopted, which is to telegraph absent members requesting their attendance [cries of "Regular order!"] and I hope that the resolution will be passed.

Mr. DUNHAM. You might as well throw as much money in the Potomac River. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. BIGGS. What is the question?

The SPEAKER. The question is whether the House shall now adjourn.

The question was taken on the motion to adjourn; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 71, nays 142, not voting 109; as follows:

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

On motion of Mr. CRISP, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names of members voting was dispensed with.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. WILKINS with Mr. HOPKINS, of New York, for the remainder of the day.

Mr. McKINNEY with Mr. WILBER, for the remainder of the day.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the resolution of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP].

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution is not debatable.

Mr. CRISP. Do I understand the Chair to say that this resolution is not debatable?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not. It simply relates to the order of the House for procuring a quorum.

Mr. CRISP. There is nothing in the rules, I think, which forbids debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that it is simply a motion relating to the execution of the order of the House for the purpose of securing a quorum. The Clerk will report the resolution.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill for reference. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can not interrupt the proceeding at this time for that purpose. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kentucky later.

The Clerk proceeded to read the resolution offered by Mr. CRISP.

Mr. DUNHAM (pending the reading). I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUNHAM. Does not that resolution carry with it an appropriation of money? I make the point of order that it should go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the point is not well taken. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows.

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to telegraph to such members of the House as may be absent from the city that their presence is necessary here for the transaction of public business, and to request their immediate attendance.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I think it is quite apparent that our friends on the other side decline to vote on this question, and I suppose intend to filibuster—— [Cries of "Oh, no!" on the Republican side.]

Mr. REED. I trust the gentleman from Georgia——

Mr. CRISP (interposing). The gentleman from Maine is on record in favor of an early trial of election cases, so I assume that he would not filibuster.

Mr. REED. That is right. The gentleman's assumption is correct. Now let us adjourn.

Mr. SPINOLA. I ask unanimous consent for half an hour to make a speech. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRISP. If the gentleman from Maine desires to have attention called to the contrast between his remarks one week ago, when the Smalls-Elliott case was called up, and his vote, or his failure to vote, to-day on this case, I will read his remarks on that occasion to the House.

Mr. REED. I will not trouble the gentleman from Georgia to do that. A week ago to-day we had some confidence in the tribunal [laughter], but after its recent action nobody has confidence in it. We have not in public, and they themselves have not in private. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] that there is nothing before the House. The House has ordered a call—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. CRISP. If the House will indulge me one moment, in view of the statement of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED]——

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, and others. Regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded. A call of the House having been ordered, the Clerk will proceed to call the roll.

Mr. CRISP. By what rule of the House is debate not in order, when a call of the House is being had, on any resolution which relates to the call?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Georgia that his resolution, which related simply to the order of securing a quorum, has been adopted. The House had previously ordered a call by a yea-and-nay vote, and a motion was made to adjourn, which has been voted down. Nothing is now in order but to adjourn or to proceed with the call.

Mr. CRISP. "The gentleman from Georgia" desired to debate the resolution just adopted, but the Chair would not entertain any debate.

Mr. REED. It was the understanding that after the adoption of the order just agreed to an adjournment should at once be had.

Several MEMBERS. That was the understanding.

Mr. REED. The gentleman from Georgia and I have had our little colloquy——

Mr. CRISP. Opportunity will occur during this session to present the remarks of the gentleman from Maine on a previous occasion, so that the House may understand that it is indeed—

> Strange what difference there should be
> Twixt tweedledum and tweedledee.

I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. REED. If the gentleman would spend more time in reading my remarks it would be better for him.

The motion of Mr. CRISP that the House adjourn was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. T. J. CAMPBELL: A bill (H. R. 12613) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to adjust and settle the account of James M. Willbur with the United States, and to pay said Willbur such sum of money as may be found due to him thereon—to the Committee on Claims.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 19, 1889.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, presented the credentials of JAMES H. BERRY, chosen by the Legislature of Arkansas a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1889; which were read and ordered to be filed.

Mr. BATE presented the credentials of ISHAM G. HARRIS, chosen by the Legislature of Tennessee a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1889; which were read and ordered to be filed.

PENNSYLVANIA STATE CLAIM.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, in response to a resolution of January 10, 1889, directing the Secretary of the Treasury to re-examine and audit the claim of the State of Pennsylvania for money expended in 1864, for which reimbursement was provided by the act of April 12, 1866, etc., stating that as the act referred to invested the Secretary of War with special and exclusive jurisdiction over the claim in question the Treasury Department is not advised of any law under which the Secretary of the Treasury can re-examine and audit that claim; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of citizens of Kansas, praying for the submission to the States of a constitutional amendment in relation to prohibition; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FARWELL presented the petition of T. R. Satterfield and 17 others (10 voters and 8 women), citizens of Big Foot, Ill., praying for the submission to the States of a prohibitory constitutional amendment; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BLODGETT presented the petition of A. H. Tyler and 100 others (43 voters and 58 women), citizens of Camden, N. J., and six petitions of citizens of Trenton, East Creek, Greenwich, Roadstown, Bayonne, and Lumberton, in the State of New Jersey, all praying for the submission to the States of a constitutional prohibitory amendment; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask unanimous consent to present a memorial of citizens of Colfax, Wash., remonstrating against the proposed division of Whitman County, Washington Territory. This paper is not addressed to Congress, but it is numerously signed and evidently intended for that purpose. I ask that it may be received, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the paper will be received and referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. CULLOM presented the memorial of F. C. Cramer, of Sterling, Ill.; the memorial of the Columbia Turnverein of the town of Lake, Cook County, Illinois, and the memorial of 111 citizens of Illinois, remonstrating against the passage of the Sunday-rest bill; which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. BLAIR. I present the memorial of Thomas Graham, Eben C. Jayne, and from 60 to 75 others, citizens of Philadelphia, Pa., concurring in a memorial in behalf of citizens of Philadelphia, signed by a committee of citizens of that city, stating that "two grave dangers threaten at this hour the American system of common schools, the atheistic tendency in education and the strenuous demand for a division of the school funds in the interest of sectarian or denominational schools," and indorsing Senate joint resolution 86, "proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States which, while it recognizes the Christian character and purpose of our system of public education, forbids the appropriation of public money to any school or institution in which the peculiar doctrines or ceremonials of any religious sect or denomination are practiced or taught," and earnestly praying that Congress will speedily submit this or some similar amendment to the Legislatures of the several States for their approval.

The memorial covers some three pages of printed matter, and I ask its insertion in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the paper to which he has referred may be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERMAN. What is the paper?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio object?

Mr. SHERMAN. What is the paper which the Senator from New Hampshire wishes to have printed in the RECORD?

Mr. BLAIR. It is the one I described.

Mr. SHERMAN. My attention was diverted. I am generally opposed to printing papers in the RECORD. What is the paper?

Mr. BLAIR. It is a memorial in behalf of citizens of Philadelphia, praying for the passage of a constitutional amendment, which is in the form of a joint resolution now pending before the Senate, and remonstrating against the appropriation of public moneys for the support of sectarian schools.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think I shall object, not because I disapprove of the memorial, but I object to printing memorials in the RECORD. It can be printed in documentary form.

Mr. BLAIR. Then I will have the memorial returned to me from the desk, and I will state more fully its contents.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is against the rules of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to its being printed as a document, which the Senator can distribute.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask unanimous consent to state more fully the contents of the memorial.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The rules require that each petition or memorial shall have indorsed thereon a brief statement of its contents, and shall be presented and referred without debate.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent to state the contents of the memorial in full. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRIS. The statement in full will be simply reading the memorial and getting it into the RECORD in the face of the objection. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial, then, will be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. BLAIR. I will withdraw the memorial and take the first opportunity to introduce it in a speech on some appropriate bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial is withdrawn.

Mr. BLAIR presented a memorial of the Federation of Toilers, citizens of Washington, D. C., remonstrating against the employment of working people on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. BLAIR. I present the petition of R. W. Dayton and 121 others (49 voters and 73 women), citizens of Cheney, Wash.; also, the petition of H. K. Sinclair and 75 others (29 voters and 47 women), citizens of North Yakima, Wash.; also, the petition of Joseph C. Henderson and 35 others (17 voters and 19 women), citizens of Columbus, Wash.; also, the petition of A. Hyner and 14 others (12 voters and 3 women), citizens of Washington Territory, praying that the bill for the admission of Washington Territory as a State may be "so amended as to require that the constitution of said proposed State, as a condition-precedent to such admission, shall confer the right of suffrage upon the citizens thereof without distinction of sex."

I ask, as the bill has been reported, that the petitions may lie on the table. The bill is in the hands of a conference committee. I will ask of the Chair what disposition ought to be made of the petitions?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that the petitions ought to lie on the table.

Mr. BLAIR. I hope that in some way they may come to the attention of the conference committee, who have already one other important petition, signed by a large number of citizens, to the same effect.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petitions will lie on the table.

Mr. BLAIR. I present the petition of James L. Dumass and 171 others (73 voters and 99 women), citizens of Waitsburgh, Wash.; also, the petition of F. C. Lee and 102 others (66 men and 37 women), citizens of Davenport, Wash.; also, the petition of W. L. Blackwell and 26 others, of Elberton, Wash., praying that the bill for the admission of Washington Territory as a State may be "so amended as to require that the constitution of said proposed State, as a condition-precedent to such admission, shall confer the right of suffrage upon the citizens thereof without distinction of sex." I move that the petitions lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE presented the petition of S. L. Hanscom and 90 others (47 voters and 44 women), citizens of Booth Bay, Me., praying for the proposal of a constitutional amendment prohibiting the manufacture, importation, exportation, transportation, and sale of all alcoholic liquors as a beverage; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of Amos Whitaker and 42 others (11 voters and 32 women), citizens of Hampden, Mass., and the petition of Albert Hammatt and 52 others (36 voters and 17 women), citizens of North Adams, Mass., praying for a submission to the States of a constitutional prohibitory amendment; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. ALLISON presented the petition of Alexander Gow and 34 others (18 voters and 17 women), citizens of Sumner, Wash., and the petition of John Bilow and 22 others (18 voters and 5 women), citizens of Willapa, Wash., praying for the submission to the States of a constitutional prohibitory amendment; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of 1,114 citizens of the State of Iowa, praying for the passage of the Sunday-rest bill; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. PLATT presented a petition of 341 members of sundry churches in Connecticut, praying for the passage of the Sunday-rest bill; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented the petition of A. E. Reynolds and 123 others (36 voters and 88 women), citizens of Wallingford, Conn., and the petition of Ebenezer Allen and 146 others (78 voters and 69 women), citizens of Sprague, Conn., praying for the proposal of a constitutional amendment prohibiting the manufacture, importation, exportation, transportation, and sale of all alcoholic liquors as a beverage; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MITCHELL presented a memorial of citizens and residents of Whitman County, Washington Territory, remonstrating against the proposed division of that county; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

He also presented the petition of F. W. Walden and 120 others (61 voters and 60 women), citizens of Waitsburgh, Wash., praying for the submission to the States of a constitutional prohibitory amendment; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of Henry E. Crosdaile, of Seattle, Wash., praying to be reimbursed for certain losses suffered by him in the Nez Percé Indian war of 1877; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CAMERON presented petitions of citizens of Pittsburgh and Allegheny, in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of the Sunday-rest bill; which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. VOORHEES presented papers to accompany Senate bill 3267, for the relief of Willis Benefield; which were referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SABIN presented resolutions adopted by the Minneapolis (Minn.) Board of Trade, urging the opening to settlement of the Sioux reservation; which were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. EVARTS presented the petition of Theodore Sharts, of New York City, praying for the passage of a bill granting him an extension of his patent for manufacturing improved vault-light illuminating tiles, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. PADDOCK presented petitions of citizens of Red Cloud, Johnson, Glenville, and Humboldt, in the State of Nebraska; and petitions of citizens of Copp, Lebanon, Ripon, Canton, Whitewood, and Eldridge, in the Territory of Dakota, praying for the submission to the States of a constitutional prohibitory amendment; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PLUMB presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Kansas, favoring legislation looking to the disposition of the Prairie band of Pottawatomie Indians; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Kansas, favoring the appointment of a board of three engineer officers of the Army to make a careful examination of the northwest coast of the Gulf of Mexico for the selection of a suitable location for a deep-water harbor on that coast; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

RETURN OF DIRECT TAXES.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now move, as a privileged question, to take up the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference on the direct-tax bill was concurred in, stating, however, that when it is taken up I shall be willing to yield to all regular morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the motion of the Senator from Missouri to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference on the bill (S. 139) to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by act of Congress approved August 5, 1861, was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Missouri, I understand, wishes to speak on the question.

Mr. VEST. Is the question on taking up the report?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is whether the Senate will now proceed to the consideration of the motion to reconsider. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] to proceed to its consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now I am ready to give way to morning business.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BATE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3206) for the relief of Henry G. Healy, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 709) for the relief of Eli C. Officer, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of members of the Montgomery (Ala.) Field Artillery, praying for the passage of a law to increase the artillery service of the United States, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2203) to increase the efficiency of the Signal Corps of the Army, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3942) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary T. Barnes, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 12482) to increase the pension of Elizabeth L. Snell, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3860) granting a pension to Mary Ellen Fitzgerald, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom were referred two amendments submitted by Mr. MITCHELL on the 11th instant, and an amendment submitted by Mr. MITCHELL on the 4th instant, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported them severally without amendment, and moved their reference to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6862) for the relief of John R. Wood, John T. Ballard, and John T. Belew, reported it without amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 138) to print 10,000 copies of the compilation of the inaugural addresses of the Presidents of the United States, from George Washington to Benjamin Harrison, for the first century of Presidential inaugurations, with authenticated incidents connected therewith, biographical sketches of the Presidents from official sources, together with steel-plate portraits of the Presidents and steel-plate illustrations of the Capitol and White House, reported it without amendment.

JURISDICTION IN ALABAMA.

Mr. PUGH. On Saturday last the Senate had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4470) to regulate the jurisdiction of the United States district judges and of the courts over which they preside in the State of Alabama. The bill was read and the amendments were agreed to, but no final vote was taken upon the passage of the bill as amended.

Mr. HOAR. Is the morning business over?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the formal morning business is over, I ask that the conference report on the direct-tax bill be proceeded with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair had no means of knowing whether the Senator from Alabama rose to morning business.

Mr. SHERMAN. I object to anything being taken up but formal business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama rise to morning business?

Mr. PUGH. No, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio objects.

CONGRESSIONAL ELECTIONS.

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom were referred a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Kansas urging Congress to adopt measures to protect citizens of Arkansas in the exercise of all their political rights, two resolutions introduced by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON], a resolution introduced by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], a proposed amendment introduced by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] to the resolution offered by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON], and memorials signed by a very large number of persons resident in the State of South Carolina, alleging that they are lawful voters in that State, that they presented themselves at the last election of President and Vice-President to vote for electors for those offices and also to vote for members of Congress, but they were denied unlawfully the right to vote, to report a resolution and to recommend that the various resolutions, memorials, etc., which I have recited, lie upon the table, and that the resolution reported by the committee be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reports sundry petitions, resolutions, and other papers, which will be separately stated on the Journal, and he asks that the committee be discharged from their further consideration.

Mr. HOAR. The resolution contains a portion of the resolution offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], which has been printed and is familiar to most members of the Senate. It also covers an inquiry embracing other subjects. I do not think it is necessary that the Senate should be detained by its being read at the desk. I suggest that it be printed.

Mr. HARRIS. May I ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he reports a resolution in lieu of the resolutions and memorials referred to the committee?

Mr. HOAR. I report a resolution covering the whole subject, recommending that the resolutions and memorials lie on the table. My suggestion is that instead of having the Senate hear the resolution read it be printed in the RECORD as if it were read, and that it be printed as a document.

Mr. HARRIS. I have no objection to that.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to say, as a member of that committee and in behalf of the Democratic members of the committee, that we dissent entirely from the report so far as the resolution is concerned. We agree that the committee shall be discharged from the further consideration of the various petitions and the resolution of the Senator from New Hampshire. To that part of the report we agree, that the committee shall be discharged from the further consideration of those subjects, but we entirely dissent from the proposed resolution reported as a substitute by the chairman of the committee.

I wish in this connection to say that in my judgment it is an attempt to assume jurisdiction upon questions which do not belong to the Senate of the United States.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

Mr. SAULSBURY. I hope the Senator will not interrupt me.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to call the attention of the Senator——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Delaware yield?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will yield.

Mr. HOAR. I have not even had the resolution read at this moment, and I suppose that under the rules it must go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has had no opportunity to examine the resolution so as to know whether it should be referred or not.

Mr. HOAR. I was about to make that suggestion to the Chair when the Senator from Delaware rose. I have no objection, of course, to the Senator from Delaware proceeding, but the resolution will come up regularly when that committee reports.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If the Senator from Massachusetts will possess his soul in patience he will find that I do not intend to discuss the resolution. I desired simply to state the grounds upon which the Democratic members of the committee dissented from the report which the Senator from Massachusetts has made from that committee. I said that we dissented to it fundamentally because it has attempted to assume jurisdiction of questions which are not properly cognizable by the Senate. We objected further to it because it is evil in its tendencies and calculated to create agitation in the country without any good result whatever. We therefore enter our opposition and protest against the resolution as reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I am sure that in the expression of these views I utter the views of every member of the minority of that committee.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask that the resolution may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be authorized to inquire whether in any State the free and lawful expression of the will of the people in the election of members of the Fifty-first Congress and ascertaining the result thereof, or in the election of members of State Legislatures who have elected or are to elect Senators of the United States who may claim seats during said Congress, and ascertaining the result thereof, or in the choice of electors of President and Vice-President of the United States in 1888 and declaring the result thereof, has been prevented by violence, intimidation, fraud, or other crime.

Also, whether the laws governing such elections in any States have been so framed or administered as to accomplish or permit the defeat of the will of the people in such elections.

Also, to inquire into the facts of the recent election in the State of Louisiana, held on the 17th day of April, 1888, at which there was chosen a Legislature which has since elected two United States Senators.

And said committee shall also inquire whether there were in connection with the aforesaid election illegalities, frauds, false canvasses, and false returns, so extensive and systematic in their character as to show that there existed on the part of the various State election officers a deliberate plan to apparently carry said election without regard to the votes actually cast, and to choose a governor and other State officers and a State Legislature by such illegal, false, and fraudulent means, and, if so, whether said Legislature was actually and duly elected by the people of Louisiana, or was in fact substantially the creation solely of the returning and canvassing officers, and whether said State of Louisiana has a republican form of government, including a Legislature entitled to choose United States Senators, and to provide methods for the appointment of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States.

Said committee shall report at the session of Congress to be held in December, 1889, and shall have power to sit anywhere in the United States during any recess of the Senate before said session, and also to sit during the sessions of the Senate, to administer oaths, and to appoint a clerk, messenger, and stenographer; and the powers herein conferred on said committee may be exercised by any subcommittee of their number.

Mr. GORMAN. I object to the consideration of the resolution today.

Mr. HARRIS. The consideration of it is not asked.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution lies over under the rules, and will be printed.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose that the objection does not apply to a resolution which under the rules of the Senate goes at once to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If that question is raised the Chair would hold that objection being made the resolution is not before the Senate for any object or purpose whatever properly under the rules.

Mr. HOAR. All I desire this morning is to have the resolution go to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

Mr. GORMAN. I desire to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I only heard the resolution as read at the desk, and possibly imperfectly, but it seemed to me that it did not cover a very important phase which ought to be inquired into, if the inquiry is to be made at all, and that is as to the bribery and corruption that has been charged as having occurred in recent elections. Therefore I desire the matter to go over that I may look at it and probably offer an amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose that no amendment would be in order, no consideration under the rules, but that the resolution must go instantly to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. I respectfully suggest to the President of the Senate that the rule which says a report shall not be considered the day it is offered does not prevent action which by a peremptory rule must be had before it is considered at all, to wit, the reference to another committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would hold that the resolution having been reported this morning, if objection is made, it can not be considered for any purpose whatever, but must lie over under the rules until to-morrow.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the resolution be printed, as it lies over. I desire to say, as my remark a few moments ago has been misunderstood by some Senators at least, that the proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts in reporting the resolution was, instead of having it read at the desk, which is the usual form, that it be printed in the RECORD. That was the whole of his proposition.

Mr. HOAR. That was all.

Mr. HARRIS. I said there could be no objection to that, and that was all that I assented to. As I remember the reading of the resolution, I dissent from perhaps every material feature that it contains; but I think the policy and the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts was a wise one, to let it be printed and have no controversy over it now.

INAUGURATION ARRANGEMENTS.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the consent of the Senate that the committee to make arrangements for the inauguration have leave to sit during the sessions of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 3979) for the relief of James W. Snyder; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GIBSON (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3980) to authorize the New Orleans Terminal Railway and Bridge Company to construct, operate, and maintain a bridge and all the necessary approaches thereto over the Mississippi River, from or near the lower limits of the city of New Orleans, State of Louisiana, on the left bank of the Mississippi River, to the opposite bank, in said State; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. HAMPTON. I presented an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill the other day, providing for a survey of Charleston Harbor, and had it referred to the Committee on Commerce. The United States Coast and Geodetic Survey office has sent me an amendment which I wish to substitute for that one. I now present it, and move that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PASCO submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Commerce, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, making an appropriation for a light at Coney Island, New York; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GORMAN presented an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill to provide for the payment of 4th of July claims; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

THE ELEVENTH CENSUS.

On motion of Mr. HALE, it was Ordered, That House bill No. 1659 be printed with the Senate amendments numbered.

UNDERVALUATIONS, ETC.

Mr. HOAR. I ask for the present consideration of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to send to the Senate copies of official reports of special Treasury agents or others relating to sugar investigations made since March 1, 1888. Also copies of reports of recent date made by special Treasury agents or other customs officers respecting improper allowances for damage to imported merchandise, and of reports recently received from such officers or from any consular officer of the United States in relation to the undervaluation of woolen or worsted goods of any kind.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the resolution lie over and be printed.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to make a suggestion, to be heard by the Senator from Tennessee. I offered a resolution the other day asking for certain reports which had been made on this general subject, which have been sent in. I received yesterday through an eminent member of the Committee on Finance, of which the Senator from Tennessee is a member, to whom those reports were referred, a suggestion that the Secretary of the Treasury had received certain reports on the same subject which had come in later than the others, and that he desired those also to go with the others.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt his statement, I will simply say that the only object I had in view was to look at the resolution and see if we perhaps did not desire to extend the request. But as I can do that by an independent resolution I will withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection to the present consideration of the resolution, the question is on agreeing to the same.

The resolution was agreed to.

JOHN S. M'ELWEE.

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, directed to inform the Senate whether the sugar division in the appraiser's office in the New York custom-house is now in charge of John S. McElwee; and to further inform the Senate whether charges have lately been made against said McElwee affecting his personal character and conduct, and whether said charges have been investigated by Special Agent George C. Tichenor, and if such be the case to send to the Senate copies of said charges and of the testimony taken upon them, and the report of Special Agent Tichenor; and also to inform the Senate whether said McElwee has been before dismissed from the Treasury Department upon charges made against him affecting his personal character.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let that resolution go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over and be printed.

PAY OF STENOGRAPHER.

Mr. PLATT submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the stenographer employed by the Committee on Territories in considering the bill (H. R. 10614) to organize the Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes, be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers properly approved by the chairman of the committee, and that the hearings before the committee be printed for the use of the Senate.

RETURN OF DIRECT TAXES.

Mr. SHERMAN. I call up the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference on the direct-tax bill was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the direct-tax bill.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, as I stated yesterday, in making this motion to reconsider I was not actuated by any purpose of delay. If the record of our proceedings of Saturday last had shown the real state of opinion in the Senate upon the question of the direct-tax bill, I should have entered no motion to reconsider; but as that record now stands it appears, without explanation, that the report of the committee of conference went through the Senate without any opposition at all, and so far as that record can it commits every member of the Senate to the principle on which the bill and the report of the committee are framed.

In 1861 the Congress of the United States enacted that direct taxation to the amount of $20,000,000 annually should be collected from the people of the United States by assessment upon real estate, and that these taxes should be apportioned according to population in accordance with the Constitution. Another provision of the act was that where any State or Territory or the District of Columbia should assume the payment of the proportionate share of such State, Territory, or District, and pay that amount into the Treasury of the United States, 15 per cent. commission should be allowed to such State, Territory, or District.

The result of this legislation was that in 1861, whilst the war was flagrant, the Northern States, with possibly one or two exceptions, the States not at war with the Government, assumed the payment of their pro rata share of this direct tax and received their 15 per cent. commission upon the amount so assumed. The State of Missouri paid $646,000, her assessment being over $700,000, the 15 per cent. to which it was entitled under the law reducing the amount to the sum I have named. In the Southern States, with the exception of such portions of South Carolina and Louisiana as came by conquest under the control of the Federal Government, no such state of things existed. The result was that Louisiana alone of all the Southern States paid the full amount assessed to her or upon the real estate of her people under that act. In a portion of South Carolina upon the coast, where the Federal Army had taken military possession, in the vicinity of Beaufort, a tax was levied in accordance with the provisions of the bill upon real estate, the land sold, and the returns paid into the Treasury of the United States. The lands sold brought a very inconsiderable sum, and those lands were afterwards sold by the Government and a much larger amount received from that sale.

Twenty-five years have elapsed since that legislation and since the payment of these large amounts of money into the Treasury of the United States. There is no pretense, there can be none, there never will be, that this law was not constitutional in every part. There is no doubt that it received the legislative sanction according to the forms and requirements of the Constitution. Twenty-five years have elapsed, and now it is proposed to take out of the Treasury $17,500,000, paid according to law without the shadow of doubt as to the legality of the assessment, and give it back, not to the people who paid the taxes, but to the States which assumed these debts. When I say this I do not allude to that portion of South Carolina in military occupation by the Federal troops, for when the tax was directly collected from individuals, as in South Carolina, the bill provides that the amount so paid shall be held by the State authorities in trust for the tax-payer.

If this power exists upon the part of the Congress of the United States, then the unlimited power of appropriation exists and Congress can, for anything considered a general object, bankrupt the Treasury of the United States at their own will and pleasure. It is not my purpose to go into an extended constitutional argument, but I wish to put upon record my negative to any such doctrine. If the Congress of the United States can pass this bill without violating the Constitution, then it can vote every dollar in the Treasury to John Smith or Charles Brown or any other object of its generosity or gratuity. The limitations of the Constitution, as I understand them, are swept away and under any specious or plausible pretext of liberality or generosity we can take every dollar of money collected by taxation and give it to any object that we deem worthy.

Mr. President, what is the principal argument in support of this extraordinary bill? It is because some of the States have not paid the money assessed, that paid should be refunded to the other States. In other words, because one tax-payer has not discharged his duty the citizen who has discharged it can come to the power that levies the taxes and demand the payment of his assessment back. What would be the result as to taxation in this country if that doctrine should be established and that principle be accepted as correct? It would be a premium upon default. It would be a largess to the citizen who refuses to perform the obligations that rest upon him to support the Government by paying his taxes. What tax could ever be collected if this doctrine be right? When was there ever, from a municipality up to the General Government, a tax levied when there were not defaults and failures to pay? The Northern States paid this amount, the Southern States did not pay it, and the argument here is that these Northern States should receive back the money which they paid according to the Constitution and under a law which is, as to constitutionality, unquestioned and unquestionable.

Mr. President, it is further said that this money can be collected from the Southern States; that therefore this bill ought to pass releasing them. Why, sir, in 1868 the last act of Congress on the subject was enacted, postponing the collection of this tax, and from that time until this bill was originated no attempt, no idea, no suspicion was ever entertained of ever collecting one dollar from the people of the Southern States under the law of 1861. I stand here to-day and challenge the lawyers in this Senate to deny the proposition that not one dollar of that tax can be collected to-day under the act of 1861 from any citizens of the Southern States. I repeat it, no lawyer here will undertake to say that under the act of 1861 one cent can be collected from any citizen of the Southern States to-day.

When that act was passed it created a personal obligation upon the people then living in those States. It was a direct tax, and whilst Congress could adopt any instrumentality it saw fit to collect the tax, even the States themselves, yet when years have passed by, twenty-five years, and it has not been collected and no attempt has been made to collect it, and but one annual assessment of $20,000,000, for one I undertake to say that no well-informed lawyer will say that one dollar of this tax can now be collected from any citizen in any of the Southern States.

So we have this bill standing here upon the bald, naked pretense that because some of the people in the United States have not paid this tax, constitutionally and lawfully imposed, that entitles those who did pay to have the amount they paid refunded.

But, Mr. President, again it has been said that this money is to go back to the pockets of the people who paid it. I deny it. Under the provisions of this bill, about which there can be no sort of controversy, no citizen who paid this tax, unless he paid it under official authority directly operating upon him, can receive back one cent of it, except the inconsiderable sum paid in South Carolina, and the three hundred and odd thousand dollars paid in Louisiana. The tax was paid by the States, and the individual tax-payers are unknown. It can not be discovered who paid that money into the State treasuries under the State laws. Take my own State, for example. These taxes were levied according to the census of 1860; Missouri then had a population of 1,500,000 or 1,600,000 people, and to-day that State has a population of between two millions and a half and three millions. What has become of the tax-payers, even if they could be discovered, who paid this money into the State treasury, to be transmitted then to the Treasury of the United States? Thousands of them have passed away, for whom no claim will ever be made; new men have taken their place; new enterprises have come; yet we have the assumption and it has been gravely announced in Congress, that this bill is intended to pay back to the people who did actually pay this direct tax the money which came out of their pockets.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me to call his attention to a fact pertaining to the point upon which he is now speaking?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. In a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury of April 14, 1882, there is a very elaborate report, covering quite a large number of pages in this document [exhibiting], which shows in respect to the State that I have the honor in part to represent here every parcel of land in that State the owner of which paid taxes, and every parcel of land that was sold for taxes. It shows the owner, it shows the amount of assessment against the land, it shows the amount of penalty, of interest, and of costs collected, and foots up the general aggregate of collection. I apprehend no difficulty whatever in finding the people or the descendants and representatives of those people who paid the money.

Mr. VEST. What was the amount paid in Tennessee?

Mr. HARRIS. In another report——

Mr. VEST. What was the amount paid in Tennessee?

Mr. HARRIS. I will tell the Senator exactly the amount paid in Tennessee. That is exactly what I proposed to do. In another report it is shown that the assessment against the lands of Tennessee was $669,498; tax collected, $381,534.57; balance claimed to be due, $287,963.43. And in a report going into all the details it is shown that there was paid by the people of Tennessee and the sales of the lands of Tennessee the round sum of $815,000. That is the state of facts as shown from the record, and it will cause me no difficulty whatever to find the people who paid it or the representatives and descendants of the people who paid it.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, in the States which did not assume the payment of this debt under the provisions of the act of 1861 and did not receive the 15 per cent. credit by way of commission the state of case mentioned by the Senator from Tennessee prevails. I had overlooked the fact that in the State of Tennessee there was a collection by the Federal Government from citizens themselves without the intervention of the State and without the State receiving the 15 per cent. for collection.

Mr. HARRIS. That is true.

Mr. VEST. But that is not the case in any of the Northern States, except in Delaware, which I believe paid the whole amount without taking the 15 per cent.; but in the other States, as in my own, for instance, the State authorities availed themselves of that provision in the law of 1861, collected the money in their own way from their own people, paid it into the Treasury of the United States, and received 15 per cent. for doing it. As a matter of course in those cases it is impossible in the nature of things that the people who paid that tax should receive it back, and I repeat that with the exception of those portions of the Southern country where the assessment was made directly by the Federal Government upon individuals, without the intervention of the State government, not one dollar of this money will go back to the people who paid it under the law of 1861. It is, so far as legitimate argument is concerned, simply a proposition to pay back to the States that availed themselves of the 15 per cent. provision of the act of 1861 the amounts which they paid, aggregating nearly $17,500,000, to be applied by those States to whatever purposes their Legislatures may deem necessary and proper.

There can be no reasonable pretense that the payment is to the people who paid the money. The State of Missouri would under this bill receive back $646,000. She can take it to-morrow and apply it to internal improvements, to educational purposes, to any purpose that comes within the purview of the State constitution.

Mr. President, if to-day the Government of the United States were pressed for money this bill would not receive enough support in either House of Congress to make it respectable. There can be no more glaring and distinct illustration of the danger of a surplus in the Treasury such as exists now than the successful issue which has been had in this legislation. There is not a Senator here who does not realize that there is not one of us who has not been approached in behalf of all sorts of legislation—I will not characterize it in other terms—to take money out of the Treasury upon the ever-ready argument, "There is a surplus there and we must get rid of it, and we might as well have it out for this as for anything else."

Sir, I do not propose, for $646,000 even, to give up the convictions of my whole life as to the power of Congress in a case like this. I do not propose, no matter what clamor may be made at home (and I arrogate to myself no more courage than other public men), to stultify myself and give up what I believe to be the essential principles of the Constitution of my country in order to put at the disposition of the Legislature of Missouri $646,000 or any other amount.

If the doctrine upon which this bill is framed be correct, all I have ever held dear in political history and all to which I have devoted my life and propose to devote the remaining hours of it goes for nothing; this is a Government with unlimited power of appropriation for any purpose that Congress may deem general, and the limitations of the Constitution which I believe to be necessary to constitutional liberty are "sound and fury, signifying nothing."

Mr. President, upon this motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I do not think it my duty to reply to the Senator from Missouri. The text of this bill has been passed by both Houses of Congress and is beyond our reach, and it seems to me it is unusual, perhaps almost unexampled, to debate a measure that has been submitted to a conference where the text of the bill has been agreed to by a large majority of both Houses. The only propositions considered by the committee were two, one a mere formal amendment allowing offsets to be counted as payments, a very proper one, which was agreed to by the Senate; and the other was a proposed appropriation of $850,000 to be paid to citizens of South Carolina as a refund to the persons whose lands had been sold to the United States for direct tax. There was equity at the base of this proposition, but we thought as the provision was passed in the House it was subject to many objections and changes.

The committee of conference devoted their whole attention, not to the subject-matter of the direct tax that the Senator from Missouri has been discussing—we considered that as having passed beyond our jurisdiction—but to the question presented by the House amendment of how much should be paid to the owners of the lands in South Carolina which were taken under the direct-tax sale, bought in by the United States and resold by the United States, and to what other provision should be made for the payment to the original owners of those lands. After a long conference and full examination of that question we came to the conclusion that the amendment proposed by the conference in the fourth section of the bill was a substantially equitable disposition of that controversy. I believe that is the general opinion of every one who has examined it. That is all there is about it.

As to the question discussed by the Senator from Missouri, if I should open that debate anew it would only be to discuss over again propositions that were decided at the last session of Congress. The House of Representatives debated it a long time and acted upon it by a very large majority, and in the Senate I believe the vote was almost unanimous. It is simply the refund of taxes paid into the Treasury of the United States that the Government has been unable on account of civil war and for other causes to fully collect. The entire text of the bill is based simply upon the equity of paying back to the States that paid their assessments and to individuals in other States the amounts that they severally paid. It is simply based on that equity in those cases and to relieve the States that failed to pay from the charges on the Treasury books against them, an account which is required by law to be opened, and the law requires also that every sum of money due to any State shall be applied to the credit of that account. This has created a serious embarrassment in all the transactions between the States that have not paid the direct tax and the General Government.

This is a bill of peace and quiet, rendering substantial justice not only as between the States, but as between individual citizens whose property was taken and sold for direct taxes. There is not even, in my judgment, the dignity of a constitutional question in regard to our power over the public money, over this money collected from taxes, because, after all, it is only the same money in the Treasury that was paid there by either States or individuals, and to refund that money, either because we think it right or because we were unable to enforce a tax plainly constitutional, but which on account of civil war could not be enforced; and therefore we put all the States and citizens in statu quo as far as possible, and do all the justice that can be done.

I propose, therefore, unless some Senator wishes to debate it, to move——

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to ask the Senator from Ohio, in connection with the exact point he is now upon, if it has not been the rule of the Treasury Department wherever a claim has been found due to any State against which any part of this assessment remains unpaid, to set off this assessment as against whatever claim the State had against the Government of the United States?

Mr. SHERMAN. Undoubtedly, and that has been a constant cause of irritation between the State authorities and the officers of the General Government. Every Secretary of the Treasury since the time of the war has recommended this solution of the question, including the present Secretary, whose letter I have on my table here.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to ask the Senator from Ohio whether the Supreme Court of the United States has not decided, upon that very question, that it was not competent to set off a tax levied upon the property of individuals against any claim of the State?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not want to go into that. I do not think it is necessary. It has already been stated very fully by the Senator from Missouri. It is sufficient, however, to say that the law requires the executive officers to charge these amounts due to a State where they accrue under the 5 per cent. or other acts, to charge it on the Treasury books, and it has been done. The executive officers must follow the plain language of the law. There may be fine distinctions drawn by the courts in a particular case, but an executive officer must obey the law. Therefore, to relieve not only the officers of the Government, but the States themselves, from this constant source of irritation, the payment of this money now lying idle in the Treasury is the simplest and easiest solution of the question. I therefore move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table, and on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senator to withdraw that motion for a moment.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to say to the Senator from Missouri [MR. VEST] and to the Senate that with all his ability he can not be more emphatic in the denial of the power of Congress to donate money from the Treasury of the United States to any purpose whatever than I am inclined to be; but I have voted for the passage of this bill, and in a previous Congress for a similar bill, believing when doing so, as I believe now, that I was not voting to donate money out of the Treasury to any object whatever, to any State or to any individual. But we had a tax law that had been partially executed and only partially executed, and where the States or the people of the States were found to have not paid the full amount of the assessment the balances were charged up on the books of the Treasury against the respective States, and in a number of instances of States having just claims against the Government audited and ready for payment, instead of receiving the payment, the amount was set off as against this balance alleged to be due. Now, in order to equalize the collection and the enforcement of that tax law, we have either to go on to enforce and collect the unpaid balances or we have to refund the taxes already paid and release the balances remaining unpaid. With an overflowing Treasury, I believe the policy of this bill will prove the wisest and the best, and hence I favor it.

That is all I desire to say.

Mr. HAMPTON. I ask the indulgence of the Senate to be permitted to make a statement. I have been requested by the commissioners appointed by South Carolina to make a statement of their position, and I can do it best by reading extracts from a letter which they addressed to me.

Before doing that, however, I wish to say, as representing in part South Carolina, which is very much interested in this bill, for the tax of 1862 bore very hard upon portions of my State, that while I accept the compromise proposed by the committee of conference, I do not think it goes far enough. I believe the amendment proposed by the House of Representatives would not nearly compensate the people in Beaufort, and Charleston also—for they both paid a large portion of it—for the amount of money that they have spent.

I will quote two or three instances of the mode in which this money was collected in the Beaufort district:

In one instance plantations which were assessed for taxation at $72,250 were sold to pay a tax of $296. On St. Helena the Government took 39,703 acres of land at a price of $13,000, while the assessed value was $115,492. The assessed value of the property in the town of Beaufort was $515,700, and the United States bought every bit of it, excepting three lots, for $17,512. It is admitted that the lands which have been sold can not be recovered. The claim is that the owners of the property which was confiscated with or without the forms of law should be compensated for their losses.

It will be seen, Mr. President, that even the $840,000 would be a very poor compensation to those people who lost that property; but I do not propose to enter into a discussion of that, and I will read the letter of the commissioners, Mr. Trescot and Mr. Earle:

WASHINGTON, December 13, 1888.

DEAR SENATOR: When Senator BUTLER'S amendment to the direct-tax bill passed the Senate you were kind enough to say that it was without your knowledge, and that you would, if it ever came again before the Senate, express your opinion of its impropriety.

The bill went to the House, and the Judiciary Committee to whom it was referred struck out the amendment.

The Committee of the Whole, however, restored the amendment without comment or opposition from any member, and the bill as returned to the Senate will therefore contain this amendment.

But the bill from the House contains another and much more important amendment.

Upon motion of Mr. ELLIOTT, of South Carolina, there has been added to the bill a provision by which $840,000 is to be paid to proprietors in the neighborhood of Beaufort as part compensation of their great losses by the enforced tax sales.

Now, we are informed that this amendment, which goes considerably outside and beyond the principle of the direct-tax bill as passed by the Senate, may give rise to opposition in that body.

We have done all that we properly could to remove the objections to this amendment, and most earnestly hope that this just and generous action on the part of the House will be concurred in by the Senate.

But we feel it our duty further to say to you that we feel bound to release you from any obligation you may feel under to us to revive any discussion in the Senate of Senator BUTLER'S amendment.

If the renewed discussion of Senator BUTLER'S amendment would in the slightest degree risk the concurrence of the Senate in the bill which affords this relief to the citizens of Beaufort, we must beg you to refrain from any further action in reference to it.

The State is perfectly aware of the contract it made and how carefully and deliberately it was made. What our services have been under the commission is familiar to all who have any knowledge of the history of the bill. We prefer to trust entirely to the honor and good faith of the State, rather than allow any risk to be run in securing the benefits of the bill as it stands to the people of South Carolina.

With our thanks for the personal interest which you have manifested, we are, respectfully,

W. H. TRESCOT,
W. E. EARLE,
Commission.

HON. WADE HAMPTON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] moves to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to the report of the committee of conference on Senate bill 139. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] moves to lay this motion on the table.

Mr. SHERMAN. I withdraw the latter motion if we can have a vote on the first. I simply want to expedite matters.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs, then, on the motion of the Senator from Missouri to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have no desire to delay action on this subject, but I wish to say a word before the vote is taken.

When this matter was before the Senate in a previous Congress I expressed myself rather fully in opposition to the whole measure. My views have not changed. I do not believe that there is any constitutional warrant in Congress to take money paid by the people into the Treasury of the United States and donate it to States or individuals. I shall vote, therefore, for the motion of the Senator from Missouri to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was adopted, and I would defeat the whole measure, the report of the committee and the bill itself, if I could by my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri on this question asks that the yeas and nays may be entered on the Journal.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, so many gentlemen with whom I concur usually in my views of constitutional law have expressed themselves as believing that this bill is unconstitutional that, having voted for it on its passage through the Senate, I feel impelled to state, very briefly indeed, two of the reasons upon which I acted in casting that vote.

If I agreed with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] that this was a bounty given out of the Treasury to the different States, I should concur with him upon his constitutional point. But I think, sir, that this is a debt that the Government of the United States owes to these States. If not a debt which may be defined by some strict legal forms, it is a debt based upon very decided equities, and upon a wise and sound public policy connected with the very organization and purposes of the Government of the United States. The precedents in favor of such appropriations are numerous throughout the whole history of our legislation, commencing with the funding act of 1793, the Hamilton act, and running on down to the present session of Congress.

The Government of the United States clearly has devolved upon it the duty of conducting public wars, wars with Indian tribes, wars with foreign nations, war with rebellious States, or whatever other wars may be called public wars, and that duty draws with it the obligation on the part of the Government of the United States to relieve any private citizen of excessive burdens that he may have encountered or been subjected to in assisting the Government to conduct the war, and equally it places upon the Government of the United States the obligation to relieve any State from like burdens.

The war of the Revolution was a war of the States with the Kingdom of Great Britain. It could not be designated as a war of a national government in the strict sense of the word; the States themselves engaged in that rebellion—for it was a rebellion—and they prosecuted it to success, not merely through the Continental Congress and the organization that it provided for raising money and for arming men, and so on, but the different States made large contributions out of their own funds for the support and clothing of the soldiers and providing them with hospital service in time of sickness. We did not hesitate in that case nor did we hesitate after the war of 1812 was over to relieve the different States that incurred extraordinary obligations or liabilities from the expenses that they had thus incurred. We voted millions upon millions of dollars at the close of every one of these public wars for the reimbursement to the States of the money that they expended in support of the Government of the United States, thereby acknowledging and fixing in our statute law according to the whole current of it the fact that an obligation has been always recognized on the part of the United States Government to assume these extraordinary burdens and to equalize them through the agency of the Treasury of the United States.

The war of the rebellion was a war against certain States that separated and asserted that they were foreign to the Government of the United States and organized a separate confederacy. In that respect the Government of the United States was conducting as much a foreign war as could be conducted in respect of any part of the territory of the United States. But it makes no difference as to its legality whether the war was a foreign war or whether it was domestic. It was the duty of the Government of the United States to conduct that war for the maintenance of its own integrity, its own existence, and equally it was the duty of every State in the American Union that acknowledged allegiance to the Federal Government to contribute as far as it was possible, in accordance with acts of Congress, for the support of that Government in the prosecution of that war.

There were some of the States that did not contribute, some that could not be compelled to contribute because at that time the powers of the Government of the United States were not adequate to the extension of its jurisdiction, either civil or military, across those States.

Now that the matter has passed by the question remains, what is the obligation of these various States? The Senator from Missouri says that the obligation which rested according to law upon the seceding Southern States or those portions of them that were in control of the Confederate armies has been released, and that no lawyer would now contend that those States could be subjected to liability for the payment of that money.

Grant that that is so, yet the debt stands charged against them on the books of the Treasury, and the United States Government is collecting day by day some portion of that debt by withholding from these several States the payment of sums of money that otherwise would go to them. So there is a recognition, a continual subsisting recognition of the right of the Government of the United States to retain this money for the purpose of settling up the balance of the unpaid part of these debts. Those States that made the contributions, whether they did it by direct taxation upon individuals or whether they did it by the State coming in and receiving the benefit of the 15 per cent. allowance on assuming the debt and paying it, makes no difference. Those States are in equity, and they are according to public policy as recognized in all the statutes of the United States historically from the beginning of the Government down to the present time, entitled to be reimbursed from the Government of the United States.

I regard this as a debt, and I believe the obligation rests upon the United States Government equitably, morally, and as a part of the public policy of this Government, to pay the debt, and I vote this money for that purpose to pay this debt to the States.

I find myself unable to discriminate between those acts of Congress, which are so very numerous, in which we have refunded to the States expenditures of a like kind under different circumstances and the appropriation that is now sought to be made. Whether we can follow these dollars, all of them, into the pockets of the particular individuals or their successors that may be entitled to them it seems to me does not weaken the attitude which subsists between the States and the Federal Government upon this proposition that it is after all a debt of high moral obligation, a debt that has been recognized continually in the history of the Government of the United States as one to which Congress ought rightfully to respond.

I believe in the doctrine that all public wars of the United States are to be conducted by the Government of the United States, but when we have to call on either States or individuals for assistance in the stress of the times to which we may be subjected, I believe in the doctrine that the whole body of the people of the United States ought to contribute by taxation for the refunding of these expenditures. Therefore I have voted for this bill and will still support it.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, we are not dealing with the tax that was assessed during the war, and that tax was not paid by the States. It was a tax of the United States levied upon the people of the United States, and in those instances where States paid the amount that fell upon the citizens in the jurisdiction over which they as States presided, it was still a United States tax, and the relation under the Constitution was between the United States and the tax-payer, and the payment was the payment, even though done by the authorities of the State, of a United States tax, and the money became a portion of the United States funds, and from the original assessment until the realization of that assessment by the payment of the funds into the Treasury it was a transaction of the United States under and by virtue of its Constitution and in consonance with the relation existing between the Government and the citizen, not of the State, but of the United States. So this money never in any sense whatever, then or now, was or is State money, and it can not be the foundation of any State claim, and the repayment of this money to the several States is not the payment of a State claim, but it is, if it is anything, the intrusting to these States of money which should be by them appropriated to the citizens who made the payment, if they can find them.

Mr. SPOONER. I desire, if the Senator will permit me, to call his attention to the fact that the Supreme Court of the United States has decided that when a State under this act assumed the indebtedness it became then a matter of contract between the United States and the State and a State debt to the United States, and the amount was raised by taxation as the State government raises any amount by taxation for the support of the government of the State.

Mr. BLAIR. Precisely. That may be by virtue of an assignment by the State, but the point I am making is that the original relation is between the Government of the United States and a citizen of the United States, and all the equities exist as between the Government of the United States and the identical citizen from whom the taxation was derived.

Mr. SPOONER. But the very act itself provided for the assumption of the debt by the States, and the moment any State assumed the debt it became a State debt and was paid by the taxation of the State; so there is no question of individual right in any case where the debt was assumed by the State.

Mr. BLAIR. That can not be upon any principle further than this, that the State becomes the agency through which the property of the citizen of the United States is placed in the funds of the Treasury of the United States; for this is a purpose of the National Government for which the taxation itself is levied, and it is in the prosecution of a national purpose and in the imposition and execution of a national duty on the part of a citizen of the United States that this money was taken from the property of the citizen of the United States, and all the equities are of that relation.

Now, Mr. President, however that may be, we are not dealing with those funds at all, and there is no principle upon which it can be claimed that here is any legal claim of any State, because the point which the Senator from Wisconsin is making under the decision of the Supreme Court is in no wise relevant to the facts of this case. That has only relation to the collection of the tax; and whether I be right or whether I be wrong upon the sharp legal technicality, certainly I am right upon the equities as they exist between the United States and the citizen. Whether I be right on that or not, whether it be that if the State assumes the collection of the tax it then becomes a claim of the United States against the State, it is simply a claim upon the State at the uttermost for the collection and the realization of this tax, and when the State has proceeded in accordance with a legitimate imposition of the tax by the United States to collect the money and to pay it over, it ceases then to be any portion of the State funds, and the State has no legal claim upon those funds, for they belong to the United States. The State, by paying the tax, has simply paid a debt. Therefore, it is impossible, so far as concerns the facts upon which this bill is founded, that the States can have any legal claim whatever.

The fact that the Southern States or any of the Northern States failed either by the individuals in the State or by the State corporations themselves to pay this tax does not give to those who discharged their duty under the Constitution and paid their tax any right to recall it or any claim to recover it from funds in the Treasury either then or at any subsequent period of time, whether it be within any reasonable period of limitation or at any time prior to the general dissolution of the Government itself.

Now, Mr. President, let us see how this Government necessarily, to deal with it as a matter of principle, must operate. Here are certain of the States, war existing, they in rebellion, for certain causes fail to pay taxes legitimately assessed upon them by the United States. So far as the parties in this case are concerned, the principles involved would have been the same had they failed for any other cause, whether from poverty or from technical disputes arising as to the legalities and formalities of the assessment. They failed to pay their debt. The purpose of the Government to obtain the national object which it was then necessary vigorously to prosecute, to wit, the war itself for the maintenance of the Union—that purpose had to be carried out, funds had to be derived from some source, and so it came to pass that the means for the prosecution of the war, which, as I understand, cost not far from $8,000,000,000 in the whole, were levied upon and were paid by the Northern States to the amount of about $5,000,000,000, during and so soon succeeding the events of the war itself that the Southern States paid next to nothing upon that tremendous amount—five-eighths of the entire cost of the prosecution of the war for the suppression of the rebellion thus paid by Northern States before the people of the South resumed the payment of taxes to the United States.

The Southern States had these charges against them of a tax assessed after the opening and during the prosecution of the war, as legally assessed upon them as was the taxation upon any of the Northern States for the prosecution of the war, and now we come to a period of time, a quarter of a century later, when we propose to discharge that unpaid debt of these Southern and propose to refund to the Northern States who paid their proportion of that same taxation for the prosecution of this great end. We propose to refund to them that identical taxation corresponding to that which we remit in the case of the Southern States; and we say that is an act of justice; and the whole bill is placed upon the ground that it is an act of justice and equity.

I ask you to draw any distinction in equity, or in any other way, between money and tax levied by the General Government in the case of this bill, a per capita tax upon the people in the States of the country for the prosecution of the war—any distinction whatever between moneys thus obtained and money obtained for the purposes of the prosecution of that same war by internal-revenue taxation, or customs taxation, or income tax, as the case may be.

The principle asserted is that we will free the Southern States from the obligation to pay this particular tax legitimately assessed, and as an offset to that favor which we do to them, in thus releasing this taxation to obtain money to be expended in the prosecution of the war, we will release the Northern States who paid their portion of the same identical tax, a tax which in its objects and purposes was precisely the same as all the taxation that was imposed during and since the war. There is no distinction between a dollar after you have paid it into the Treasury, whether it be assessed and collected in the way this was assessed and part of it collected, or whether it be assessed by virtue of tariff regulations and collected under the provisions of a tariff or an internal-revenue law. It is all one common mass commingled in the Treasury, and you can not identify this money and say that it was derived and is to be used upon any different principle or object by reason of the fact that it was collected one way or the other way.

Now, sir, the point I wish to make is this—and I call the attention of our Southern and Northern friends to it—that we are here creating a precedent by virtue of which we can go back to the taxation and the expenditure of the whole war, and ought to if this bill is to pass, and reassess and reapportion the entire amount of the expenditure of the war which we have already paid, at least $5,000,000,000 if I am correct in my estimate and my recollection. The best authorities fix the entire expenses of the war at $8,000,000,000, of which we paid five billions out of taxes before its close, the public debt at the close of the war or soon after the war being about $2,800,000,000, or practically $3,000,000,000. I say the principle we are establishing here will require us to go back and to reapportion that part of the war expenditures which we have already paid out of the funds of the North, and call upon our friends at the South to pay their proper proportion of that $5,000,000,000. Why not? And in the future, from time to time as we have a surplus, and we should impose taxation expressly for that purpose if we can not get the money in any other way, we are under obligation, I say, to collect the necessary money to pay to the Northern States their part or proportion which they paid beyond that which properly should devolve upon them in the expenses of that great war. There is no sort of question, as a matter of principle, that we go that far in the enactment and passage of this bill.

But, Mr. President, my opposition to this bill—these being some of the reasons—is mainly because of the danger, the unknown that lies in it. My opposition to this bill as a practical measure was from the beginning and is now perhaps principally because I do not believe in its constitutionality. I do not believe we have any right to take this money or give it to the States in this way. I do believe in the largest freedom of the exercise of the discretion of the Government for the promotion of the general welfare, but no mortal man can say that taking this money out of the Treasury in the way in which we are taking and giving it to these States without conditions, without any designation of the purposes to which it shall be applied by the States, whether to public education or to any other public purpose—that the taking of these seventeen millions of money out of the public Treasury and sending it to the States without any specification of the purposes for which they shall apply it—nobody can say that this is a just and constitutional exercise of the powers of this Government. Everybody concedes this money now in the Treasury is not the money derived from this old tax and that it is the money of the United States, and the States have no claim upon it. We can not pay it out under the Constitution unless it be for the prescribed purposes mentioned in the Constitution or that great general purpose in which we have discretion; that is to say, for the promotion of the general welfare. If we do not in this bill make it necessary that the States shall appropriate this money for any purpose whatever we give it to them as freely as the air, just like the wind circulating over our continent, and they treat this money precisely as their own without any conditions whatever imposed upon its use by us as the fiduciary agents of the United States. I do not believe in that regard certainly this bill can possibly be justified or that it can be held to be constitutional.

But, as I was about to say, I have opposed this bill as a practical measure, because so long as obligations exist upon the records of the country against some of the States of this Union, as the Senator from Alabama has shown in his remarks just preceding what I now say, they have been an effectual offset to many a claim that this Government, as I believe, can not be properly called upon to meet at all; and when these charges are removed from the books you will find that these claims will be pressed and that they will be paid. There is the cotton tax of about $70,000,000—and the illegality of which, I think, by the general consensus of opinion, is now admitted—which will be pressed for repayment by those States from which it was exacted during or subsequent to the war. But so long as these claims for unpaid taxation were upon the statute-book of the country and upon the records of the Treasury Department those claims have slept. The passage of this bill will give them a resurrection which, in my belief, may result in the payment of many times the amount which this bill itself calls for.

I stated the other evening reasons why I was opposed to the passage of this bill—the inequalities of the restitution and the fact that every dollar of this money now taken out of the Treasury must be replaced by future taxation, and that it will fall upon the country at large without any reference to the individuals to whom or the States, even, to which this restitution is to be made or to whom it equitably should be made. In that direction are a great many of the reasons to my mind which strongly militate against the passage of this bill.

But I understand that we have now before us not the question of the passage of the bill; the question of reconsideration to be sure may raise one upon the general merits, but if that be withdrawn and the question is to be taken upon the adoption of the conference report there is no issue before the Senate but whether the South Carolina amendment is a desirable amendment. Am I correct upon that point?

Mr. SHERMAN. There is nothing else before the Senate.

Mr. BLAIR. There is nothing else before the Senate; then the discussion upon the general merits of the bill is undoubtedly instructive to the country, though it is no obstacle to the passage of the bill. The question is upon the validity or propriety and equity of the amendment of the House in the interest of South Carolina, and upon that I suppose undoubtedly the committee is right.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me to suggest to him, though I shall vote against the reconsideration and in favor of the passage of this bill, that unless the conference report is agreed to the bill is defeated? He is drifting, as I understand from his remarks, into a parliamentary mistake.

Mr. SHERMAN. As there is one minute left before 2 o'clock and other business may intervene, with the consent of the Senate I will now renew my motion to lay upon the table the motion to reconsider, which will at once bring us to a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves to lay upon the table the motion of the Senator from Missouri to reconsider the vote——

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator from Missouri wants the yeas and nays, we can have them on this motion.

Mr. VEST. Why not take the vote directly upon the motion to reconsider?

Mr. SHERMAN. I shall be cut off at 2 o'clock. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HARRIS. I suppose we can take the vote now without further debate.

Mr. SHERMAN. If that can be done, I shall withdraw the motion to lay on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays having been ordered on the motion to reconsider, the roll-call will proceed.

Mr. BERRY. What is the question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to the report of the committee of conference. The motion to lay on the table is withdrawn.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLACKBURN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. COKE (when Mr. COCKRELL'S name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]. If he were here, he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

Mr. EDMUNDS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. If he were present, I should vote "yea," and he would vote "nay."

Mr. EVARTS (when his name was called). I am usually paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], but as I understood him to express his opinion in favor of the report, I shall vote "nay."

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. PALMER. I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. I understand from the other Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] that his colleague, if present, would vote in favor of this bill. This question being on reconsideration, I feel at liberty to vote, and therefore vote "nay."

Mr. CHANDLER. I have been requested to announce the pair of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. The Senator from Illinois, if present, would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 8, nays 42; as follows:

YEAS—8.

Berry,	Call,	Pugh,	Saulsbury,
Blair,	Jones of Arkansas,	Reagan,	Vest.

NAYS—42.

Allison,	Butler,	Davis,	Farwell,
Bate,	Cameron,	Dawes,	Frye,
Blodgett,	Chandler,	Dolph,	George,
Bowen,	Colquitt,	Eustis,	Gibson,
Brown,	Daniel,	Evarts,	Gorman

Hale,	Ingalls,	Platt,	Stewart,
Hampton,	McPherson,	Ransom,	Stockbridge,
Harris,	Mitchell,	Sabin,	Teller,
Hawley,	Morgan,	Sawyer,	Walthall.
Hearst,	Morrill,	Sherman,
Hiscock,	Palmer,	Spooner,

ABSENT—26.

Aldrich,	Edmunds,	Paddock,	Turpie,
Beck,	Faulkner,	Pasco,	Vance,
Blackburn,	Gray,	Payne,	Voorhees,
Chace,	Hoar,	Plumb,	Wilson of Iowa,
Cockrell,	Jones of Nevada,	Quay,	Wilson of Md.
Coke,	Kenna,	Riddleberger,
Cullom,	Manderson,	Stanford,

So the motion to reconsider was not agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business, being the resolution reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections in relation to Congressional elections.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that that be laid aside informally, in order that the Senate may proceed to the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be informally laid aside, and that the Senate may proceed to the consideration of House bill 12008. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 12008) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. Before proceeding with the consideration of the bill I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading be dispensed with, and that the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations may be acted on as we proceed with the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length, and the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations will be acted on as they are reached in the reading of the text, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Public buildings," on page 2, after line 20, to insert:

For court-house and post-office at Fort Scott, Kans.: For completion of building, including suitable wainscoting and marble tiling in the principal rooms and corridors, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 16, to insert:

For court-house and post-office at Key West, Fla.: For protecting the site, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 4, to insert:

For court-house and post-office at Oshkosh, Wis.: For an additional amount in order to substitute oak finish for white-pine finish in the building, $1,600, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 12, to insert:

For court-house and post-office at Syracuse, N. Y.: For constructing an elevator in said building, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 21, to insert:

For marine hospital at Vineyard Haven, Mass.: For the purchase of land adjacent to the grounds of the hospital and for the uses of the same, $1,250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 3, to insert:

For building for Bureau of Engraving and Printing: For erection of an outbuilding, $23,000; for repairs of main building, including painting of iron-work around grounds, $5,450; in all, $28,450.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 16, after the word "Department," to insert "including marine-hospital buildings;" and, in line 17, before the word "thousand," to insert "and twenty-five;" so as to make the clause read:

For repairs and preservation of public building: Repairs and preservation of custom-houses, court-houses, post-offices, and other public buildings under control of Treasury Department, including marine-hospital buildings, $225,000; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall report to Congress at its next session a statement of the expenditure of the appropriation for repairs and preservation of public buildings for the fiscal year 1889, showing on what public buildings said appropriation was expended and the number of persons employed and paid salaries therefrom.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 24, before the word "approved," to strike out "prepared or;" in the same clause, on page 6, line 2, after the words "have been," to strike out "purchased and paid for" and insert "finally selected;" and in line 8, after the word "building," to strike out "as the limit of the cost of the site and building, after the site shall have been paid for" and insert "excluding cost of site;" so as to make the clause read:

That hereafter no plan shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury for any public building authorized by Congress to be erected until after the site therefor shall have been finally selected; and he shall not authorize or approve of any plan for any such building which shall involve a greater expenditure in the completion of such building, including heating apparatus, elevators, and approaches thereto, than the amount that shall remain of the sum specified in the law authorizing the erection of such building, excluding cost of site.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, to strike out the clause from line 11 to line 18, inclusive, as follows:

That hereafter commissions shall not be paid for disbursements on account of construction of public buildings except for moneys actually handled and paid out by disbursing agents; and payments for buildings constructed under contract, and for sites therefor, shall be made by the Treasury Department at Washington, D. C., by drafts or checks payable to the contractors for the buildings and grantors of sites, or their legal representatives.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 20, after the word "buildings," to insert "other than for life-saving stations and pier-head lights;" in line 23, before the words "public buildings," to insert "such;" and after the words "public buildings," to strike out "other than for life-saving stations and pier-head lights;" so as to make the clause read:

That hereafter all legal services connected with the procurement of titles to sites for public buildings, other than for life-saving stations and pier-head lights, shall be rendered by United States district attorneys: Provided further, That hereafter, in the procurement of sites for such public buildings, it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to require of the grantors in each case to furnish, free of all expense to the Government, all requisite abstracts, official certifications, and evidences of title that the Attorney-General may deem necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "light-houses, beacons, and fog-signals," on page 7, after line 4, to insert:

Mount Desert Rock fog-signal, Maine: For establishing complete a fog-signal upon Mount Desert Rock, off the coast of Maine, $4,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 7, to insert:

Bear Island light-station, Maine: For building a new keeper's dwelling at Bear Island light-station, Maine, $3,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 10, to insert:

Great Duck Island light-station, Maine: For establishing a light and fog-signal on Great Duck or Long Island, Maine, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 13, to insert:

Steam-tender for the first light-house district: For a new steam-tender for service in the first light-house district, $85,000; said amount to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That the construction of said tender shall be let to the lowest responsible bidder after advertisement, and said tender shall be built in an American ship-yard.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 20, to insert:

Great Round Shoal light-ship, Massachusetts: For establishment of a light ship with a fog-signal to mark the channel through Great Round Shoal, near Nantucket, Mass., $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 24, to insert:

Dumpling Rock light-station, Massachusetts: For building a new dwelling for the keeper at Dumpling Rock light-station, entrance to New Bedford Harbor, Massachusetts, $3,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 3, to insert:

Bird Island light-station, Massachusetts: For building a new dwelling for the keeper of Bird Island light-station, entrance to Sippecan Harbor, Massachusetts, $3,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 7, to insert:

Steam-tender for the second light-house district: For a new steam-tender for service in the second light-house district, $80,000; said amount to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That the construction of said tender shall be let to the lowest responsible bidder after advertisement, and said tender shall be built in an American ship-yard.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 14, to insert:

Beaver Tail fog-signal, Rhode Island: For the purchase of land required for the Beaver Tail (Rhode Island) fog-signal station, and the payment of the necessary expenses incident to such purchase, the sum of $3,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 18 of the amendment, before the words "three thousand," I move to strike out "the sum of."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was on page 8, after line 19, to insert:

Staten Island depot, New York: For continuing the construction of the sea-wall at the general light-house depot at Tompkinsville, Staten Island, New York, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 23, to insert:

Sandy Hook light-ship, New Jersey: For the construction and establishment of a light-ship with a fog-signal, for the Sandy Hook station, entrance to New York Harbor, $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 5, to insert:

Shark's Fin Shoal light-station, Maryland: For establishing a light on Shark's Fin Shoal, Maryland, to take the place of Clay Island light, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 8, to insert:

Greenbury Point Shoal light-station, Maryland: For establishing a light on the shoal off Greenbury Point, Maryland, to replace the one on the point, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 12, to insert:

Chincoteague buoy-depot, Virginia: For the purchase of additional land for site, and for repairs to the buoy-depot at Chincoteague Island, Virginia, $1,250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 16, to insert:

Portsmouth depot, Virginia: For the purchase of additional land for the site of the Portsmouth light-house depot, Virginia, including about 96 feet of water front, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 20, to insert:

Bush's Bluff light-ship, Virginia: For establishing a light-ship and fog-signal at or near Bush's Bluff Shoal, Elizabeth River, near Norfolk, Va., in addition to the balance remaining of the appropriation made by the act approved March 3, 1885, for a light-house and fog-bell on Bush's Bluff, which is hereby made available for the same purpose, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 3, to insert:

Diamond Shoal light-station, North Carolina: For the establishment of a light-house on Outer Diamond Shoal, off Cape Hatteras, North Carolina, $500,000: Provided, That the contract for the construction of the same may be let, in the discretion of the Light-House Board, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee to make a statement about this light-station. Here is a very large sum to be appropriated, and I do not find in the report of the committee accompanying the bill any explanation of the proposed expenditure. I see the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] is present. It seems to me it would be well to have some explanation of so large an expenditure for this light-station. I would like to inquire of the chairman of the committee why it is that this light is so expensive.

Mr. ALLISON. This light is to be placed off the shoal, I think about 8 or 9 miles from the shore of Diamond Shoals. The light is sunk in the sand, and to be built out in the ocean, and will cost a very large sum of money. It has been repeatedly estimated for by the Light-House Board and urged by commercial people, and I have no doubt that the amount appropriated here will be required to construct this light. It was reported favorably upon by the Committee on Commerce I think twice, this year and last, and the bill authorizing this light passed the Senate, but has not yet passed the other House. It will be a very expensive structure when completed. The purpose is to sink a caisson in the sand about 8 miles from shore and fill it with concrete, making the foundation for this light. I think it a very necessary light, although it is expensive.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether, from investigation which the committee have made, he believes it can be erected for a half million dollars, or whether, when it comes to preparation upon one of the shoals off the coast of North Carolina for laying the foundation of a light of this sort, it is not likely to take not only $500,000 but twice $500,000?

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] is more familiar with the details of this than I am, but the naval secretary of the Light-House Board stated to the committee in an examination which I think is among the papers here, that the board had consulted with distinguished engineers as to the cost of this light and that two or three parties were willing to undertake its construction for the sum named in this amendment. I believe myself that it can be done if the work is a successful one, but it may be that a contractor who would take the contract to put in this light for $500,000 would lose money in the end. I think myself it is something of an experiment to build this light as is proposed, but it is of so much importance that I think the Government ought to appropriate the money.

I will say that the general plan, as I understand it, is to construct substantially a circular caisson of 2-inch plate-iron and sink it in the sand as far as it can be sunk. The diameter of this caisson will be about 53 feet, as we are informed by the naval secretary, and it is expected that it can be sunk in sand 45 feet and thus make a permanent and substantial foundation for this light.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is it expected that it will stop at 45 feet, or what is there to prevent it from keeping going on down?

Mr. ALLISON. They hope to secure a solid foundation at that depth.

Mr. RANSOM. Mr. President——

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to inquire, before the Senator from North Carolina proceeds, whether this is the same appropriation which the Senator from North Carolina got through the Senate at the last session of Congress? I have a recollection that the Senator took the floor here and in about five minutes obtained an appropriation of something like half a million dollars for a light-house off Hatteras. I am aware that that appropriation did not become a law, but I remember very well its going through the Senate. Is this the same light or an additional one?

Mr. RANSOM. If I may inform the Senator from New Hampshire, it is the same appropriation. The bill to which he alludes passed the Senate without dissent, but has not been acted on in the House of Representatives, though it has been favorably reported by the Committee on Commerce there.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is the amount the same?

Mr. RANSOM. The amount is the same.

Mr. CHANDLER. I had the impression that in the bill which the Senator succeeded in getting through without dissent, as I believe by his admirable and brief speech on the subject, there was an appropriation of only $450,000.

Mr. RANSOM. No, sir; it was for $500,000.

Mr. CHANDLER. And that has not become a law?

Mr. RANSOM. It has not become a law.

Mr. CHANDLER. This, then, is the same proposition?

Mr. RANSOM. The same proposition.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, just one word. If it costs $1,000,000 it should be built. Even if it should cost a million and a half of dollars it should be built. It is the most dangerous spot to-day on the whole coast. There is an inland light on the shore. These reefs run away out eight or nine miles, and the inland light on the shore instead of being any benefit to strangers lures them almost onto these rocks. Ten days ago there was a ship with a cargo worth $125,000 that went down there and a dozen or fifteen lives were lost. There are more wrecks there than anywhere else. So, whatever the cost may be, the light should be built.

Mr. CHANDLER. Undoubtedly Cape Hatteras is a point at which there are many wrecks and money should undoubtedly be expended liberally for the purpose of erecting lights at that point; but I suppose that the Senator from Maine will admit that there may possibly be a limit to the expenditure which should be made in undertaking to erect a light-house upon a sand shoal, and I suppose also that it may be admitted that there is some limit beyond which we should not go out into the ocean to endeavor to build light-houses on shifting sand.

I am just as much in favor of protecting the navigation off Hatteras as I am for protecting it off the coast of Maine or New Hampshire, but there certainly is a great deal of risk in going out into the open ocean where you can find no rock and undertaking to sink caissons down into the sands of the deep for the purpose of building a light-house thereon.

I ask sincerely whether the gentlemen who have investigated this subject are not only of opinion that for the protection of commerce there ought to be a light-house there if it can be erected, but whether they believe it can be erected and made a permanent structure for any reasonable amount of money?

Mr. RANSOM. That question has been examined. There is now a proposition before the Light-House Board, and it has been submitted to both committees of this body—the Committee on Commerce and the Committee on Appropriations—in which one of the ablest firms in the country, under the advice of, perhaps, the most distinguished engineer in the United States, proposes to take the contract and insure its successful completion for the amount of money proposed to be appropriated. That is the best answer I can make to the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire, which, of course, is a proper one, for the Senate ought to know of it.

Mr. GORMAN. This proposed light-house is considered by the board and by everybody engaged in commerce as probably the most important in the world, and the necessity for it everybody understands perfectly. The engineers have been investigating in order to ascertain whether it was possible to put up a structure that would stand, and I think there can be no question from the statements which have been presented that under the provisions of the bill as draughted by the Committee on Appropriations this light can be constructed so as to be a permanent affair for $500,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PALMER in the chair). The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 10, after line 10, to insert:

North River Bar beacons, North Carolina: For the establishment of lighted beacons to guide through the dredged channel at North River Bar, North Carolina, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 23, to insert:

Steamer for Light-House Service: For the construction of a small steel side-wheel steamer for light-house service in the sounds of North Carolina and adjacent waters, the sum of $35,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out the words "the sum of."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 11, after line 2, to insert:

Bull's Bay beacon, South Carolina: For establishing a small beacon-light at Bull's Bay, South Carolina, $60.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 5, to insert:

Hilton Head range-beacons, South Carolina: For the purchase of additional land and for shifting the range-beacons at Hilton Head, entrance to Port Royal Harbor, South Carolina, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 9, to insert:

Fernandina Harbor range-lights, Florida: For the establishment of one or more sets of range-lights to guide into the harbor of Fernandina, Fla., $1,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 13, to insert:

Pascagoula River ranges, Mississippi: For establishing range-lights to guide into the mouth of the Pascagoula River, Mississippi, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 16, to insert:

Pearl River light-station, Mississippi: For the establishment of a light on the east bank of Pearl River, opposite the draw in the railway bridge, $250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 19, to insert:

Point Isabel light-station, Texas: For re-establishing the light at Point Isabel, entrance to Brazos Santiago, Tex., $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 19, to insert:

Point Betsey light-station, Michigan: For rebuilding the tower and dwelling at Point Betsey, east side of Lake Michigan, Michigan, $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 22, to insert:

Point Peninsula light-station, Michigan: For crib-work protection for boat-house and landing at Point Peninsula light-station, Michigan, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 14, to insert:

Depot for the ninth light-house district: For establishing a supply and buoy depot for the ninth light-house district, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 3, to insert:

Steam-tender for the Great Lakes: For a steam-tender for service on the Northern lakes, $85,000; said amount to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That the construction of said tender shall be let to the lowest responsible bidder after advertisement, and that said tender shall be built in an American ship-yard.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent to go back to line 20, on page 11.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] calls my attention to the fact that it is necessary to purchase a small amount of land for the light-station at Point Isabel; and although the language of the amendment is the language of the estimate, it is perhaps better to add a few words there. I therefore move to insert after the words "Point Isabel" the words:

And purchasing land therefor.

Mr. HALE. I do not object to the suggestion as a matter of extra precaution, but I call the Senator's attention to the fact that all legislation that has established lights has used precisely the language used here. "Establishing a light" is giving the power to take the site and build the structure and establish it as a complete light, and the phrase is never put in to buy land and is not needed here in any way.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does it give the authority to condemn land for establishing lights?

Mr. HALE. It is a general authority. "Establishing a light" is a large and wide phrase that covers everything, necessarily including the purchase of the land.

Mr. ALLISON. This possibly may be taken out of the general rule in view of the fact that it is the re-establishing of a light where one has been abandoned and there is some question about the purchase of property. I do not see the Senator from Texas in his seat. I think, however, there can be no objection in this special case if the Senator from Maine will allow the words I have proposed to be inserted.

Mr. HALE. The only harm it will do is to raise a doubt in other cases where those words are not inserted.

Mr. GORMAN. I think the Senator from Iowa will remember that a light was established and the question was as to the purchase of the land. The light was discontinued. Without the words proposed I doubt very much whether you could get possession of the land. It is so held by the Department, as I understand.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the words I have proposed may be inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 11, line 21, after the words "Point Isabel," it is proposed to insert "and the purchase of land therefor;" so as to read:

Point Isabel light-station, Texas: For re-establishing the light at Point Isabel, and the purchase of land therefor, entrance to Brazos Santiago, Texas, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 14, after line 16, to insert:

Columbia River light-ship, Oregon: For establishing a light-ship with steam fog-signal to mark the bar at the mouth of the Columbia River, Oregon, $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 15, to insert:

San Pedro light-station, California: For establishing a light and fog-signal to mark the entrance to San Pedro Harbor, California, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 3, to insert:

Point Sur light-station, California: For purchase of a right of way to the light-station, together with the right to use a spring of water, $1,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Life-Saving Service," on page 17, to strike out the clause from line 21 to line 23, inclusive, as follows:

For the establishment and maintenance of a refuge-station at or near Point Barrow, Alaska, on the Arctic Ocean, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "revenue-cutter service," on page 18, after line 17, to insert:

For the establishment and maintenance of a refuge-station at or near Point Barrow, Alaska, on the Arctic Ocean, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "engraving and printing," before the word "thousand," in line 25, on page 18, to strike out "sixty-three" and insert "seventy;" so as to read:

For labor and expenses of engraving and printing: For salaries of all necessary clerks and employés, other than plate-printers and plate-printers' assistants, $370,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. GEORGE. Is that the amendment which strikes out the provision of the House reducing the royalty on the steam plate-printing presses in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing?

Mr. ALLISON. This particular amendment simply increases the amount from $363,000 to $370,000. The amendment to which the Senator alludes is a little further on.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to that amendment when we get to it.

Mr. ALLISON. We shall get to it in a few moments, I will say to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRIS. This particular amendment, I would ask the Senator from Iowa, does not affect the question as between the steam and the hand printing presses?

Mr. ALLISON. In no sense.

Mr. GEORGE. The one pending now?

Mr. ALLISON. The one pending now.

Mr. GEORGE. But we shall reach the one that brings that question up, directly?

Mr. ALLISON. We shall reach the amendment in a little while which will cause some comment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in line 25.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the same clause, on page 19, line 3, after the words "notes of," to strike out "larger denomination than those that may be" and insert "large denomination in lieu of notes of small denomination;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That no portion of this sum shall be expended for printing United States notes of large denomination in lieu of notes of small denomination canceled or retired.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 12, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "1 cent" and insert "50 cents," and in line 14, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seventy-six" and insert "ninety;" so as to read:

For wages of plate-printers, at piece-rates to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, not to exceed the rates usually paid for such work, including the wages of printers' assistants, at $1.25 a day each when employed, and for wages of printers' assistants at steam-presses, at $1.50 a day each when employed, and for royalty at not exceeding 50 cents per thousand impressions for use of steam plate-printing machines, $390,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. ALLISON. I call the attention of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] to the pending amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. Let it be passed over for the present. I want to look up some memoranda I have on the subject.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator wishes to have it passed over?

Mr. GEORGE. Let it be passed over without action. I find that I can not lay my hand on some memoranda that I have.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to that course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over, if there be no objection.

Mr. HAWLEY. The whole paragraph?

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the whole paragraph be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection all the amendments in the paragraph will be passed over.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to say to the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Iowa that I wish to be present when that paragraph is considered. Having served for five or six months on a subcommittee to investigate that whole question, I desire to be present when it is considered and acted upon by the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Tennessee will be present, because it is an important amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. If it be passed over in that way, I suggest to the chairman of the committee that it be passed over until the bill is read through, that we may have some more definite time. I do not ask to fix any time, but I ask that it be passed by until after the whole bill is read.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; I will allow it to be passed over until the bill is read and the other amendments acted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 20, line 16, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seventy-four" and insert "eighty-nine;" so as to make the clause read:

For engravers', printers', and other materials, except distinctive paper, and for miscellaneous expenses, $189,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Light-House Establishment," on page 21, line 10, after the words "one hundred," to insert "and fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

Salaries of keepers of light-houses: For salaries, fuel, rations, rent of quarters where necessary, and similar incidental expenses of not exceeding one thousand one hundred and fifty light-house and fog-signal keepers, $625,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, in the clause making appropriations for "lighting of rivers," in line 5, after the name "New York," to insert "the Raritan River, New Jersey;" in line 9, before the word "Florida," to strike out "River" and insert "and Indian Rivers;" after the words "Puget Sound," in line 14, to insert "Washington Sound, and adjacent waters;" and in line 20, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty" and insert "fifty-four;" so as to make the clause read:

Lighting of rivers: For establishing, supplying, and maintaining post-lights on the Hudson and East Rivers, New York; the Raritan River, New Jersey; the Delaware River, between Philadelphia and Bordentown, N. J.; Connecticut River, Connecticut; the Elk River, Maryland; Cape Fear River, North Carolina; Savannah River, Georgia; St. John's and Indian Rivers, Florida; at the mouth of Red River, Louisiana; at Chicott Pass, and to mark navigable channel along Grand Lake, Louisiana; on the Mississippi, Missouri, Ohio, Tennessee, Illinois, and Great Kanawha Rivers; on the Columbia and Willamette Rivers, Oregon; Sacramento and San Joaquin Rivers, California; and on Puget Sound, Washington Sound, and adjacent waters, Washington Territory; the Light-House Board being hereby authorized to lease the necessary ground for all such lights and beacons as are for temporary use or are used to point out changeable channels, and which in consequence can not be made permanent, $254,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Coast and Geodetic Survey," on page 30, line 2, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to make the clause read:

For expenses in carrying on a preliminary survey of the frontier line between Alaska and British Columbia, in accordance with plans or projects approved by the Secretary of State, including expenses of drawing and publication of map or maps, $25,000, said sum to continue available for expenditure until the same is exhausted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 9, before the word "consent," to insert "advice and;" so as to make the clause read:

For superintendent, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "pay of office force" of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, on page 31, after line 19, to insert:

For one chief accountant, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, line 21, after the word "for," to strike out "two accountants at" and insert "one accountant;" and in line 22, after the word "dollars," to strike out "each $3,600;" so as to make the clause read:

For one accountant, $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 22, after the words "per annum," to strike out "two thousand seven" and insert "four thousand five;" so as to make the clause read:

For additional draughtsmen, at not exceeding $900 each per annum, $4,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, line 13, after the word "each," to strike out "one thousand eight" and insert "two thousand seven;" so as to make the clause read:

For additional computers, at not exceeding $900 per annum each, $2,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, line 5, after the word "each," to strike out "one thousand eight" and insert "two thousand seven;" so as to make the clause read:

The President of the United States is hereby authorized, in case of threatened or actual epidemic of cholera or yellow fever, to use the unexpended balance of the sum appropriated by the joint resolutions approved September 26 and October 12, 1888, in aid of State and local boards or otherwise, in his discretion, in preventing and suppressing the spread of the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Interstate Commerce Commission," on page 46, line 9, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Provided, That all expenses hereunder may be allowed and paid on the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor approved by the chairman of the commission, and hereafter the commission shall submit to Congress, at the beginning of each regular session, a report in detail of all expenditures of the commission for the preceding fiscal year.

So as to make the clause read:

For all other necessary expenditures to enable the commission to give effect to, and execute the provisions of, the said act to regulate commerce, $159,000; in all, $200,000: Provided, That all expenses hereunder may be allowed and paid on the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor approved by the chairman of the commission, and hereafter the commission shall submit to Congress, at the beginning of each regular session, a report in detail of all expenditures of the commission for the preceding fiscal year.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to modify the amendment by striking out the word "hereunder," in line 10.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Miscellaneous objects under the Treasury Department," on page 46, line 20, before the word "thousand," to strike out "50" and insert "60;" so as to make the clause read:

Paper and stamps: For paper for internal-revenue stamps, freight, and salaries of superintendent, messengers, and watchmen, $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, line 25, before the word "thousand," to strike out "25" and insert "50;" so as make the clause read:

Punishment for violations of internal-revenue laws: For detecting and bringing to trial and punishment persons guilty of violating the internal-revenue laws, or conniving at the same, including payments for information and detection of such violations, $50,000: and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall make a detailed statement to Congress once in each year as to how he has expended this sum, and also a detailed statement of all miscellaneous expenditures in the Bureau of Internal Revenue for which appropriation is made in this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, after line 5, to insert:

Prevention of manufacture and sale of adulterated food or drugs in District of Columbia: For expenses incident to enforcing the provisions of the act of October 12, 1888, entitled "An act for the prevention of the manufacture or sale of adulterated foods or drugs in the District of Columbia," $5,000; one half of this sum to be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia, and the other half from the Treasury of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 21, on page 47.

Mr. ALLISON. After line 21, on page 47, I move to add:

Office of assistant treasurer, New York: For additional clerical force for the assistant treasurer, New York, $3,500, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 50, line 3, before the word "thousand," to strike out "four hundred and ninety" and insert "five hundred and forty;" so as to make the clause read:

Pay of assistant custodians and janitors: For pay of assistant custodians and janitors, including all personal services in connection with all public buildings under control of the Treasury Department outside of the District of Columbia, $540,000; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall so apportion this sum as to prevent a deficiency therein.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was stated to be, on page 51, line 6, after the word "hospitals," to strike out "included" and insert "included."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is that correct?

Mr. ALLISON. Strike out the semicolon and insert a comma.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no semicolon in the print before the Chair.

Mr. ALLISON. Put the comma after "included" instead of before it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Striking out the comma after "hospitals?"

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, and inserting it after "included."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Leaving the word "included" to stand?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be made.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 52, after the words "counterfeit money," at the end of line 10, to strike out "and other fraudulent devices for using the United States mail;" so as to make the clause read:

Suppressing counterfeiting and other crimes: For the expenses of detecting and bringing to trial and punishment dealers and pretended dealers in counterfeit money and persons engaged in counterfeiting Treasury notes, bonds, national-bank notes, and other securities of the United States, as well as the coins of the United States, and other felonies committed against the laws of the United States relating to the pay and bounty laws, including $4,000 to make the necessary investigation of claims for reimbursement of expenses incident to the last sickness and burial of deceased pensioners under section 4718 of the Revised Statutes, and for no other purpose whatever, $64,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, line 17, after the word "necessary," to insert:

To be paid out of the "immigrant fund" provided for in the act of August 2, 1882, entitled "An act to regulate immigration."

So as to make the clause read:

Enforcement of alien contract-labor laws: For the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of the alien contract-labor law approved February 26, 1885, as amended by the acts approved February 23, 1887, and October 19, 1888, and to defray the expenses which the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to incur by the provisions of the last-named act, $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be paid out of the "immigrant fund" provided for in the act of August 2, 1882, entitled "An act to regulate immigration."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 12, on page 54.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to add, between lines 12 and 13, on page 54, in capitals, "Under the Department of State."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As a head line?

Mr. ALLISON. As a head line.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be made.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 54, after line 12, to insert:

Removal of remains of Joel Barlow: To bring from their resting place near Cracow, in Poland, the mortal remains of Joel Barlow, who was envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to the court of the First Napoleon, and who died in the discharge of his official duties, and to deposit said remains in the family vault at Kalorama, in the District of Columbia, $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary. And the Secretary of State is hereby directed to take such order as is requisite for carrying out the purpose of this appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

For the Capitol: For work at Capitol, and for general repairs thereof, including wages of mechanics, laborers, and fresco-painter, $39,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. From the committee, on page 55, after line 15, I move to insert:

To improve the ventilation of the room occupied by the Supreme Court, according to plans adopted by the court, the work to be done under the direction of the Architect of the Capitol, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 55, after the amendment just agreed to, to insert:

For repairing and regilding the frames of the large historical paintings in the several panels of the Rotunda of the Capitol, eight in number, under the direction of the Architect of the Capitol, $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 56, to insert:

For repairs to and rebuilding the north roadway in the Capitol grounds, leading from Pennsylvania avenue to the eastern front of the Capitol, and for repairs to roadways in the Capitol grounds, $10,000, to be expended under the Architect of the Capitol.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, after line 15, to insert:

Ventilation, Senate wing of Capitol: For constructing tower and large air-duct leading from same to Senate wing for supplying fresh air to the Senate Chamber from western grounds, similar to that already constructed for the same purpose for the House of Representatives, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, after line 21, to insert:

Senate stable and engine-house: For constructing wagon-sheds and fence, and for filling and grading lot north of the Senate stable, and for connecting the same with the Senate stable, $600.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. I report from the Committeee on Public Buildings and Grounds an amendment to the pending bill, and I move that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following joint resolutions; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 258) providing for the printing of the eulogies on the life and character of Edward W. Robertson, deceased, late a Representative in Congress from Louisiana; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 262) to print 39,000 copies of the fourth annual report of the Commissioner of Labor.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following concurrent resolutions; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A resolution to print 10,000 extra copies of the testimony taken and the report made by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries upon the investigation of the fur-seal and the other fisheries of Alaska;

A resolution to print 3,000 copies of Maj. A. M. Miller's translation of Harris's report on irrigation in Egypt; and

A resolution to print 1,000 additional copies of the report on production of the precious metals of the United States for the calendar year 1887.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the amendment of the House to the concurrent resolution of the Senate to print the fourth annual report of the Bureau of Animal Industry for 1887.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8557) for the relief of Dr. David Bell.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the following concurrent resolutions of the Senate:

A resolution to print 32,000 extra copies of the hearing before the Senate Committee on Education and Labor on the bill (S. 2983) known as the Sunday-rest bill; and

A resolution to print 6,000 additional copies of the second annual report of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

DISTRICT JURORS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate of the United States:

In compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 18th instant, I return herewith the bill (S. 3640) entitled "An act to amend the laws relating to the selection and service of jurors in the supreme court of the District of Columbia."

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 19, 1889.

Mr. HARRIS. I offered the resolution to have the bill returned, because of the fact that there was a clerical error in section 8 of the bill as it passed the two Houses and went to the President. I find that section 8 of the bill proposes to amend section 852 when it should have been section 862 of the District Revised Statutes. Instead of moving to reconsider the votes by which the bill was passed and ordered to a third reading, I shall prepare a concurrent resolution correcting the error.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Meanwhile the message will lie on the table.

RIGHTS OF SEMINOLE INDIANS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress:

I herewith submit for your consideration a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a proposition made on behalf of the Seminole Nation of Indians for the relinquishment to the Government of the United States of their right to certain lands in the Indian Territory.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 19, 1889.

PROPOSED EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HARRIS. In explanation of a motion that I propose to make, I want to say that I find from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that 458 nominations have been sent to the Senate by the President, as follows——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield?

Mr. HARRIS. I certainly have a right, pending the appropriation bill, to make any statement I may choose to make.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the Senator can not submit a motion now except by unanimous consent, the sundry civil appropriation bill being before the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. Does the Chair think that there is no motion in order? I do not think that the yielding of the Senator from Iowa is at all necessary to my purpose. I am satisfied that the Senator from Iowa will not object to yielding if it is desired, but I do not ask the Senator from Iowa to yield.

Mr. ALLISON. Then, if the Senator does not ask it, I will not do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will proceed.

Mr. HARRIS. Does the Chair decide that I have not a right to be heard in respect to any matter that I choose to submit, the appropriation bill being pending?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does so hold.

Mr. HARRIS. That the bill is not debatable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is debatable.

Mr. HARRIS. Then is there any rule of relevancy?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is.

Mr. HARRIS. I should be glad if the Chair would call my attention to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator intend to proceed?

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to proceed if——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will hear the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. HARRIS. Then the Senator from Tennessee will proceed. I hold in my hand a list of the nominations to which I referred, that have been reported in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which I will hand to the Reporter without reading unless some Senator desires to hear it read:

Nominations up to February 13, 1889.

Office, etc.	Nominations.	Confirmations.
Commissioner of Labor	1	1
Judicial	5	2
Probate judges, Utah	12	5
United States district attorneys	1	.....
United States marshals	1	.....
Collectors of internal revenue	2	1
Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs	1	.....
Superintendent of Indian schools	1	.....
Indian inspectors	3	1
Indian agents	4	2
Land officers	8	2
Surveyor-general	1	.....
Commissioner, Alaska	1	.....
Commissioner of District of Columbia	1	.....
Interstate Commerce Commissioner	1	1
Foreign minister	1	1
Deputy Auditor of the Treasury	1	1
Customs officers	6	.....
Revenue-service appointments	3	2
Consuls	4	4
Naval promotions and appointments	12	10
Army promotions and appointments	69	69
Surgeons in Marine-Hospital Service	52	52
Postmasters	261	23
Pension agent	1	1
Comptroller of the Currency	1	.....
Civil Service Commissioner	1	.....
Secretary of Agriculture	1	1
Total	458	179

Of these nominations 133 are regular promotions in the Navy, the Army, and the Marine-Hospital Service.

The RECORD shows that these nominations were all confirmed but 2.

But of the 325 other nominations, the great majority of which were made to fill official vacancies, there are only 48 confirmations and no rejections reported in the RECORD, leaving 277 not acted upon.

Out of 261 Presidential postmasters nominated only 23 have been confirmed, leaving 238 not yet confirmed or rejected.

I hold it to be as much the duty of the President to make nominations to fill official vacancies as to perform any other official duty, and as much the duty of the Senate to consider and confirm or reject such nominations as to perform any other Senatorial duty.

I find that President Arthur entertained the same opinion as to the duties of the Executive. He sent to the Senate 612 nominations after the Presidential election of 1884, between the first Monday in December, 1884, and the 4th of March, 1885, and all of these were confirmed except 20. I find that President Hayes was of the same opinion as to the duties of the Executive. Between the first Monday in December, 1880, and the 4th of March, 1881, and after the election of Garfield and Arthur, he sent to the Senate 680 nominations, nearly all of which were confirmed.

In view of these facts, Mr. President, I move that the Senate do now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes have it.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. STOCKBRIDGE]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL].

Mr. SHERMAN (when his name was called). Is my colleague [Mr. PAYNE] here? Has he answered to his name?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He is not recorded as voting.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am paired with him.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BUTLER. Is the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] recorded?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He is not recorded.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I am paired with him.

Mr. PALMER. I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE], and I withhold my vote.

Mr. DOLPH (after having voted in the negative). The senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] is absent from the Chamber, and I withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon withdraws his vote.

Mr. HALE. Has any pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE] been announced?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. None has been announced.

Mr. HALE. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK]. I will transfer that pair to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE], and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—24.

Bate,	Eustis,	Harris,	Saulsbury,
Berry,	George,	Jones of Arkansas,	Turpie,
Call,	Gibson,	Morgan,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Gorman,	Pugh,	Voorhees,
Coke,	Gray,	Ransom,	Walthall,
Colquitt,	Hampton,	Reagan,	Wilson of Md.

NAYS—26.

Allison,	Frye,	Mitchell,	Spooner,
Blair,	Hale,	Morrill,	Stanford,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Paddock,	Stewart,
Cullom,	Hiscock,	Platt,	Teller.
Dawes,	Hoar,	Plumb,	Wilson of Iowa.
Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Sabin,
Evarts,	Jones of Nevada,	Sawyer,

ABSENT—26.

Aldrich,	Cameron,	Hearst,	Quay,
Beck,	Chace,	Kenna,	Riddleberger,
Blackburn,	Daniel,	Manderson,	Sherman,
Blodgett,	Davis,	McPherson,	Stockbridge,
Bowen,	Dolph,	Palmer,	Vance.
Brown,	Farwell,	Pasco,
Butler,	Faulkner,	Payne,

So the motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the appropriation bill will proceed.

Mr. HARRIS. Before the reading proceeds, I simply desire to say that I shall give the Senate an opportunity to vote on this motion every day until the end of the session.

LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to give a notice, and that is that upon the conclusion of the consideration of the appropriation bill, or as soon afterwards as possible, I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 12) proposing an amendment of the Constitution of the United States in relation to the manufacture, importation, exportation, transportation, and sale of alcoholic liquors. I do not desire to ask for any extended debate on the subject unless Senators choose to indulge in it, but I do desire to have a vote upon the joint resolution.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 3981) for the relief of Philip S. Post; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DANIEL introduced a bill (S. 3982) to restore the pension of Ann G. Barker; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. STANFORD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DANIEL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 169) granting an increase of pension to Abby Slocum;
A bill (S. 781) granting a pension to John Fagan;
A bill (S. 1822) granting a pension to Ann E. Cooney;
A bill (S. 2275) granting a pension to Mary Calvert Truxtun;
A bill (S. 2314) granting a pension to John B. Covert;
A bill (S. 2439) granting a pension to Charlotte T. Alderman;
A bill (S. 5993) granting a pension to Margaret A. Hillard;
A bill (S. 3540) granting a pension to Mary P. Myers;
A bill (S. 3634) granting a pension to Mrs. Nancy Smith;
A bill (S. 1831) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Heap Nicholson; and
A bill (S. 2091) granting a pension to Frances H. Plummer.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12008) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the items for "Expenses of the collection of revenue from sales of public lands," on page 57, line 7, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-four" and insert "fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

Salaries and commissions of registers and receivers: For salaries and commissions of registers of land offices and receivers of public moneys at district land offices, at not exceeding $3,000 each, $550,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "United States Geological Survey," on page 63, to strike out lines 4 and 5, as follows:

For engraving the geological maps of the United States, $45,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 63, line 11, after the word "irrigation," to insert "and the cost thereof;" and in line 18, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Of which sum $50,000 shall be immediately available; and the Director of the Geological Survey, under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, shall make a report to Congress on the first Monday in December of each year, showing in detail how the said money has been expended, the amount used for actual survey and engineer work in the field in locating sites for reservoirs, and an itemized account of the expenditures under this and any future appropriation.

So as to make the clause read:

Irrigation survey: For the purpose of investigating the extent to which the arid region of the United States can be redeemed by irrigation and the segregation of irrigable lands in such arid region, and for the selection of sites for reservoirs and other hydraulic works necessary for the storage and utilization of water for irrigation and the cost thereof, and the prevention of floods and overflows, and to make the necessary maps, including the pay of employés in field and in office, the cost of all instruments, apparatus, and materials, and all other necessary expenses connected therewith, the work to be performed by the Geological Survey under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $250,000, of which sum $50,000 shall be immediately available; and the Director of the Geological Survey, under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, shall make a report to Congress on the first Monday in December of each year, showing in detail how the said money has been expended, the amount used for actual survey and engineer work in the field in locating sites for reservoirs, and an itemized account of the expenditures under this and any future appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 64, after line 2, to insert:

Repair of the ruin of Casa Grande, Arizona: To enable the Secretary of the Interior to repair the ruin of Casa Grande, situate in Pinal County, near Florence, Ariz., $2,000; and the President is authorized to reserve from settlement and sale the land on which said ruin is situated and so much of the public land adjacent thereto as in his judgment may be necessary for the protection of said ruin and of the ancient city of which it is a part.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "miscellaneous objects," in the appropriations for the Government Hospital for the Insane, on page 65, after line 5, to insert:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 92, after line 23, to insert:

Rent of buildings for District of Columbia militia: For rent of buildings or rooms for use of the volunteer militia of the District of Columbia, and for fitting up the same, $10,000, to be immediately available; one-half of which sum shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half out of the Treasury of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 93, after line 6, to insert:

Site and pedestal for statue of General Philip H. Sheridan: For the preparation of a site and the erection of a pedestal for a statue of the late General Philip H. Sheridan in the city of Washington, $40,000; said site to be selected by and said pedestal to be erected under the supervision of the Secretary of War, the chairman of the Joint Committee on the Library, and the chairman of the Sheridan equestrian statue committee of the Society of the Army of the Cumberland.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 93, after line 15, to insert:

Site and pedestal for statue of General John A. Logan: For the preparation of a site and the erection of a pedestal for a statue of the late General John A. Logan in the city of Washington, $40,000; said site to be selected by and said pedestal to be erected under the supervision of the Secretary of War, the chairman of the Joint Committee on the Library, and the chairman of the Logan statue committee of the Society of the Army of the Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DANIEL. I beg leave to give notice of an amendment that I shall offer at this point of the bill, to insert after line 24, on page 93, as an additional paragraph, an appropriation of $40,000 for the preparation of a site and the erection of a pedestal for a monument of General Winfield Scott Hancock. I shall not ask a vote on it until the committee amendments have been completed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for "United States military prison at Fort Leavenworth," at the top of page 96, to insert:

For the transportation of prisoners, on their discharge from the prison, to their homes or elsewhere, as they may elect, provided the cost in each case shall not be greater than to the place of last enlistment, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "United States military prison at Fort Leavenworth," on page 96, line 12, after the word "each," to insert "one forage and wagon master, at $60 per month;" and in line 17, after the word "all," to strike out "sixteen thousand one hundred and eighty" and insert "eighteen thousand one hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For pay of civilian employés: One clerk, at $1,800 per annum; one clerk, at $1,400 per annum; one clerk, at $1,200 per annum; extra-duty pay for prison guard, $2,420; five foremen of mechanics and one engineer, at $1,200 per annum each; one forage and wagon master, at $60 per month; one teamster, at $40 per month; two night-watchmen and four teamsters, at $30 per month each; and one fireman, at $60 per month, to take charge at night of the heating apparatus and electric light; in all, $18,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the same head, on page 96, after the word "all" at the end of line 22, to strike out "eighty-three thousand four hundred and twenty" and insert "ninety-two thousand eight hundred and forty;" so as to make the clause read:

For repair of officers' and non-commissioned officers' quarters, the hospital, the chapel, the offices, and all prison buildings and shops, including civilian labor thereon which can not be done by prisoners, $5,000; in all, $92,840.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriation for "National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers," on page 104, in line 20, before the words "hundred thousand," to strike out "two" and insert "four;" so as to read:

State or Territorial Homes: For continuing the aid to State or Territorial homes for the support of disabled volunteer soldiers, in conformity with the act approved August 27, 1888, in addition to the unexpended balance of the appropriation made by said act, $400,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 104, line 20, after the word "dollars," in the same clause, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter no State under this appropriation shall be paid a sum exceeding one-half the cost of maintenance of each soldier or sailor by such State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the items "under the Department of Justice," on page 105 in the appropriations for "court-house, Washington, D. C.," after line 5, to insert:

For improving the sanitary condition of the building, per estimate of the Architect of the Capitol, $1,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 105, line 21, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twelve thousand four hundred" and insert "twenty thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

Defending suits in claims against the United States: For defraying the necessary expenses incurred in the examination of witnesses and procuring of evidence in the matter of claims against the United States and in defending suits in the Court of Claims, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney-General, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 106, line 14, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "eighteen;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to strike out:

One half of which sum shall be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half out of the Treasury of the United States.

So as to make the clause read:

Support of convicts: For support, maintenance, and transportation of convicts transferred from the District of Columbia, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney-General, $18,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 108, after line 3, to insert:

Opinions of the Attorneys-General: To enable the Attorney-General to employ a competent person to edit and prepare for publication and superintend the printing of the nineteenth volume of the Opinions of the Attorneys-General, $500; and the Attorney-General is hereby authorized to expend that sum, and also the $1,000 appropriated by the act of March 3, 1885, chapter 360, to enable him to employ a competent person to edit and prepare for publication and superintend the printing of the seventeenth and eighteenth volumes of the Opinions of the Attorneys-General in such manner, notwithstanding section 1765 of the Revised Statutes, or section 3 of the act of June 20, 1874, chapter 328, as will in his judgment best accomplish the work of editing and preparing for publication and superintending the printing of the three volumes of Opinions above mentioned.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Judicial," in the appropriations for "United States courts," on page 109, after the word "statutes," to strike out the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That the accounting officers of the Treasury shall audit, adjust, and settle the accounts of marshals within sixty days next after the same are presented for allowance.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 109, line 24, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty" and insert "sixty;" so as to make the clause read:

For payment of United States district attorneys, the same being for payment of the regular fees provided by law for official services, $260,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 112, after line 4, to insert:

For the payment to Mrs. Amelia C. Waite, widow of the late Chief-Justice of the United States, the balance of one year's salary of the Chief-Justice, $8,745.

Mr. GORMAN. I for one can not agree to this amendment of the committee. Congress has made ample provision for the Chief-Justice and associate justices of the Supreme Court, paying them, it is true, only a fair salary, but providing for their retirement after a service of ten years at the age of seventy, with pay up to the time of their death. I think it is a vicious system which is here proposed. I think it is very improper to go beyond what the law already provides for.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. I inquire who has the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. GORMAN. I will yield to the Senator from New Hampshire if he desires.

Mr. BLAIR. I was unable to hear the Senator; that was all.

Mr. GORMAN. I was simply opposing the amendment now pending, found on page 112. We have other cases of United States judges who have died, one in this District, the late Judge William M. Merrick.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I ask for order, and I insist upon it that the Senator who has the floor and is speaking is entitled to be heard.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire is quite right. There is too much confusion in the Chamber, too much audible conversation, too much moving about.

Mr. GORMAN. I have no idea of going into a general discussion upon this amendment. I simply say that I think it is unwise and impolitic to make a provision of this sort for the widows of United States judges, whether the widow of a Chief-Justice or any other.

We have, as I said a moment ago, another case of a very distinguished man, who was a resident of Maryland and a district judge here in the District of Columbia, who died leaving his widow very poor, as I understand, and her friends have presented to Congress a proposition to pay her the balance of one year's salary. In that case, as in the case of the Chief-Justice, ample provision is made for retirement at the age of seventy after a service of ten years, with full pay to the date of their death.

While we have in cases of military officers, and some others possibly, granted pensions, there is a different rule for them. I think myself it is unwise to extend a pension to anybody in the civil service. Therefore I shall ask for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, the observations of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] are entitled to great force, for the distinction I think myself ought to be kept up between the ordinary and average operations of the Government in its military and in its civil establishments; but the case of Chief-Justice Waite and of his widow is peculiar and unique.

This gentleman, after a service of ten years, of great benefit to his country, and a service that commended itself strongly to the conservative interests and opinions of the country, was entitled to retire and to receive the full salary that he would have received had he continued as Chief-Justice. Another Chief-Justice in that case would have been appointed, who would also have received the same salary, and the United States would have continued to pay during the life of ex-Chief-Justice Waite in that case two salaries for the same office. Chief-Justice Waite, being in full possession of his powers and faculties, an earnest and devoted worker, and an industrious judge, doing every duty, did not feel called upon to retire, because he could earn in the service of his country the whole of that salary and to the satisfaction of every suitor and every member of the bar and every member of the community in the whole United States. So doing, in the two years that he continued thus to serve before he died he saved by his own labor and his own industry in the service of his country precisely the sum that would have been paid to his successor had he retired and received that same pay, as of right, as a retired judge who has served ten years.

Besides that, which is the great point, Congress passed a law, and I think a very good one to get on with the business, that each judge of the Supreme Court of the United States should be entitled to a clerk, or some person by whatever name he was called, at a salary, I think, of something like $2,000. I am not speaking now particularly in regard to the precise amount. I am told—I have not examined the accounts to be sure that it is true, but I believe it to be true—that the Chief-Justice, in that vigor and earnestness and economy which always characterized him in his modest life, thought that he could get on without a clerk and he did not have one; and that $2,000 a year, if that was the sum, was saved to the United States.

Then in the full possession of his faculties and his powers, and in the full exertion of his industry for the interests of the public in his charge, he suddenly died and left his family in a condition somewhat of distress. Now, it does appear to me that this case is a perfectly exceptional one, that has no parallel at all, and where, therefore, we may justly, as a case not making any precedent for the future, make this provision for giving to his widow the balance of the year's salary, as we have done for a great many years to all the ministers of the United State dying abroad, and, I believe, to Senators and Members of the House of Representatives. And so I appeal to my friend from Maryland to consider whether the suggestions I have made—and I am sure they are right in point of fact—are not worthy of the Senate passing unanimously this amendment.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I agree with all the Senator from Vermont has said about the late Chief-Justice. He had the respect and confidence of everybody, and if there was any proper way by which an appropriation could be made to reimburse his family, if he had a claim, because of the non-employment of a clerk, I could agree to it. But I do not believe that the mere fact that he saw proper to serve two years after the time when he could have retired constitutes any claim whatever.

From what I have seen since I have been thrown immediately into contact with all these propositions and the consideration of these matters my belief is that the whole tendency is to create permanent appointments in the civil service and to make provision for the retirement of officials. We have had pending in this very Congress a broad proposition, presented by the Senator from South Carolina, covering all branches of the civil service, to have a pension granted. I think the time has arrived when that idea must be checked, and I say that there is no justice in giving the balance of a year's salary to the widow of the late Chief-Justice.

It would be a matter of great injustice to make this appropriation and not extend it to the widows of other United States judges. If you adopt this proposition there is no escape hereafter from the appeals which will be made to the Senator from Vermont and myself. They are made to me to-day from a great many of the most reputable men connected with the bar of Maryland in behalf of the widow of Judge Merrick. I do not believe it is right in that case; I do not believe it is right in this case.

I know how ungracious a thing it is to oppose propositions of this kind, and all my instincts revolt against not doing a kindly act for anybody who is in distress. I should be very glad, if I had the opportunity, to join the Senator from Vermont or any other Senator in aiding either one of them in that respect; but I do not think it is a proper rule for us to adopt, and therefore I can not vote for the proposition.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I pay the homage of my respectful admiration to the Senator from Maryland for standing up and expressing what he believes to be right as a matter of public policy and justice, and therefore I have no criticism to make upon him for opposing this amendment. But I again submit to him the distinction that he has suggested in the cases he has named, between the instance of the Chief-Justice and that of Judge Merrick, and between the instance that he has suggested of life officers and those of other officers of the United States.

As to the first, the ground upon which this appropriation is proposed as to the Chief-Justice is that, being entitled to retire after a ten years' valuable and most honorable and commendable service and being still able to perform its duties, in the two years that he continued to perform them until he died in the full strength of his powers he saved to the United States the sum of $21,000, his salary being $10,500 a year, as I recollect—I believe the Chief-Justice has $500 a year more than the other justices. He saved to the United States $21,000 and did the service that would have been paid for to somebody else, he receiving the same if he had retired fully and completely during that period of time, for he was not ill, he was not broken down, he was primus inter pares all the time; and as a little additional consideration to which I referred before, and I repeat it, he did not avail himself to the extent of about $4,000, I suppose, of the services that he was authorized to employ of a clerk. That part of it is a small matter.

Now, if Judge Merrick—which is the analogous or supposed analogous case that my friend refers to—had served in the supreme court of the District of Columbia for ten years with honor and capacity, as undoubtedly he would have done had he lived, and then being in the full strength of his powers and entitled to retire, had held on, to the admiration and to the benefit of everybody, with his accumulated experience for two years more, and had then died, the case would be like that of Chief-Justice Waite, and I should with great pleasure (although I am not entitled to say that about his appointment) vote, as I shall now for the widow of the Chief-Justice, to pay the balance of his year's salary for the year in which he died to his widow or to his heirs or to anybody who was entitled to receive it. I am sure my friend from Maryland, whose sincerity I entirely respect and whose principles I entirely agree with in the main, would vote for it too.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, in addition to the considerations which have been presented by the Senator from Vermont, it seems to me that a general proposition might cover this case which would not in the least encroach upon the indisposition to civil pensions. I have myself no inclination to encroach in any degree in any instance upon our proposition that civil pensions are not to be assumed by this Government. Beyond such as are provided for service in the Army and the Navy, we have a provision for the pension of the justices.

Mr. President, the salary of the Chief-Justice and his associates is fixed by the year. It is not so much a month, it is not so much for the days that he lives, but it is on the plan of a year's proposition for his manner and expenditures of living. The year counts in always as the round of his expenses and the provision for them; and when, as in the cases of private persons, there comes to be by death an interruption of the annual complete earning, it is suitable for those that are competent and able to take up that broken term and provide for the family, thus left in that broken term, with all the expenses that attend even the unexpired term, that this should be met by, I will not call it a generous, but a just and considerate treatment of the situation.

I know nothing in the system of our Government that prevents us to entertain views and considerations of this kind that belong to all the employments and relations of life that are just and considerate; and I therefore submit that there is not the least inference nor the least danger of a precedent for pensions to the families of deceased civil servants when we thus look each case in the face and say whether, in this interrupted tenor of life and in this changed condition of circumstances, we can not carry out the stipend for the year, our fixed sum being shaped on the year and not on the monthly or daily enjoyment.

I would be as far as any one from making one step forward that looked to civil pensions for survivors in the civil service, but I can not overlook the fact that in this, as in every other employment of life, this sad interruption of the calculations of the year are fairly met by carrying through the year the stipend that was provided.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, I shall vote for the proposition to pay the widow of the late Chief-Justice the balance of the salary for the year in which he died. It happened that the next day, or the day but one after the death of Justice Merrick, I introduced a proposition here by way of amendment to this bill to do the same by his widow.

I listened with great interest and pleasure to the remarks of the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS], and I feel and think that there is no danger of an overliberality to a pure and upright judiciary. We have not such a number of Federal judges as to make them likely to be a dangerous tax upon the Treasury, and whether a man is in one branch or another of that judiciary he is set apart from all other avocations of life; the business avenues are closed to him; the channels of trade are no longer open for him; and if he does his duty in the spirit of the judiciary as the duties ought to be discharged, he will be entirely devoted to a class of business taking him away from the possibilities of taking care of himself or looking out for his family when he is dead and gone.

The Senator from New York has well and aptly suggested that a certain mode of life is devolved upon men who assume these positions. That is true as to the Chief-Justice and it is likewise true as to the other judges of the Federal courts. They enter upon their plans, and with the beginning of the year their arrangements are made that will run through the year, and I, for one, have not the slightest hesitation in saying that in the case of every judge who discharges his duties in honor and in good faith and who dies upon the bench, I am willing that his widow shall have the year's salary for that year to finish out his broken plans. His life stopped as suddenly as a clock stops, and I am willing for the widow of Chief-Justice Waite to have what was calculated upon in the beginning of the year to close out and round up the affairs of life as well as she can.

I shall support the proposition, as I said, in behalf of the widow of the Chief-Justice. I should be very glad if the proposition made by me in behalf of Mrs. Merrick should have the same support.

I repeat, there is no danger in dealing liberally with the judiciary. They are neither paid too much nor have they any opportunity to add to their income. I do not know that I am entitled to speak of it, but I am not aware of what has become of the amendment which I had the honor to offer in behalf of the widow of Justice Merrick. It is not here. I sent it to the Committee on Appropriations and I suppose it died there. If I felt in a retaliatory spirit, which, of course, I do not and could not possibly on such a subject, I might be moved to say that both these propositions are wrong. I do not think so. I think they are both right and that we shall honor ourselves by adopting them.

I have no fear of a precedent on this subject—the precedent of paying a year's salary to the widow of a dead judge who had done his duty honorably and well and worn himself out and died in the harness. I am afraid of no such precedents. They have no terror for me; and I shall be glad if I can get a chance, and I believe I shall ask the privilege, of moving at the proper time, and if I am in order to do so now, I will move the amendment in behalf of Mrs. Merrick, that she, too, shall be paid the balance of her husband's salary for the year in which he died, the current year. I do not know how much it is nor how little, but I will make that motion, if it is in order, and I appeal to the Senator from Iowa, who has charge of the bill, not to raise any point of order. I do not want to embarrass him and will not, but, if it is in order now, I should like to have the amendment considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order to move an amendment to the amendment of the committee. The Senator from Indiana will oblige the Chair if he will forward it in writing to the desk.

Mr. VOORHEES. I will send and get the amendment.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, it seems to me, if the argument of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] is a correct argument that this ought to be paid because the Chief-Justice did service for two years after he was entitled to retire, the amendment ought to have proposed the payment of $21,000 and not of the balance of the year's salary. If the Government of the United States owes a debt to this widow by reason of that service, then the amount should be, as I have stated, $21,000, and not $8,745, which is named in the amendment. If it is a gift or a donation that we propose to make to her, then it can not be supported upon the ground advocated by the Senator from Vermont. If the law when it was made had said that if a judge of the Supreme Court after serving ten years did not choose to retire he or his family should be entitled to receive such additional sum as would have been paid to his successor, then it ought to be paid; but if that was not the law and the contract between the parties, I should like to know by what authority you take from the Treasury of the United States this money and donate it to Mrs. Waite or to anybody else.

The Senator from Vermont says that this can not operate as a precedent, that it is a unique case, standing upon its own ground, and will not be used as a precedent. A few years ago, when a proposition was made in this Chamber to grant to the widow of President Lincoln a pension, it was argued by the advocates of the proposition at that time that it could not operate as a precedent, and the RECORD will show it. It was said that he was killed in time of war, that he was Commander-in-Chief of the Army, and that his case stood alone and could not be used as a precedent; and yet to-day the widow of every ex-President who is alive is drawing a pension of $5,000 a year by acts passed since then.

The Senator from Vermont says this can not be used as a precedent, and yet the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] says it ought to be a precedent and that the widows of all judges should be placed upon the same footing. Can there be any result but one if this policy is adopted, and that is, to foist upon the Government of the United States a list of civil pensioners?

It is also said that the custom has been to pay the widow of a deceased United States Senator or of a Member of the House of Representatives a full year's salary. Mr. President, if that has been the custom, it is one that would be "more honored in the breach than the observance." We have no right to take the people's money and pay it to the widow of a Senator or any one else. If that be right, it ought to be provided for in the law of the land and made general, and it should be said, "If any Senator or Member of Congress, the Chief-Justice or any judge of a United States court shall die during his term, his widow shall be entitled to receive the full year's salary."

That to which I most strongly object is that in the absence of law, when there is no law, contrary to the understanding of the parties at the time when the office was given and received, we come in afterwards and on an appropriation bill, in a way of which the people of the United States know nothing, seek to make these gifts and donations. The open and manly way would be to make a general law to cover all such cases. If you are going to have such a law make it in advance, and then when persons accept office they will understand it; but when a man accepts an office with a fixed salary his widow has no right to expect anything more than that.

If the money we are voting belonged to us individually we might donate it, but it belongs to the people of the United States; and the widow of a Chief-Justice has no greater right, in my estimation, to such a donation than the widow of the poorest man in this land who never held an office. When men seek and accept office having a fixed salary, that salary is part and parcel of the contract, and they have no right and the Congress of the United States, as I conceive, has no right to take other people's money and give it to those who can succeed in bringing the most influence to bear upon members of Congress.

Chief-Justice Waite had $10,500 a year, and yet it is said that his family is in such a condition that it is necessary to pay more. Mr. President, how many tens of thousands of widows are there throughout this broad land who have not an independent income of $500 a year? And yet they have the same interest as we have in this money that you propose to take and give to other parties.

It seems to me that this amendment can not be defended on any character of principle; it seems to me that it is legislation the effect of which will be the gradual building up one by one of a civil pension-list, and giving pensions to such parties as are able to bring to bear such influence, social or otherwise, as will secure to them money that belongs to the people of the United States.

I trust that neither the amendment nor the amendment to the amendment will be adopted by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. VOORHEES. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations:

For the payment to Mrs. Mary W. Merrick, widow of the late associate justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, the balance of one year's salary of the associate justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, $3,622.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am very sorry to see these propositions connected together, so that one is to become a make-weight to the other. I hope the Senator from Indiana will be satisfied to take a separate vote on each of the amendments. As I knew Judge Merrick, if the circumstances are such as to justify it, I shall probably vote for the Senator's amendment, but I do not like to see these amendments put one upon the other.

Mr. VOORHEES. I have no objection to that. The Senate understand me very well. I have no disposition to say that unless the amendment I offer is adopted I shall not vote for the proposition in favor of Mrs. Waite. I shall vote for it; but I know of no other way to bring the matter to the attention of the Senate. What is the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Indiana should understand that a single objection will rule the amendment out of order if it is offered as a separate amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I think I shall have to make the point of order.

Mr. VOORHEES. Does the Senator from Iowa make the point of order?

Mr. ALLISON. I shall feel constrained to make the point of order. I regret to do it, but I see no reason why Mrs. Merrick's name should be inserted here unless we shall also include the widow of Judge Settle, in whose behalf an amendment is pending. If these two cases shall be adopted, it means that hereafter we shall pay the widows of all judges one year's salary. If the Senate desires to do that, very well.

Mr. VOORHEES. I have already very distinctly defined my position in that regard, and, in order not to embarrass the committee, I will ask the Senator from Iowa to allow me at a stage further on to renew my amendment. If he will consent to do that I shall withdraw it for the present.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course the same point of order would lie then. I will reserve that question.

Mr. VOORHEES. That is not giving me any chance.

Mr. ALLISON. I mean to say that, if offered as an independent amendment, it would be as liable to the point of order as it is now.

Mr. DAWES. I think the Senator from Iowa should withdraw that point of order. I can not see any distinction between these two cases, and I should be very reluctant to vote for one and vote against the other. While I should prefer to see them as separate propositions, yet I should dislike very much to see my name on record for one and against the other. There is no distinction between them.

Mr. VOORHEES. I know of none.

Mr. DAWES. There can not be any distinction between them.

Mr. VOORHEES. Unless I can get an opportunity at a later stage to get a vote upon my amendment, which I took the pains to offer a week ago and have referred to the Committee on Appropriations, I shall insist upon whatever parliamentary rights I may have at this stage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Indiana that the point of order is made under that provision of the rule which requires that an amendment to be in order adding a new item to or increasing an appropriation already in the bill, shall have been reported from a standing committee of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Appropriations one day before it is considered. The Chair thinks, therefore, that, unless the Senator from Iowa withdraws the point of order, the amendment plainly can not be received.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not withdraw the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa declines to withdraw the point of order.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, I perceive the difference in the situation of the two amendments, the one having been quite regular as well as having been adopted by the committee, while the other was not so adopted; but I should hope that the grounds upon which this proposition I have insisted upon is based, of treating the relation to a broken year of a member of the judiciary, should be applied to one as much as to another. I do not mean by that that I would pass a general law to that effect. All I ask is that each circumstance should be presented to Congress as to what is a fair, a right, and a just thing to do under the circumstances not contemplated in the arrangement for the payment of salaries, as each was expected to have the year run out; and therefore, when the situation is such as that we can vote upon the proposition to pay the salary for the unexpired year of Judge Merrick, I shall vote for it.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, it is exceedingly distasteful to any man of good feeling to oppose a proposition such as that which is now before the Senate. It is for that very reason that such a proposition is a dangerous one, for it attacks the weakness of human nature upon its best side.

While the Senator from Vermont was disclaiming the idea that the proposition to give the remnant of a year's salary to the family of Judge Waite should be looked upon as a precedent, the words were scarcely out of his mouth ere it was looked upon as a precedent and accepted as such by the very body to whom his argument was addressed; and it requires but little prescience, Mr. President, to foresee that with the name of the Chief-Justice of the United States (who receives a salary for life twice as large, and more than twice as large, as that which is given to any representative of a State in the Senate or any representative of the people of the States in the House of Representatives) at the head of the list, it will not be long before all of the judiciary are added to it; and when you have gotten through with the judiciary, who belong to a single profession of those engaged in lucrative pursuits, the officers of the Government who are selected from the various and miscellaneous walks of life will proffer their claims for like consideration, and it will be argued by them that since the lawyers have made their profession and its eminent men a preferred class, those who have gone into public life from other pursuits should not submit to stand upon a plane less high or less favored.

The idea of the men who framed the Government of the United States was that its official class should not be a favored class, segregated from the people and lifted upon a plane above them; and while they were perfectly willing to give just compensation, and, if you please, liberal compensation, to those who serve them by superior skill or education, they were in the beginning of the foundation of this Government, and should be as long as it expects to contain that fierce love of liberty which asserts itself against a favored few, opposed to a civil pension-list. The glory of being Chief-Justice of the United States is one which should animate the highest ambition, and not the idea that the Chief-Justice's family is to stand upon a better official footing than others after he has departed this life and sleeps with his forefathers.

The proposition to begin the establishment of a civil list in this country could not possibly address itself to the Senate or the House in a more plausible or in a more dangerous form than when associated with the name of the late Chief-Justice of the United States. His name was highly honored throughout the broad limits of this land. He was not only a man of eminent capacity, but he was a man of that supreme balance of mind and of that moral element which commanded the respect and confidence of all who came in contact with him, whether pleading a cause at the bar or meeting him in social life. And, sir, this makes it peculiarly unpleasant and distasteful for any man to rise and oppose a proposition which makes provision in some shape for those whom he has left behind him.

But, Mr. President, the movements of political ideas are never refining. Politics is a charcoal artist and it draws its picture in broad profile lines. It does not fill it up with a little refinement of taste or circumstance or personal considerations, such as those which might appeal to us in this so-called unique and peculiar case. It is the thin edge of the wedge that is always presented. The ax is never plunged into the tree that is felled by the butt-end. When, however, one slice has been cut out, another speedily follows.

Judge Merrick's family must receive the same consideration, and while the Senator from Vermont or the Senator from Maryland or any other Senator can see some refining discrimination, the great body of the people only see that one eminent judge has had his family provided for and that of another judge, not indeed so eminent, but with character perhaps just as estimable and with a family just as needy, has not been provided for; that where two men were in the field, one was taken and the other was left. That is the broad picture which is presented to popular comprehension. Then come Judge Settle's family, and then we get to the broad gauge of the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from New York, who would pension in some sort the widows of all the judges, and when you have gotten through with the judges why not pension everybody else's family who may have been located in the city of Washington and have separated themselves from the channels of trade and from the lucrative walks of life? You have gotten through with one profession and you have established a principle. You have no longer the broad landmark of the American institutions and the American idea of government to barricade yourselves behind.

Before you is an open plain with a long procession of Government employés, who by your machine civil-service institution are already entirely independent of the people and of the people's representatives, and every one of them, from the top to the bottom of the line, will follow. A peculiar case first, a little discrimination, a refinement next, and then the principle being lost and the gate being down, there is your long civil list, a pensioned official oligarchy in the United States of America.

That is the way I see it. That is the inevitable result of all such movements. They always begin with a very unique, a very peculiar, and a very distressing case, appealing to the soft side of human nature, its generosity, its kindness, its affection for those who may be for the moment poor and helpless. It lets go and the principle is gone, and when it is gone it is never retrieved.

Now, Mr. President, I should like to see those who in heart and in soul are Republicans and Democrats, who believe in "a government of the people, by the people, and for the people," who look askant at the establishment of an official oligarchy and at the erection of a favored class, take their stand by their flag in the field, by the side of the proposition to pension or provide for the family of the Chief-Justice of the United States. That proposition has everything to commend it that any such proposition could have to commend it, and the principle will stand out clear and lustrous by an example in which men voted simply because it was a naked principle, with all the inclinations of their hearts and with all the charitable emotions of their natures prompting them to do otherwise.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I should feel a good deal more the force of the arguments which are presented against this measure with so much eloquence and so much political philosophy and at such length if we did not sit here in solemn silence every week of the session while bills are passed giving to the widows of our own associates who die by our side or to those of members of the other House the balance of the salary for the year in which they died; and for even the employés of the Senate about us every week almost a resolution is passed charging the balance of a year's salary after death upon the contingent fund which is intrusted to us by law for specific purposes. I say that all this eloquence, which is almost irresistible at times, would have a greater effect upon me if I could see some consistency go along with it, and the same earnestness and the same stress and power manifested on occasions when we could make a precedent and when we are called upon to make a precedent; but why it is that upon an occasion that has more of merit in it than almost any other we can conceive of, certainly more than ever can be supposed to surround the case of one of our own associates, the question of making a precedent should be raised I am at a loss to know.

I remember within the last session, unless my memory fails me, that we went back a dozen years to pay the widow of a deceased Senator, and that out of our own contingent fund, and there was not a word whispered against it in this Senate Chamber.

I am bound to give all the weight possible to these arguments, and I feel the force of them; but I must confess that the effect upon me at least is weakened when they are weighed under the considerations which I have just suggested.

I do not know any reason why we should stop with this measure. I believe that the widow of Justice Merrick should have the same treatment and for the same reason, and likewise the widow of Justice Settle.

Until I find myself compelled by a sense of duty to stop voting for such appropriations for the employés of the Senate and the members of either branch of Congress, I shall not feel it my duty to stop voting for them upon such occasions of rare merit as these three suggested.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator spoke about the Senate having voted pay to the family of a deceased Senator who died some twelve or more years ago. I do not remember any such case.

Mr. DAWES. I speak from memory; but there was a Senator from Virginia——

Mr. COCKRELL. Ah! that is what I thought. I beg to say that that was fought here for years, and I had the pleasure of defeating it for about eight or ten years, but finally it was passed. I fought it in season and out of season as a great outrage. That was the case of Judge Underwood.

Mr. DAWES. No remarks of mine upon this or any other occasion should have any such application as the Senator from Missouri has felt it necessary to repel on this occasion. The Senator from Missouri on all occasions is ready to vindicate his view of right and wrong, as is every other Senator here. I am making no application of these remarks to any individual Senator. I only say that I am at a loss myself to give that weight to these arguments—I am speaking for myself only—that I should if I had not seen the precedents so thick all around me.

Mr. HOAR. Will my colleague allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. DAWES. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I am entirely in sympathy with my colleague in his argument, and I think the precedents which he has adduced are applicable, and are entirely well founded in fact, with one exception, the case of Judge Underwood, which was reported by me by the direction of the committee of which I am chairman. That was a payment for the expense of contesting a claim to a seat in the Senate by a person chosen by a State Legislature, by a body which had been recognized as a constitutional Legislature for the purpose of giving the constitutional assent to the separation of West Virginia from Virginia, and the constitutional assent to the thirteenth amendment. The Committee on Privileges and Elections thought that Judge Underwood was entitled to be treated as every other contestant for a seat in this body is treated; that is, if he has a fair public reason on which he bases his claim, we pay him.

Mr. DAWES. I did not allude to Judge Underwood.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] alluded to Judge Underwood, and I thought my colleague did.

Mr. DAWES. I did not allude to Judge Underwood. I alluded to a Senator down on the Peninsula who died with the small-pox here in the city some ten or twelve years ago.

Mr. HOAR. I beg my colleague's pardon. I thought he, too, alluded to Judge Underwood.

Mr. DAWES. I did not allude to Judge Underwood, but to another case, that of a Senator who died very suddenly, under very distressing circumstances, some dozen years ago, and to whose family an allowance was afterwards made.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should be very glad if the Senator would mention any two Senators, except Segar and Underwood, who claimed to be Senators from Virginia.

Mr. DAWES. I can furnish the name. It was another case, that of a Senator, I think, who died in this city, and he died of that terrible disease, the small-pox, under distressing circumstances, and many years afterwards, and very recently, I think, we paid his widow the balance of a year's salary. That is my memory. Of course I speak with some diffidence as to the accuracy of my statement, but I did not have the case of Judge Underwood in my mind, and if I have made any misstatement it was not in reference to Judge Underwood.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, this question is very much magnified, in my judgment, by the remarks which have been made upon it. There is nothing in the Constitution of the United States nor in our system of government nor in the philosophy upon which our Government is founded to justify the propositions of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY]. This Government is not based upon such propositions as that an oligarchy can be created without the consent of the American people. The majesty and power of the Government lie in the power of the people over its representatives here, and not in the idea that to give a distinguished public servant a balance of a year's salary will overthrow this mighty fabric of popular power. What an idea that is that ten or twelve thousand dollars paid to the widow of the Chief-Justice of the United States as compensation for distinguished public services will destroy the power of the people to say to us, their servants, you have done right or you have done wrong.

Mr. President, what kind of a government should we have, what kind of a people should we have, if the constantly recurring appeals to the public sense of right and wrong should find a people and a public opinion so debased that it could not correct an extravagant appropriation of the public money, having the effect of building up an oligarchy, and that oligarchy composed of old ladies the widows of men whom the people had exalted from the humblest and poorest of the people because of their talents, their integrity in public administration, and their sympathies with the poor and the oppressed?

But, Mr. President, I dissent from the propositions of the Senators from Arkansas and Virginia as destructive to the people and to popular government, as an insult to the majesty of republican power. What are they? That democracy demands that the man who has won the confidence of the people shall not be approved by the public judgment and rewarded for himself and his family, and distinguished virtue and public service, but he shall be punished with poverty and with the marks of inferiority in living, in appearance, in respect to their relations, to their fellow-citizens; that democracy shall degrade its public servants and impoverish them.

Why, sir, you can build no government on such ideas. The Almighty has not created a race subject to rewards and punishment, but for the purpose of teaching that governments must reward and governments must punish, and the philosophy of government must be based upon rewards for public virtue and public service, and not punishment and disesteem. That is the philosophy of our Government and the people appreciate distinguished public service. The Senator from Arkansas can not find a widow who has not an income of $500 who is a widow of a Chief-Justice of the United States——

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. CALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. BERRY. I assert the proposition that because she is the widow of a Chief-Justice of the United States that gives her no rights and no privileges over and above any other widow.

Mr. CALL. But it gives her the approval of the American people, because democracy has presented a servant, a man of the people, who has discharged with incorruptible fidelity to the people public duties on which that widow and every other widow with or without an income of $500 has depended not only for that income, but also for the peace and prosperity which she has enjoyed. This reward gives the widow with $500, and any other widow and child and poor person, future chief-justices who will give repose and security and protection to the poor people of the country, while under the system of the Senators from Arkansas and Virginia they would be the slaves of the rich.

There would be no public servants whose virtues stood so high and incorruptible that the poor man would find in him a protector. There never was a government based on the idea of no reward for eminent public virtue. The Almighty has not given such a principle of government in the divine economy of this world. I reprobate these ideas as destructive of the principles of republican government. They are destructive of the majesty of the people and of all hope of preserving republican institutions.

I shall vote with pleasure to reward Chief-Justice Waite, now in his grave, by appropriating to his widow the remainder of his year's salary. The incorruptible and able man of the people who in the administration of a high office resists the blandishments of great wealth and social influence and powers, and stands in his great office as the protector of every poor man and every poor home and every widow and orphan of this sixty-five millions of American people against the grasping rapacity and greed of avarice and social and moneyed power, deserves and will receive the grateful appreciation and reward of the American people. Whom the people honor and reward as their representative and servant I wish to reward and approve. They are my masters and yours, and their will I will respect and obey by rewarding the man of the people whom they wish to honor and reward.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] asked for the yeas and nays, as I understood.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator from Maryland afterwards to withdraw that request.

Mr. BERRY. I renew the request for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas asks that upon this question the yeas and nays may be entered on the Journal.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLACKBURN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], who is not present.

Mr. BERRY (when the name of Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, was called). My colleague [Mr. JONES, of Arkansas] is absent. If he were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. STOCKBRIDGE]; but believing that he would vote as I do if he were present, I vote "yea."

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SHERMAN (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. PAYNE], but I feel quite sure he would vote "yea" in this case if he were present, and I vote "yea."

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HISCOCK (after having voted in the affirmative). I withdraw my vote. I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] and did not notice his absence.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote of the Senator from New York is withdrawn.

Mr. BUTLER. I am paired generally with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON], but believing he would vote "yea" on this proposition, if he were present, I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—28.

Allison,	Edmunds,	Hawley,	Pugh,
Blair,	Eustis,	Hoar,	Sawyer,
Butler,	Evarts,	Ingalls,	Sherman,
Call,	Frye,	Jones of Nevada,	Spooner,
Chandler,	Gibson,	McPherson,	Stewart,
Cullom,	Gray,	Paddock,	Teller,
Dawes,	Hampton,	Platt,	Voorhees.

NAYS—16.

Bate,	Cockrell,	George,	Plumb,
Berry,	Coke,	Gorman,	Reagan,
Blodgett,	Colquitt,	Harris,	Vest,
Brown,	Daniel,	Morgan,	Walthall.

ABSENT—32.

Aldrich,	Farwell,	Mitchell,	Sabin,
Beck,	Faulkner,	Morrill,	Saulsbury,
Blackburn,	Hale,	Palmer,	Stanford,
Bowen,	Hearst,	Pasco,	Stockbridge,
Cameron,	Hiscock,	Payne,	Turpie,
Chace,	Jones of Arkansas,	Quay,	Vance,
Davis,	Kenna,	Ransom,	Wilson of Iowa,
Dolph,	Manderson,	Riddleberger,	Wilson of Md.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will proceed.

Mr. SHERMAN. Unless the Senator from Iowa objects, I will move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. ALLISON. I had hoped that we could finish the reading of the bill to-night, but as it is now quarter to 6 o'clock I will not oppose the motion.

Mr. PLUMB. I offer an amendment, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD, to come in as a separate section at the close of the pending bill. I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be stated.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Soldiers and sailors who were honorably discharged from the military and naval service of the United States of the war of the rebellion, and the widows and children of deceased soldiers and sailors shall be eligible to appointment, transfer, and promotion, subject only to such examination as may be prescribed by the heads of Departments and without competitive examination.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move—and Senators all know what it is—the printed amendment that I offered to the District of Columbia appropriation bill regarding the National Park. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, so that, if they shall report it, it will be in order to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection.

Mr. ALLISON. I give notice that to-morrow, after the usual routine morning business, I shall ask the Senate to take up the pending appropriation bill, so that we may complete it as early as practicable to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before submitting the motion to adjourn the Chair will dispose of some business on his table.

REPORT ON PRODUCTION OF THE PRECIOUS METALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed for distribution by the Director of the Mint, 1,000 additional copies of the report on production of precious metals of the United States for the calendar year 1887.

IRRIGATION IN EGYPT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 3,000 copies of Maj. A. M. Miller's translation of Harris's report on irrigation in Egypt, of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 2,000 for the use of the House.

FISHERIES OF ALASKA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That 10,000 extra copies of the testimony taken and the report made by the Committee on the merchant marine and fisheries upon the investigation of the fur-seal and the other fisheries of Alaska be printed, to be distributed as follows: To the Senate, 2,000 copies; to the House of Representatives, 4,000 copies; to the Fish Commission, 1,500 copies, and to the Secretary of State and the Secretary of the Treasury, each, 1,250 copies.

HOUSE RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 258) providing for the printing of the eulogies on the life and character of Edward W. Robertson, deceased, late a Representative in Congress from Louisiana, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 262) to print 39,000 copies of the fourth annual report of the Commissioner of Labor was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] moved that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 51 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 20, 1889, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 19, 1889.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CORRECTIONS.

Mr. HATCH. I rise to a question of privilege. I desire to have the RECORD of yesterday's proceedings corrected. I submitted yesterday morning as a question of privilege a motion with reference to House bill No. 11027, defining "lard," etc. I will read the motion that I made:

I move that the bill be referred to its proper Calendar, that is to say, the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, as of the date July 28, 1888, when the House made the improper order, and with the same number of the report, namely, No. 3082.

I find in the published proceedings that the Speaker, after deciding the question of privilege, is reported as saying:

The gentleman from Missouri moves that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the Chair puts that question to the House.

This leaves out an important part of my motion, "as of the date July 28, 1888, when the House made the improper order."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct. The Chair put the motion in the form in which the gentleman had stated it; and it so appears in the Journal.

Mr. HATCH. I find that the Journal is correct; but I want to have the RECORD corrected.

The SPEAKER. The RECORD will be corrected.

Mr. HATCH. The RECORD is also incorrect in another particular. I read from the proceedings:

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum. [To Mr. HATCH:] Has this reference to the cotton-seed oil?
Mr. HATCH. No.

I did not say "no;" I said "oh." I was starting to make an explanation to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] when a gentleman in the aisle made it for me. The gentleman from Alabama then withdrew his point of order. I did not say "no," because the bill has some reference to cotton-seed oil. I was starting to say something sharper than "no."

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made.

CIVILIAN ENGINEERS IN RIVER AND HARBOR WORK.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a statement of the names, residences, compensation, and places of employment of civilian engineers engaged in river and harbor work, from July 1, 1887, to June 30, 1888: which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

DR. DAVID BELL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 8557) for the relief of Dr. David Bell, said bill having been returned from the Senate with an amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask that the amendment of the Senate be now considered.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In lines 5 and 6, strike out the words "his pay as assistant surgeon of the Thirteenth Tennessee Cavalry" and insert "pay of an assistant surgeon in the United States Army."

There being no objection, the amendment was considered, and concurred in.

WILLIAM ENGLISH.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 3721) authorizing the President to appoint William English an officer in the regular Army of the United States, the said bill having been returned from the Senate with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER], who desired that this bill be withheld by the Chair, does not seem to be now in his seat. If there be no objection the Chair will withhold the bill. The Chair hears no objection.

REFERENCE OF SENATE BILLS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House bills of the Senate of the following titles; which were severally read twice, and referred as follows:

The bill (S. 2766) for the relief of Maj. James Belger—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (S. 3818) to establish a light-house and fog-signal at Old Orchard Shoal, in Princess Bay, New York—to the Committee on Commerce.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. The bill (H. R. 4961) providing for the organization of the militia of the District of Columbia, with Senate amendments, was erroneously referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. It should have gone to the Committee on the Militia.

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments, and accede to their request for the appointment of conferees.

Mr. BLOUNT. I must insist upon the regular order.

Mr. MCADOO. This will bring it into conference immediately. The amendments are those which the gentleman from Georgia objected to.

Mr. BLOUNT. I object to proceeding with that matter now.

Mr. MCADOO. Then I ask unanimous consent that the bill be allowed to remain on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the Committee on the District of Columbia will be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it will remain on the table for the present.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

INVITATION TO CANADIAN PARLIAMENT, ETC.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 265) authorizing the President to invite the several members of Parliament of the Dominion of Canada and the premiers and cabinets of the several provinces to visit the United States as the guests of the nation, and making appropriation therefor; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BRYCE, for two days, on account of important business.

To Mr. PETERS, for one day, because of sickness.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a resolution for reference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Georgia as insisting on the demand for the regular order, and the Chair will proceed——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. On last Friday the House made an order providing that to-day, for one hour after the reading of the Journal, should be set apart for the consideration of measures reported from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the special order of the House was made; but the gentleman was not insisting on calling it up.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am insisting upon it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. RANDALL. But that is subject to appropriation bills.

Mr. RICHARDSON. No, there is no such exception; nor was any exception made when the order was asked.

The SPEAKER. Of course it is not in order to move now to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the only way the gentleman can be prevented from occupying the time assigned under the special order is by raising the question of consideration on each proposition that he presents.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not do that. It will not take perhaps exceeding thirty or forty minutes to get through, and these are matters of great importance to members of the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask the gentleman to modify his order so that we may first proceed with the appropriation bills.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I can not yield now. I was appealing to the House for more than a week to get this order, which was given with the consent of the gentleman from Georgia himself.

The SPEAKER. The order makes no exception as against appropriation bills. The special order begins at 12 o'clock and 15 minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. Very well; the gentleman from Georgia in charge of the appropriation bill does not seem to be persistent in pressing his bill, and of course it is none of my business.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I now call up joint resolution No. 258.

Mr. BLOUNT. So far as the remark of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is concerned, I wish to say that the gentleman from Tennessee has an hour this morning, after which I propose to press the consideration of the Post-Office bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee is entitled to the floor, and, as the Chair understands, now calls up a measure which the Clerk will report.

PRINTING EULOGIES ON THE LATE MR. ROBERTSON, OF LOUISIANA.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I call up for present consideration the joint resolution (H. Res. 258) providing for the printing of the eulogies on the life and character of Edward W. Robertson, deceased, late a Representative in Congress from Louisiana.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc, That there be printed of the eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late Edward White Robertson, a Representative in the Fiftieth Congress from the State of Louisiana, 12,500 copies, of which 3,000 shall be for the use of the Senate and 9,500 for the use of the House of Representatives, and the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to have printed a portrait of the said Edward White Robertson, to accompany said eulogies; and for the purpose of engraving and printing said portrait the sum of $500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRODUCTION OF PRECIOUS METALS.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I now call up the resolution of the House of February 6, 1889.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 6, 1889.

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That there be printed for distribution by the Director of the Mint 1,000 additional copies of the report on the production of the precious metals in the United States for the calendar year 1887.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FOURTH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONER OF LABOR.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I call up the joint resolution (H. Res. 262) to print 39,000 copies of the fourth annual report of the Commissioner of Labor.

The joint resolution is as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there be printed 39,000 copies, in cloth binding, of the fourth annual report of the Commissioner of Labor; 26,000 copies for the use of members of the House of Representatives and 13,000 copies for the use of members of the Senate.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $——, or so much thereof as may be necessary to defray the cost of the publication of said report, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move to amend by inserting in the blank the sum of $19,202.60.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DISTRIBUTION OF DOCUMENTS, ETC.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I now call up the resolution I send to the desk, and ask its adoption as a substitute for the resolution referred to this committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That all documents and books ordered to be published by the present Congress which are actually printed and delivered in full to the folding-room prior to the first Monday of December next, together with documents and books hereafter ordered to be printed to which members of the present Congress are or would have been entitled if published prior to the 4th of March next, and which are actually printed and delivered in full to the folding-room prior to the first Monday of next December shall be allotted as heretofore to the members of the present Congress and transmitted to their residence as fast as printed, unless otherwise ordered by the members themselves.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The only difference between this resolution and the resolution which was adopted in the Forty-ninth Congress is that this resolution provides that the books and publications shall go to the ex-members which are actually delivered to the Doorkeeper prior to December 1. I move the previous question, unless some gentleman desires to be heard.

Mr. HOLMAN rose.

Mr. OATES. I would like to know what use a member has for the publications if he has not the franking privilege?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Under the law members retiring have the franking privilege for nine months, and this resolution gives them these books for that nine months.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understood, Mr. Speaker, that this resolution went to the extent of directing the Doorkeeper to mail the publications to the members' homes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Unless otherwise ordered. The member has the control of them.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee demands the previous question on the passage of the resolution.

Mr. ENLOE. I want to say just a word about this resolution.

Mr. RICHARDSON. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. ENLOE. About two minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yield two minutes to my colleague.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, I think that the resolution ought not to be adopted. I am under the impression that the object in appropriating money to publish these books is that the books shall belong to the Congressional district and be distributed among the people and not to the member, for such disposition as he may choose to make of them. My impression is that a great many gentlemen lose interest in the proper distribution of books after they have been defeated. We have abundant evidence that some of them lose interest in their duties in Congress after they have been defeated. The books ought to belong to the district and go to the member who is elected to the next Congress. When a member's time expires, or he is defeated, his duties as a Congressman should cease with his term of service, and not be extended for a period of nine months.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. There being no objection, the original resolution will lie on the table, as the House has adopted the resolution which was reported from the committee.

EXTRA NUMBER OF ANNUAL REPORT OF INTERSTATE COMMISSION.

Mr. RICHARDSON next called up for consideration the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, January 16, 1889.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 6,000 additional copies of the second annual report of the Interstate Commission with the appendices thereto; 2,000 of said copies to be for the use of the Senate and 4,000 for the use of the House of Representatives.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is a Senate resolution.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Tennessee will explain the necessity for this. It occurs to me that this is a republication. Or is it printing an additional number?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is a matter to which the attention of the Committee on Printing has been called by members of the House. It has been applied to by a number of gentlemen to consider it; the committee did consider it, and we also have a letter from the secretary of the Interstate Commission saying that frequent demands are made upon him for them; and this is the only way that I know of by which they can be supplied. It is a new practice in the country, and a great many members of the bar throughout the country need these reports in order to fully inform themselves of the questions adjudicated in these cases.

Mr. HOLMAN. How many copies were there printed heretofore?

Mr. RICHARDSON. None, except the usual number, as I understand. This is simply to order an extra number—more than the usual number.

Mr. ENLOE. I would like to know if it would not be just as proper to have a publication of the opinions of the Supreme Court for free distribution as to have an extra number of these copies of the opinions of the Interstate Commerce Commission printed for such distribution?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am not prepared to answer the gentleman on that question.

Mr. ENLOE. I think one is just about on the same footing with the other. When a lawyer wants a book of this kind he ought to buy it.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 93, noes 9.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HEARINGS ON THE SUNDAY-REST BILL.

Mr. RICHARDSON next called up the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, January 30, 1889.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That there be printed for the use of Congress 32,000 extra copies of Miscellaneous Document No. 43, Fiftieth Congress, second session, being hearings before the Committee on Education and Labor on the bill S. 2983, known as the Sunday-rest bill, of which 10,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 20,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 copies for the use of the Committee on Education and Labor of the Senate.

The question was put on the adoption of the resolution, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. OATES. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 75, noes 17.

Mr. OATES. No quorum.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like the gentleman from Alabama to withdraw the point of no quorum until I can make a statement.

The SPEAKER. The previous question was not ordered.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the gentleman insists upon the point of no quorum I will withdraw the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. OATES. I withdraw the point of no quorum for the present.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, this is a resolution of the Senate which provides for the printing of the hearings before the Senate Committee on Education and Labor on what is known as the Sunday-rest bill. There have been quite a number of appeals to this committee from the laboring men of this country to print this testimony. More than one Senator have been before the Committee on Printing arguing in person the necessity and the importance of printing this testimony. More than one delegation representing the labor interests of this country have been before the Committee on Printing and earnestly pressed upon the committee the importance of printing this testimony or hearings. Now, so far as I am concerned, I am not personally interested, and care not a great deal myself about the publication of this testimony or hearings. The laboring men in my district, of course, are interested in this question; but so far no application has come to me from them. I know that in the great cities of the country they are very much interested and have sent urgent appeals to have the hearings printed.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman state what action, in his judgment, Congress can take by law, or by way of regulation, which will affect this matter, and if it can not take any, why should we be cumbered with the printing of this testimony?

Mr. RICHARDSON. There are the Territories, and there is the District of Columbia, in which Congress can legitimately legislate upon this matter; but the gentleman himself can answer his question quite as well and quite as satisfactorily to himself as I can, and I do not want to occupy the time of the House in debating the subject.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. There is an impression that this is a sectarian move. I understand that in fact it is nothing of the kind, and that the publication of this testimony will set the matter right before the country. I have had a number of letters on the subject and have learned that there is a notion abroad that it is a sectarian move and involves some kind of religious observance, but, as I understand, it is nothing of the sort.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman is correct. More that one delegation has called upon the Committee on Printing, and among those delegations there has been a delegation of ministers, but this resolution has no reference whatever to religious matters, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] correctly states, or to sectarianism in any form. It relates simply to the labor interests of the country.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. It is on the line of the eight-hour law, giving the working people more rest.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUCHANAN. There is so much noise that I have been unable to hear the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON]. Is not this a resolution to print extra copies of the hearings before the Senate Committee on Education and Labor in regard to what is known as the Sunday-rest bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is.

Mr. BUCHANAN. In which hearings there were statements by the various religious bodies, and by the labor organizations, and a discussion of the whole question pro and con.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. OATES. I do not think that Congress has any business printing this matter for distribution, which will but lay a predicate for Sunday legislation which is not within our jurisdiction; and I therefore insist upon my point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint to act as tellers the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is perfectly obvious that a division of the House now would defeat the remaining measures which I desire to call up, and therefore I ask leave to withdraw the resolution.

Mr. DINGLEY. I object to its withdrawal.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will say to the gentleman from Maine that I will present this resolution again immediately after the other matters are disposed of.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask to have it considered now, and action taken upon it. It is one of the most important measures that have come before us this session.

The SPEAKER. The tellers will take their places.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will withdraw the resolution.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I can not withdraw it because objection is made. I again ask unanimous consent to withdraw the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that if objection is made the gentleman can not withdraw it. This is not simply a proposition introduced by an individual member; it is a report from a committee, which has already gone upon the Calendar, and if objection is made it must be considered now, or else postponed.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman can withdraw it by unanimous consent. I appeal to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] to withdraw his objection to the withdrawal of this proposition. I do not think it is right to waste the entire hour in this way.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—yeas 146, nays 19.

So the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FUR-SEAL INVESTIGATION.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I call up next the report in relation to printing the testimony in the fur-seal investigation.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 5, 1889.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That 10,000 extra copies of the testimony taken and the report made by the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries upon the investigation of the fur-seal and other fisheries of Alaska be printed, to be distributed as follows: To the Executive Departments, Fish Commission, House of Representatives, and the Senate.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There is an amendment pending which provides for the distribution.

The SPEAKER. There does not appear to be any amendment pending.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The amendment is in the report.

The SPEAKER. That does not make it pending. Amendments must be offered on the floor before they can be pending.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The amendment is proposed by the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the proposed amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, after the words "to be distributed as follows," the words "to the Executive Departments, Fish Commission, House of Representatives, and the Senate," and insert in lieu thereof "to the Senate, 2,000 copies; to the House of Representatives, 4,000 copies; to the Fish Commission, 1,500 copies; to the Secretary of State and the Secretary of the Treasury, each 1,250 copies.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was then adopted.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPORT ON IRRIGATION IN EGYPT.

Mr. RICHARDSON called up the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the House and Senate 3,000 copies of Maj. A. M. Miller's translation of Harris's report on irrigation in Egypt.

The substitute reported by the Committee on Printing was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 3,000 copies of Maj. A. M. Miller's translation of Harris's report on irrigation in Egypt, of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 2,000 for the use of the House.

The substitute was agreed to; and the resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPORT OF BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire next to call up a concurrent resolution of the Senate, authorizing the printing of 50,000 copies of the fourth annual report of the Bureau of Animal Industry. This resolution, when heretofore considered by the House, was amended; and subsequently the Senate amended the House amendments. I desire now merely to ask that the House concur in the amendments of the Senate to the amendments of the House. As the documents connected with this matter are in manuscript and somewhat lengthy, I will state that the original resolution provided simply for printing the fourth annual report of the Bureau of Animal Industry. The amendments of the Senate added the fifth annual report. The effect of concurrence now by the House will be that both the fourth and fifth annual reports of that bureau will be printed.

The amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DIGEST OF HOUSE RULES, ETC.

The next business called up by the Committee on Printing was the following:

Resolved, That 2,500 copies of the Digest and Manual of the Rules and Practice of the House of Representatives of the present session, prepared by John C. Robinson, Journal Clerk, under the act of March 3, 1877, be printed and bound for the use of the House; the same to be printed under the direction of the Speaker and the Clerk of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to this resolution.

Mr. RANDALL. Is there any additional compensation provided for here?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Not in this resolution. Unless the Committee on Appropriations has made such provision, there is none. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] told me that he desired to offer an amendment. I do not see him now in his seat.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan is in the Hall.

Mr. BURROWS. I do not care to offer any amendment.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

UPTON'S "MILITARY POLICY OF THE UNITED STATES."

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire now to call up joint resolution (H. Res. 198) providing for the printing of the "Military Policy of the United States," by the late Bvt. Maj. Gen. Emory Upton, United States Army.

The SPEAKER. This joint resolution is in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the consideration of the resolution and consider it in the House.

The SPEAKER. Before putting that request the resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That there be printed 4,800 copies of the "Military Policy of the United States," by the late Bvt. Maj. Gen. Emory Upton, United States Army; 3,000 copies for the use of the members of the House of Representatives, 1,500 copies for the use of members of the Senate, and 300 copies for the use of the widow of the late General Emory Upton. The sum of $——, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray the cost of the publication of said work.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for the reading of the report accompanying this joint resolution. I do not comprehend what the "Military Policy of the United States" may embrace.

The SPEAKER. The House has not yet reached the stage of considering the joint resolution. It is now in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] asks unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged, and that the resolution be considered in the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to reserve that question until we hear the report, because it would be interesting to know what character of publication the "Military Policy of the United States" may be.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read, reserving the right to object to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The report (by Mr. RICHARDSON) was read, as follows:

The committee have considered joint resolution 198, providing for the printing of the Military Policy of the United States, by the late Bvt. Maj. Gen. Emory Upton, United States Army, and report the same with the recommendation that it do pass.

The resolution provides for the printing of 4,800 copies of the work.

This book was written by the late Bvt. Maj. Gen. Emory Upton, of the regular Army, an officer of great ability and extraordinary devotion to the military arts and sciences. His career, beginning with the outbreak of the late war between the States and ending with his death in 1881, was one of unusual brilliancy and usefulness to his Government, during which he passed through all grades from cadet to major-general.

He served in the artillery, in the infantry, and in the cavalry, and was equally successful in all. After the war was over he wrote the Tactics now in use by the regular Army, national guards, and militia, and which have been made the basis for the instruction of all arms of service.

As a reward for his services in the field he was selected by General Grant and assigned to duty as commandant of cadets and instructor of artillery, infantry, and cavalry tactics at West Point, and while thus engaged he renewed and extended his theoretical studies of the art of war. Having completed his duties at West Point, he was, with the concurrence of Generals Grant and Sherman, ordered by the War Department to make a tour of the world and inspect and report upon the armies and military policies of all nations.

He was occupied in his travels and investigations nearly two years, and he gave the result to the War Department and country in a volume of ——pages, which he published in 1878 at his own risk and expense, under the title of "Armies of Asia and Europe."

This is a work of rare merit and naturally led to the consideration of the military policy of our own country, and after two and a half years of laborious study and investigation, to the production of the work proposed to be published by authority of the resolution under consideration. The work covers a complete analysis of our military records and is subdivided as follows:

1. The military policy during the Revolution.
2. From the Revolution to the war of 1812.
3. During the war of 1812.
4. From the war of 1812 to the Florida war.
5. During the Florida war.
6. During the Mexican war.
7. From the Mexican war to the war between the States.
8. During that war as far as 1862, when his manuscript ends.

The work is also furnished with preface and introduction, and is accompanied by a treatise upon "Roman military policy," and another on the military policy of the late Confederate States, the whole making a volume of about six or seven hundred pages, uniform with the Official Records of the War of the Rebellion.

The work has been carefully examined by competent military critics, and is without question of great value, not only to Congress and the Army, but to the students of history throughout the country. The work has been partially edited, as the committee is informed, by Col. Henry A. Du Pont, late United States Army.

The committee is further assured by General James H. Wilson, late United States Army, that if this resolution passes he will supervise the work as it goes through the press without expense to the Government. General Upton left no widow nor child, and under his will this work belongs to his sister, Mrs. Sara Upton Edwards. The committee is in possession of a letter from her dated February 24, 1888, in which she sets forth the terms and conditions upon which she will part with the manuscript of the work to Congress. That letter is as follows:

"BATAVIA, N. Y., February 24, 1888.

"SIR: I have the honor to say, in reply to your communication dated February 4, that the manuscript of 'The Military Policy of the United States,' prepared by my brother, late Bvt. Maj. Gen. Emory Upton, United States Army, is now in the hands of Col. Henry A. Du Pont, late United States Army, at Wilmington, Del., and I have requested him to forward it to you for such examination as you may think best to give it.

"In case your committee should recommend Congress to print and distribute it for the use of Congress and the Army, authority therefor is hereby granted, on condition that the Government defray all expenses of publication, and that I am to be furnished with three hundred copies free of charge. I would like, say, one hundred and fifty copies bound in half-calf and the rest in cloth.

"Should it be decided to complete the work so as to embody the history and results of the closing years of the war of the rebellion, I would recommend that Lieut. Edward J. McClernand, Second United States Cavalry, be detailed for that purpose, and in any event he would be a suitable person to assist in correcting the proofs.

"I will in a few days forward letters of administration, from which it will be perceived that I am my brother's sole heir in respect to his property rights in this work.

"Should it be deemed necessary for me to execute any further papers to carry out the authority herein granted, I shall be glad to do so without delay, if you will kindly cause them to be drawn up and forwarded to me at this place.

"Trusting that Congress will provide for the printing and distribution of the work upon which my brother spent so much of his time, and that it will prove as useful to the country and the Army as he and his military friends believed it would be,

"I am, very respectfully, yours,

"SARA UPTON EDWARDS.

"Hon. JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
"Chairman of the Committee on Printing,
"House of Representatives, Washington, D. C."

The estimated cost of printing said work is as follows:

The usual number, $3,273.10; each additional 1,000 bound, $603.55.

To print the number, therefore, called for in this resolution (4,800) would require about the sum of $5,500.

The committee recommend that the word "widow," in the ninth line of the resolution, be stricken out and the word "sister" inserted in lieu thereof

And, further, that the blank in the tenth line of the resolution be filled by inserting the words "fifty-five hundred."

The number of volumes to be turned over to Mrs. Edwards (300) as shown in her letter will be bound as indicated therein and turned over to her or to her order by the Public Printer.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of this joint resolution.

Mr. RANDALL. I think this resolution proposes a new departure on the part of Congress, and hence I have felt it my duty to arrest for a moment at least the consideration of the resolution so as to have the facts stated. We are advised that this is a very interesting and important book, looking to a more thorough education of army officers. It is a historical work in connection with the public policy of the United States. It is a book which I presume some of us who may be able to purchase might very profitably read. But I am content with having called the attention of the House to this matter. If the House chooses to take this new departure, well and good.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I beg leave to say a word or two.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is not yet before the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] will withdraw his objection.

Mr. RANDALL. I have not objected.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to discharging the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think this matter ought to be considered in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana objects.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir; I think it ought to be considered in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman objects to discharging the Committee of the Whole from its consideration.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that if he wishes to discuss this matter, I will not call the previous question.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why not go right on in Committee of the Whole and consider it?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Very well; I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of this joint resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. COX in the chair) and proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 198) providing for the printing of the "Military Policy of the United States," by the late Bvt. Maj. Gen. Emory Upton, United States Army.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has made a statement in regard to this publication which may be accurate, though I hardly agree with him in every respect. The resolution provides for printing the "Military Policy of the United States," a work written by the late General Upton. This work covers eight periods in the history of our country. Hoping that members have paid close attention to the reading of the report I will not recapitulate the statements which it contains. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] so much time as he may desire.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Five minutes will be sufficient.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, this work which General Upton prepared is believed by some of the most intelligent officers and ex-officers of the Army to contain more valuable information in regard to the military history of this Government than any work that has ever been published either by private enterprise or by the Government.

It is a work invaluable in its character, and will be very valuable for students of the art of war, as well as for general information. It is a work to which General Upton devoted several years of close and hard labor. It is not necessary for me to state who General Upton was. His history is sufficiently set forth in the report and he is well known to the country. His work on Tactics is the standard work now used by the regular Army. He is the author of the important work known as "The Armies of Asia and Europe."

Mr. Chairman, I have met with no one who is familiar with the character of the work who does not declare that it contains more valuable information than any work of the kind in any country. It does not relate alone to the late war, but covers the entire military policy of the Government from its foundation down to the present date. I hope there will be no objection to this work.

My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] is mistaken in saying the publication by the Government of works written without requirement of law is a new departure. I can refer to many instances where works prepared in the same way, written by eminent specialists, have been published by act of Congress. Even the gentleman himself, as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I believe, reported a resolution for the printing of Wharton's International Law.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no recollection of any such thing, and so far as this work is concerned, to which the gentleman from Illinois refers, it has been boxed up, I learn, at the Printing Office, and we really know little about its contents.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BACON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced agreement to the conference report on the bill (S. 3132) to provide for trial by jury in the police court in the District of Columbia.

It further announced the adoption of concurrent resolution tendering the thanks of Congress to the governor and through him to the State of Michigan for the statue of Lewis Cass, whose name is so conspicuously connected with the development of the Northwest Territory and with eminent services to his State and country both at home and abroad, and accepting the statue in the name of the nation, and assigning a place in the old Hall of Representatives therefor; in which concurrence was requested.

It also announced the passage of the bill (H. R. 1659) to provide for continuing the eleventh and subsequent censuses, with amendments in which concurrence was requested.

It further announced the passage of the bill (S. 314) for the relief of Henry M. Rector; in which concurrence was requested.

UPTON'S "MILITARY POLICY OF THE UNITED STATES."

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I wish to say a word further. This work, Mr. Chairman, gentlemen will find if they look into it, contains more valuable information than any other work of the kind. As I have said, this is not a new departure. Wharton's International Law was published under authority of Congress in a bill reported from the Committee on Appropriations, and for which the gentleman voted.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think I did.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. You were then the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. It is no new departure.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a few minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania for two minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to direct the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Printing to another matter—it comes in properly at this place—and that is as to the distribution of books between now and December next, coming to members of this Congress.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That has been passed.

Mr. RANDALL. When?

Mr. RICHARDSON. During this hour.

The CHAIRMAN. There are two amendments pending, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 9 strike out "widow" and insert "sister."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows;

In line 10, after the word "of," insert "$5,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I now move that the committee rise.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman can not do so after I have moved that the committee rise. I will yield to the gentleman for a moment.

Mr. HOLMAN. No; I will take the floor in my own right; not otherwise.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I understood the gentleman to say he only wanted a moment.

Mr. HOLMAN. Still I take the floor in my own right.

Mr. DUNHAM. You want to take the floor to kill the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not accepting time from the gentleman.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then my motion is pending, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now rise to make a motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Indiana, who desires to discuss the measure.

Mr. HOLMAN. It has been said that the House has already entered upon the publication of works of this character intended for the benefit of a particular class of our people; that in late years we have published Wharton's Digest of International Law. I am not responsible, so far as I am concerned as a member of the House, for the passage of the bill authorizing that publication. I protested against it then on the ground that Congress did not possess the power to use the public money in the publication of works for the benefit of a particular class of our people, works having no reference to the current affairs of the Government.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Why do we publish the report of the Agriculture Department?

Mr. HOLMAN. That is a very different matter.

Mr. FARQUHAR. It is of service only to a particular class.

Mr. HOLMAN. These reports made to Congress by one of the Departments of the Government are necessarily published as a part of the affairs of the Government. Such works as Wharton's International Law are valuable to lawyers only, or to students of international law. But not so with reports made by the Departments of the Government, such as the Department of Agriculture. Of course, we publish the agricultural reports; we publish the reports of the War and Navy Departments, of the Department of Justice, and the other great Departments of the Government, and that is entirely proper. That comes within the proper scope of Congress and the appropriate duties of government. But the work to which I have referred is a work only valuable to a portion of our people.

Mr. DUNHAM. It is only valuable to the lawyers.

Mr. HOLMAN. And not of special value to the people of the country.

Now, this work proposed to be published here, I take for granted from the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from Illinois, has value to a certain class of people, being the history of the military operations of the United States, beneficial, undoubtedly, to some people connected with military affairs or students of military science, but of no value to the mass of the people.

The CHAIRMAN. The time fixed under the special order has expired, and the committee will now rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COX reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the joint resolution H. Res. 198, had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend the time allotted the Committee on Printing until after this joint resolution is concluded.

Mr. RANDALL. I can not agree to that at this time. I am perfectly willing some time hence to do so.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would ask that the time be limited to thirty minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

Mr. BLOUNT. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees; and at the same time ask for unanimous consent that gentlemen having reports to make, either majority or minority reports of committees, may be permitted to file them for reference at the desk.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. What becomes of the resolution that has just been pending?

The SPEAKER. It remains on the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. RANDALL. I would suggest that the reports filed as requested by the gentleman from Georgia should be examined by the Speaker as to the proper reference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that gentlemen having reports to make, and also members desiring to submit minority views from committees, may be permitted to hand them in at the desk for proper reference under the direction of the Speaker.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

FILING OF REPORTS.

The following reports were filed by being handed in at the Clerk's desk:

INSPECTOR-GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT.

Mr. HOOKER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 7228) to increase the efficiency of the Inspector-General's Department; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MEETINGS OF RAILROAD PRESIDENTS, ETC.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa, from the Committee on Commerce, reported a resolution as a substitute for Mis. Doc. 97, in relation to meetings of railroad presidents, etc.; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

EXPENDITURES IN WAR DEPARTMENT.

Mr. LAFFOON, from the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, reported as a substitute for bill H. R. 4923, a bill (H. R. 12625) to regulate certain expenditures in the War Department, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

THEODORE TEED.

Mr. BOWDEN, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 9721) for the relief of Theodore Teed; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

J. E. HOZIER.

Mr. BOWDEN also, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 614) for the relief of J. E. Hozier; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN L. RHEA, DECEASED, AND JAMES R. ANDERSON.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 2910) for the relief of John L. Rhea, executor of Samuel Rhea, deceased, and James R. Anderson; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN SCHENK.

Mr. MAISH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 2575) for the relief of John Schenk; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. CRISP, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 12489) to authorize the construction of a wagon and foot passenger bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Lyons, Iowa; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GENERAL GEORGE STONEMAN.

Mr. HOOKER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 11761) for the relief of General George Stoneman; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DENVER AND RIO GRANDE RAILROAD.

Mr. YODER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (S. 1302) granting the right of way to the Denver and Rio Grande Railroad Company across the United States military reservation for the cantonment on the Uncompahgre River, in the State of Colorado; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS KENTUCKY RIVER.

Mr. CRISP, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 12543) to authorize the Kentucky Union Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Kentucky River; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JAMES W. KINYON.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 6370) for the relief of James W Kinyon; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

VALERIA B. ELLIOTT.

Mr. BANKHEAD, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 11330) for the relief of Valeria B. Elliott; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JULIA OPIE C. AYRES.

Mr. CHIPMAN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 3944) granting a pension to Julia Opie C. Ayres; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ANN G. BARKER.

Mr. BLISS, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 12604) to restore the pension of Ann G. Barker; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 169) granting an increase of pension to Abby J. Slocum;
A bill (S. 781) granting a pension to John Fagan;
A bill (S. 1822) granting a pension to Ann E. Cooney;
A bill (S. 1831) granting a pension to Mrs. Maria Heap Nicholson;
A bill (S. 2091) granting a pension to Frances H. Plummer;
A bill (S. 2275) granting a pension to Mary Calvert Truxtun;
A bill (S. 2314) granting a pension to John B. Covert;
A bill (S. 2439) granting a pension to Charlotte T. Alderman;
A bill (S. 2993) granting a pension to Margaret A. Hillard;
A bill (S. 3540) granting a pension to Mary P. Myers; and
A bill (S. 3634) granting a pension to Mrs. Nancy Smith.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia to dispense with the morning hour.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Before that question is taken I ask unanimous consent to print a resolution in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. There is a question pending and the regular order has been demanded. The gentleman from Georgia moves to dispense with the morning hour.

The motion of Mr. BLOUNT was agreed to.

Mr. BLOUNT. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to consider general appropriation bills.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask permission to make a brief statement.

The SPEAKER. But the regular order is demanded.

Mr. WHEELER. Then I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHEELER. This morning as I entered the Hall I was informed that the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture had just taken his seat after stating that there was a misunderstanding at the time I made the point of no quorum in regard to the reference of a bill called up by him on yesterday. The RECORD shows that upon my asking the question if the bill referred to cotton-seed oil the chairman of the committee said "no," whereupon I withdrew the point of no quorum. The explanation of the chairman of the committee develops the fact that he did not use the word "no," but commenced a sentence with the ejaculation "oh," and being interrupted was unable to finish the sentence. The two words sound so much alike that the reporters and others understood the expression to be "no." Now, I insist, Mr. Speaker, that that bill ought to go back just where it was before the error occurred, so that we can have an opportunity to vote intelligently upon the reference.

Mr. RANDALL. This matter has already been determined by the House.

The SPEAKER. According to the statement of the gentleman from Alabama, it was a mere misunderstanding on the part of gentlemen themselves.

Mr. WHEELER. It was a general misunderstanding, and I am certain the chairman will agree to let it go back, so that we can take a vote to-day as to the reference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman does not present a question of privilege. The gentleman of course has the right to make a statement to show that he was mistaken, and on a mistaken assumption withdrew the point of order; but the Chair thinks no question of privilege is presented. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The motion of Mr. BLOUNT was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the Post-Office appropriation bill, and the Clerk will report the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is proposed to strike out, on page 2, from line 15 to line 23, inclusive.

The CHAIRMAN. On that amendment a vote was taken, and no quorum appeared. The tellers will again take their places.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask that the amendment be again reported. There was so much confusion on the floor that members could not hear what it was.

The amendment was again reported.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 27, noes 92.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILKINSON. I raise the point of order against this whole paragraph on page 2, from line 15 to line 23, that it changes existing law. The committee had authority from the House to make a classification of the clerks in the first and second class post-offices. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole on Saturday last ruled that this class of officials were not clerks. Therefore under that ruling this committee has no authority to recommend a change of existing law, and I make the point of order against the whole paragraph.

Mr. BLOUNT. I submit that it is too late, and that the point of order ought to have been made sooner.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has designated lines over which the committee has just passed.

Mr. WILKINSON. Yes, sir. That was an amendment to strike out those lines. I am not offering an amendment, but I am presenting a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes a point of order upon a portion of the bill upon which amendments have been offered and voted upon. The Chair thinks the point of order is too late as to that part of the bill.

Mr. ADAMS. I offer an amendment to that paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of line 23: "And at Chicago, Ill., where the salary of the assistant postmaster shall be $3,200."

Mr. ADAMS. That is the present salary. The chairman of the committee offered an amendment on Saturday as to the salary of the assistant postmaster at New York. He did not wish the salary in New York to be reduced, but wished to retain it at the present rate. Neither do I wish the salary of the assistant postmaster at Chicago to be reduced below the present rate, it having already been reduced within a few months from $3,400 to $3,200. I said the other day that the salary of the postmaster there was fixed with reference to a total annual business of $600,000; whereas the total business has arisen to $2,400,000. By the same logic which induces the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] to move an amendment in regard to the assistant postmaster at New York I move this amendment in order to retain the salary of the assistant postmaster at Chicago at the same as he now receives.

Mr. BLOUNT. Just a word. The New York office stands in an exceptional situation, and has been treated so in administration and legislation. The gross receipts at New York are nearly twice what they are at Chicago.

Mr. ADAMS. Yes; but you have a second assistant postmaster there.

Mr. BLOUNT. It is a question whether we will make exceptions all along the line.

Mr. COX. New York does business for Chicago, as a great deal of the mail is foreign mail.

Mr. ADAMS. And Chicago does business for New York.

Mr. COX. Not so much; because a great deal of the mail at New York is foreign mail. I would explain this fully, but I have not the time.

Mr. ADAMS. Nor the ability.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KERR. I wish to offer an amendment to this section by adding: "And said assistant may be required to perform the duties of clerk."

Mr. BLOUNT. That is surplusage. That is what he does now. It is simply cumbering the bill.

Mr. KERR. I think some question may arise as to whether he could be required to perform these duties. I know that has been the theory on which this change has been proposed; but I think it ought to be made certain by a provision in the bill, so that a man can not stand back on his dignity and refuse to do it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think the bill makes it certain. I think the assistant postmaster who would stand back on his dignity in that respect would get out of his place. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Secretary and stenographer to postmaster, five classes, salary, graded in even hundreds of dollars, from $1,200 to not exceeding $1,600 per annum.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order upon the whole paragraph that it does not come within the terms of the leave granted to incorporate this legislation. The resolution covers, as the Chair will recollect, classification of clerks in the first and second class post-offices. This proposes by legislation not to classify clerks in first and second class offices, but to create a stenographer to the postmaster. I think a fair statement of the language of the order and the reading of the paragraph is sufficient to sustain the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. So far as appears to the Chair at present, the duties of a stenographer and a secretary are clerical in their nature, and would appear to the Chair to be covered by the order.

Mr. BLOUNT. Regular order.

Mr. CANNON. Ah, yes, "regular order."

Mr. BLOUNT. I will withdraw the demand for the regular order. I thought the gentleman from Illinois was satisfied and that we could proceed.

Mr. CANNON. Taking the ruling of the Chair, and not being disposed to appeal——

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Then if the gentleman does not propose to appeal there is nothing before the House.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] will state his point I will wait.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I make the point that there is no motion before the House, as the gentleman [Mr. CANNON] has stated that he does not propose to appeal from the ruling of the Chair upon his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois propose an amendment?

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] is quite through, and has consumed as much time as he desires, I will now proceed to offer the amendments I was about to offer when he interrupted.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I do not wish to waste any time.

Mr. CANNON. Well, if you had kept off the floor there would have been some time not wasted. [Laughter.] I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 1 and 2, strike out the words "one thousand and two" and insert the word "eight;" so that the provision will read "from $800 to not exceeding $1,600 per annum."

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to the fact that this provision, with the following paragraph, proposes to classify the clerical service in post-offices of the first and second class all through the country, and I call the attention of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] to the statement, which I make after some investigation, that this classification is to increase the expenditure for clerical service in the post-offices. Now, I propose to follow the amendment I have just offered with amendments to the various paragraphs through the bill, not to decrease the maximum of the compensation but to decrease the minimum. This particular paragraph provides for stenographers to postmasters, and starts them out at the rate of $1,200 a year and makes their maximum compensation $1,600. Gentlemen understand that these offices come within the civil-service rules, and that, under the practice in the larger post-offices, the employés are retained practically during good behavior, so that if we are to have a useful, proper, economical administration of these offices the new employés should start in at a lower grade of pay than is fixed in this bill.

The employés of the English post-office system, as I recollect from an examination made some years ago, hold their places substantially during life, and they commence, on an average, at about $200 a year. They commence when they are young, and then, for good service and for length of service, they are gradually increased in pay and in rank until, probably, after the lapse of ten, fifteen, or twenty years, they rise to about the rate of pay that we propose in this bill. Now, as we are to adopt that system in part—because under the civil-service act and under this classification we render the tenure of these officials substantially permanent—I think they should start in just as similar employés start in to different classes of business throughout the country, the object here being not to make the salaries so high in the first instance as to cause the places to be sought for primarily by political favorites, but to build up and establish a service for the best interests of the Government. When you take a stenographer and appoint him, in the first instance, under this section, he can not go in at less than $1,200 a year; and however long he may serve, he can not get higher than $1,600 a year. I think it is wiser, in making this classification, to provide that, when these employés are first appointed, they shall commence at, say, $800 a year, and then, by promotion, go on until they finally reach $1,600. In other words, I propose to decrease the minimum at which they start in under this classification and let the maximum alone.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order has been already made and overruled.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to a certain point, because it is very evident that every paragraph is going to be debated on points of order, and I think there is one point which if decided by the Chair would cover all these paragraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inform the gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR] that a point of order was raised against the paragraph and overruled, and the pending motion is to amend the paragraph. The Chair thinks it is too late to raise the point of order against this paragraph.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I had not the opportunity to get the floor before to make the point of order, on account of the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois. I now ask permission to make the point of order so as to cover all the points against the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not for the Chair to determine whether by entertaining this point of order subsequent points of order may be avoided. Under the usage the point of order now comes too late.

Mr. BLOUNT. In reference to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, I wish to make a remark which applies to the whole of this bill. These gradations of offices and salaries have been arranged in the Department with a full knowledge of the roster, with a full knowledge of the work to be done, and with the best of opportunities, therefore, for determining the wisest classification to be made. For myself, with the little knowledge I have in such matters, I would not undertake to originate the classification of clerks in the various post-offices throughout the country. I prefer to take the opinion of the Department as to these classifications.

Now, the proposition of my friend from Illinois is to reduce the minimum rate from $1,200 to $800. There are only fifteen "secretaries and stenographers" in all the post-offices in the entire United States. They are only employed in the most important offices, and it is easily seen that it is important to have good service in this branch of work—to have good service from the beginning. This service is not intended as a training school for stenographers; it is the work of the people that these officers are to discharge, and the Government is entitled to good service from the start.

An examination of the rosters has resulted in the conclusion that in this particular efficiency in the service requires that you should not go below $1,200, and that $1,800 is a proper maximum. Why, sir, to talk about getting a stenographer, one worthy of the name, for $800 is to my mind not a reasonable thing. Any gentleman who has had any experience in this regard knows that he would not be likely to get good service at that rate.

The gentleman from Illinois has notified us that he proposes all along the line to move these reductions. If he does so, he asks this House to accept his extemporaneous opinion in the face of the report of the Department, which enjoys all advantages for reaching a conclusion, and which has no desire to do anything except to advance the public service. I trust this Committee of the Whole will not interfere with this classification, which has not been arrived at without considerable investigation and labor.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I regret to antagonize the position of the chairman of the committee [Mr. BLOUNT], but I feel constrained to do so for one reason. We have asked this House to vote a sufficient appropriation to carry out the maximum demands of this proposed legislation. The House has refused to give either $200,000 or $300,000 additional. Therefore as we progress in this legislation it is wise to antagonize any proposition which increases compensation; and, on the other hand, it is equally wise to favor and indorse legislation which proposes to decrease the minimum fixed in the bill, for in this matter we may possibly come within the appropriation provided.

"Secretaries and stenographers" are now paid a maximum salary of $1,800, the minimum salary being $480, the average $1,140. I state to the distinguished chairman of the committee that it will in no wise destroy the efficiency of the service if we fix the minimum at $800, instead of $1,200, as stipulated in the bill.

There is another reason to be considered in this connection. In many of the first-class offices the continuous labor of a stenographer will not be required, and if the stenographer is a man of long experience it in no wise follows that because the minimum salary here named is $800 the Postmaster-General will indicate that amount as the salary. He can allow $900, $1,000, or $1,200, in accordance with the efficiency of the clerk.

I think, therefore, that a general proposition such as the gentleman from Illinois has indicated, amending this legislation so as to make the minimum a less sum than that now named in the bill, will strengthen and make better the legislation proposed, in view of the sum total allowed for clerical work, $6,550,000.

Mr. ADAMS. I move to amend the amendment by inserting, before the word "eight," the words "less than;" so that it will read: "from less than $800 to not exceeding $1,600."

It occurs to me—I suggest the question in perfect good faith and without desiring to interfere with the success of this classification—whether in certain post-offices of the country to which the civil-service law applies the new classification is necessary. On this point I ask the attention of the gentleman from Georgia and the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX]. In these large post-offices there already exists a classification by virtue of the Pendleton law. I read from section 6 of the act of 1883:

> Within sixty days it shall be the duty of the Postmaster-General, in general conformity to said one hundred and sixty-third section, to separately arrange in classes the several clerks and persons employed in the public service at each post-office or under any postmaster of the United States, where the whole number of said clerks and persons shall amount to as many as fifty.

Now, in that class of post-offices the classification already exists by force of law. The classification begins with class 1, where the salary is less than $800 per annum, extending to class 4, where the salary is $1,800 and over; and this covers every employé in every post-office where the number of employés amounts to fifty. Now, is there a necessity for making a new classification in those post-offices; and is it not desirable, if you make a classification to cover all post-offices, that in reference to this class of post-offices it should conform to the classification already existing by law? It seems to me that is a practical suggestion.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I was in the hope that my friend from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] would have promptly accepted the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. I regret to find that some gentlemen on this side of the House are opposing any reduction upon the large salaries proposed in the pending bill, although those salaries are much greater than ever before known in this Department. We have fallen indeed upon a singular state of things when, instead of there being no increase of salaries by the proposed classification, as we were informed would be the case, there is an increase at every step all along the line.

I have never known the position of the two sides of the House to be so completely reversed. This side of the House came into power upon the assumption based upon the long history of the Democratic party justified by a former experience that a just, rigid economy in the administration of the Government would be enforced. Yet we meet the spectacle of the other side of the House protesting against increase of salaries, whilst this side of the House is called upon to vote for largely increased salaries, and to pass a bill increasing salaries all along the line.

I regret this course of procedure. There is no gentleman upon this floor for whom I entertain higher or for whom I feel warmer sentiments of respect than I do for the distinguished and able chairman of the Committee on Post-Office and Post-Roads [Mr. BLOUNT]. His record is one any member of this House could well be proud of. In the Forty-fourth Congress and ever since his voice has been for economy in government, for he well knows that economy in government means efficiency in government. Yet in this extraordinary bill there is a classification of the employés of the Post-Office Department enormously increasing salaries, with salaries for secretaries and stenographers much greater than heretofore ever known in the Post-Office service.

The minimum salary heretofore of stenographers and secretaries, when such persons have been employed, has been $480, yet this bill proposes to place the minimum at $1,200. Such services are not of special importance. Has there been any complaint as to the efficiency of the secretaries and stenographers?

For myself I have heard of no such complaint. Yet in the closing hours of Democratic control of this House we have this new classification increasing the minimum of such salaries from $480 a year to $1,200 a year, and a general increase all along the line, and the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to reduce the minimum to $800 a year is firmly resisted. What has caused the change in the attitude of this side of the House? What a contrast it is with our policy in the Forty-fourth Congress when the Democratic party after years of effort obtained the control of the House, a policy of economy and efficiency which met in the most signal manner the approval of the country, and that approval was emphatically expressed by the vote of the people in 1876. And now can we afford to surrender to our political opponents the control of this House with our policy completely reversed?

The progress of increase in salary is found everywhere in this classification. We are told you can not employ a secretary or stenographer for less than $1,200, and yet for years the minimum salary as fixed by the Postmaster-General has been $480 and running up to $1,800. Let the gentleman go into the courts of my State, or his own State, or any other State, or any great mercantile establishment in the country where stenographers are employed, and he will find the basis upon which these salaries have been established is much less than that established by the Postmaster-General, ranging from $480 to $1,800 a year. Yet a proposition to commence with $800, nearly twice the beginning salary heretofore fixed by the Postmaster-General, is fiercely resisted.

I am rejoiced that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and other gentlemen have entered their protest against this unnecessary increase of salaries. The people we represent will look with some anxiety to see whether any protest will come from this side of the House against the increase of salaries which pervades this bill, or whether we have cut loose from our old doctrine of economical and efficient government.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to enter my protest here and now against the United States Government being made an employer of "scab" labor. No newspaper in the country employing stenographers gets them at the rate of $800 a year per man. Why, the private stenographer of the editor of the New York Sun, with not over three hours' work a day, is paid $40 a week. Why is this Government, with its enormous surplus, eternally scrimping the wages of its laborers and mechanical employés? Lawyers' fees are rarely reduced here. The stenographers, the printers, and others are to get the benefit of the reduction. This great and glorious Government, with three hundred millions surplus in its Treasury, employs at its printing office in West Point two, three, or four printers at the rate of $13 a month and 50 cents a day. Such employment at such puny rates is sanctioned by the action of men upon this floor.

What is the matter with the United States? [Long-continued laughter and applause.]

My good friend General BINGHAM advocates the reduction because in some post-offices the stenographer will not be employed all day long. Therefore we should place it in the power of some post-office official to reduce the salaries of stenographers in every post-office in the country to $800. I would like to know how much my friend from Pennsylvania would receive if he was paid in the same proportion.

Mr. BINGHAM. About $10,000 a year. [Laughter.]

Mr. CUMMINGS. I hope so, I am sure. Why not apply the same thing all around? It seems to me that the men in the Departments who have made this gradation of salaries ought to know exactly what they want. They have employed stenographers and know their value. I appeal to the House now, if it must begin to reduce expenditures in the face of the enormous surplus, to commence at the very top of the heap, with the $50,000-a-year man, before they travel down and wind up with the salaries of the stenographers and mail-carriers. [Applause.]

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much that the gentleman from Indiana with his large information in regard to public affairs, and with the great power for good which that information supplies him, should turn away from the postal service of the country and resort to a little scolding speech which seems to be patented for use on almost any occasion whenever there is a possibility for reducing an amount proposed by the sum of $2.50 or $5 or $10. The gentleman arraigns bitterly those of us who fail to see the propriety of the reduction which he so vigorously presses, and for not preserving the record of the party in that direction. The gentleman undertakes to avoid the question by saying that the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX]—and he seems to make a personal thrust at him—has taken the lead in this matter. Now, the gentleman from Indiana must have, or I will assume at least that he has, read the message of the President of the United States, and that he must know this subject of the classification of the salaries of the clerks in the post-offices has been for more than eighteen years urged upon the Congress of the United States by the various Postmasters-General; and well the gentleman met all the considerations that have been presented from those having this service in charge in the remarks which he has just delivered upon this floor. How did he meet them? By inviting this body to hear a scolding from him of a general character!

Mr. Chairman, I remember, sir, until the salaries of railway mail clerks were fixed by law, some instances of reducing their salaries which were not only discreditable but absolutely disgraceful to this Government. I recollect one particular instance where an allowance was made to the Department for a route agent at $35 a month, and in order to get a man to perform that service they had to take the baggage-master on the train, who, with the salary of $35 a month and the salary he got from the railroad company for services as baggage-master, was willing to perform the service for the Government, and they were thus enabled to distribute the mail upon that line. Was it creditable to the Government of the United States to so legislate that it was necessary to resort to the employment of an employé of a railroad company, a baggage-master on the train, to enable the Government to distribute its mails? That condition of things prevailed until Congress took proper steps to correct the wrong by fixing a proper rate of compensation.

Mr. HOLMAN. But the minimum is $600, and then——

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not yield for an interruption. I do not want the speeches of the gentleman from Indiana thrust into mine, for he will not direct himself to the facts.

Now, the Postmaster-General has stated that by virtue of insufficient appropriations he has been forced to cut down the salaries of the employés all over the country from time to time in order to have the mails distributed at all. Is that statement true? Is that the situation to which the public officials of this country have invited the attention of the Congress of the United States? Is it likewise true that we are handling sixty-odd millions of dollars not raised by taxation, but sixty-odd millions of dollars contributed by the people of the country themselves to pay for the transportation of these articles in the mails, their letters, etc., and under pretense of handling that we propose to do it in this method? Is that true? Now, sir, this money comes not out of the Treasury of the United States. It does not come from taxation upon the people, but it comes as a direct result from the service itself, and I can not believe, sir, that an intelligent Congress is going to cut this service down, to make it unsatisfactory to the people, as gentlemen would have us to do, and yet at the same time take from them this vast sum for pretending to carry it on.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Chair will assume the pro forma amendment to be withdrawn.

Mr. BLOUNT. I renew it.

Now, sir, the gentleman from Indiana speaks of a stenographer having been hired at $400 a year.

Mr. HOLMAN. Four hundred and eighty was the statement.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have given an example of a post-route agent who happened to succeed in getting employment from the Government at the rate of $35 per month; and I have no doubt that instances such as the gentleman from Indiana has mentioned in this connection could be, if necessary, found where the Government was employing men for even less. But does that make it just? I take it for granted that no gentleman who knows anything of governmental affairs would concede that to be rightful; and certainly no gentleman who knows anything of stenographers would concede for a moment that you could get a man for $480 a year who would be worthy of employment by the Government. In regard to this matter let me say that there are only nineteen of them so employed at this time. The matter was fully discussed as to whether or not the minimum rate should be fixed, and after a very careful consideration the committee determined that it should be done.

Now, one word further. The proposition is to reduce—and my friend from Pennsylvania says there is no trouble about getting these grades too low. I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that that is just exactly what you mean not to allow to be done by classification. It is this very low grading that has driven your competent men from the service. It is this very low grading that has been cramping it; it is this very low grading that has occasioned the various recommendations, in order that you may have your employés with their classification fixed, and fixed with a minimum high enough to insure proper men for the postal service. This is but the beginning, and we are proceeding with this classification all along the line, and I beg that this committee will see to it that that classification, as it is designed to build up the service, as you have built it up in regard to the letter-carriers, as you have in reference to the postal clerks, and as you have done in reference to all of the other branches of the service, shall obtain here, and that the good results which we have reason to expect may be obtained from it, to secure efficiency in this branch of the public service.

Mr. Chairman, so far as any allusion to partisan interests is concerned, I wish to say that I shall endeavor, wherever the public service is to be advanced, to stand away from any considerations of a campaign. I deny that there is anything in my party affiliations that restrains me from giving to the people of this country the best public service which can be had.

Mr. LIND. Will the gentleman from Georgia allow me a question?

Mr. BLOUNT. Certainly.

Mr. LIND. I will ask whether the chairman of the committee considers a stenographer in a first-class office a more valuable and more costly service than the assistant postmaster in a second-class office? Now, I think, if we can not settle the maximum and minimum of these respective salaries abstractly correct we ought to settle them relatively. By a portion of the bill, on page 8, the maximum and minimum limits of the salaries of assistant postmasters in second-class offices are $700 and $1,500 respectively, whereas this paragraph provides a maximum and minimum limit of $1,200 and $1,600 for a mere stenographer in a first-class office.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think the expression "mere stenographer" is misleading. There are very few people who are good stenographers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. For a very brief time I crave the attention of the committee. Gentlemen recollect that always and now there is a lump sum given for clerks in post-offices. Always heretofore and now the Postmaster-General has plenary power to fix the salary at a small or a large sum. In practice he has always to "cut the garment according to the cloth." That is, he understands what the interests of the office in New York and the other large cities are; what the interests in the fast growing cities are; what are the interests in the second-class offices; and what are the interests of the separating offices—that is under $2,000.

Now, here it is proposed to take that discretion from the Postmaster-General and classify these employés in the first and second class offices; and classify them so that a larger amount of money will be paid to those employés than has been paid in the aggregate heretofore. Now, that leaves less money for the officers where the salary of the postmaster is under $2,000. So that under this bill, with the larger amount of money taken from this appropriation, the first-class offices will first be served; the second-class offices will next be served, and when that money is all taken up or nearly all taken, the balance will be for the use of the separating offices; and gentlemen who represent second-class post-offices and separating post-offices when this legislation and this appropriation shall have gone upon the statute-book together will find to their sorrow that there will be nothing left for separating offices.

Now, the gentleman from Georgia says that these employés have been getting too little. Why? Not because of a wrong exercise of the discretion by the Postmaster-General, but for the reason that from 1875 up to the present time, or nearly so, on this side of the House we have stood insisting upon larger appropriations, and most of that time, under the lead of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], the larger appropriations have not been given. So the Postmaster-General was confronted with this condition, that he must decrease the salaries of the employés in the post-offices or leave the business undone.

Now, the true remedy for this is to increase this appropriation, and to let the Postmaster-General make the allowance from year to year and from month to month, as the interests of the service require. The House seems to say that it does not want to do that. Then, if it does not want to do that, and if you make this classification, give it elasticity enough to enable the Postmaster-General to say he can take a sixteen-year-old boy or a seventeen-year-old girl who wants to act as stenographer and give him or her $800 to start upon, and by and by, as years roll on, to increase the salary. But "oh, no," says the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS], who is declaiming against "scab" labor; "start with the greater salary, and pay them $1,200 a year."

Mr. CUMMINGS. Why not have the Government establish a school and educate them before you employ them, then?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I will say to my friend right here and now that the salaries that have been paid to these employés are higher than for similar service rendered to the public; so much higher that great political contests have been fought out so that the Executive could control these and other places; and there is not a member of Congress upon this side of the House whose mails are not loaded down day by day with hundreds—I was about to say thousands—of applications from constituents asking them for assistance to get employment in the mail service, even at the lower salaries that are proposed in this bill. So that in good faith I want to perfect this bill; I will take the judgment of the House and I am willing to conform to it. I say start in with the beginners at the lower salary, say $800, and gradually, by length of service, come up to the higher service. That proposition I trust the House will intelligently consider and intelligently pass upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The debate on the pending amendment has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose to receive a message from the Senate, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced agreement to the report of the committee of conference on the bill (S. 139) to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. COX. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. That is an amendment in the third degree.

Mr. BLOUNT. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. COX. I renew it for the purpose of calling the attention of my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to a little bit of history in connection with these matters of postal service. A good many years ago—I like to speak after the manner of the Orientals and to tell a story—a good many years ago I had trouble here to get the letter-carriers better pay, to obtain for them their vacation and limitation of their hours of labor, and other advantages. I remember that I found one of the most strenuous opponents of one of these measures to be my good friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. I had quite a struggle to secure the passage of the bill raising the pay of the carriers. I went away from this country and was gone for some time. When I came back into my place here I had a kind welcome from my friend from Illinois. I remember that when he came to my seat among the first things he said was, "My dear brother COX, since you went away to the land of the Orient, Danville, in Illinois, has grown to be a city of 10,000 people! We want help now for Danville; forget my little fight against you on the letter-carriers' bill; let her come in under the letter-carrier free-delivery system, and we'll all be happy." The pending measure was the bill allowing the free delivery to cities of 10,000 inhabitants. As he said it he smiled so magnificently that I did not know whether his mouth was on the front or on the rear side of his head. [Laughter.]

Well, I said to my friend, "There is nothing mean about me, and I will help you," and I did, and so Danville is happy. Now I am attacked by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], who seem to be confederated on this subject—I mean confederate in the worst sense [laughter]—because I am not economic, I suppose. They will not give credit for the free-delivery system as they should. We fight this, as they did that system. That system has been growing ever since 1875, and it has grown even since last year. Before me is a table taken from the report of the First Assistant Postmaster-General for 1888. It shows a net gain in local postage on the free-delivery system over the total cost of the service above that of the preceding year of $226,771.18, or nearly 11 per cent., there being $2,299,332.80 excess of local postage over total cost this year against $2,072,561.62 of 1887.

Since 1875, sir, there has been a continuous net gain to the Government in all the various cities here enumerated, by reason of giving more liberal compensation to the letter-carriers. The cost of the whole service in the United States is demonstrated to be $5,422,356.36; the postage $7,721,689.16. By the same table I call on my friend from Illinois to notice my prediction. When he comes back here ten years from now—if he is not made Speaker before that and retired—when he comes back here ten years from now, I shall be here of course, because though men may come and men may go, sometimes I think that I seem to go on forever [laughter]—when he comes back, I say, I will remind him of this matter, as I do after a decade remind him of his opposition to the successful free-delivery system, which makes cash in excess in New York equal to a net gain of a million and a third, and is otherwise a splendid result of generous foresight and human prudence. My moral is that by giving generous salaries—by following the advice of the Postmasters-General and their assistants and all of our best postmasters—we do and will so classify these clerks and so aid and develop the system that the gentleman from Illinois himself may yet appear here to deliver an encomium upon that service which has been so well explained by my friend from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] and systematized with the aid of the Department.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word. My friend from New York [Mr. COX] loves to dwell upon the great change that he accomplished in the past for the letter-carriers. Well, I am glad that he has accomplished great things, and by and by, when a bill comes up in the next Congress to affect the letter-carriers, I will talk with him about it. It occurs to me now, however, that possibly the gentleman's praise of his own policy may be a little out of place upon this bill, because the letter-carriers are not to be affected at all by this paragraph.

Mr. COX. I did not say that. I was pointing out to you as an example to be followed in this case the success of the letter-carriers' free-delivery system.

Mr. CANNON. Nobody's salary is to be cut down by my amendment.

Mr. COX. You argued against the salaries being raised.

Mr. CANNON. On the contrary, the present minimum salary of these stenographers is $480; and the committee's bill fixes the minimum at $1,200, and my amendment fixes the minimum at $800, but leaves the maximum undisturbed.

Mr. COX. Is the gentleman in favor of this classification system?

Mr. CANNON. I was not in favor of this particular classification system; I want to let the Postmaster-General classify according to the necessities of the service; but the House appears to be in favor of it, and so, in good faith, I am trying to amend it so as to improve the service.

Mr. COX. Did not the gentleman's opposition begin when his amendment proposing to raise the appropriation was lost?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. COX. And not before?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly not.

Mr. COX. Then you are not logical or consistent.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, my friend from New York is the only man that has stood for twenty years and been consistent first, last, and all the time. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. I am very much obliged to the gentleman for that compliment. I feel as if I did not deserve it. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. I do not pretend to be consistent. I say again it is well enough for us to understand just what we are doing. The gentleman may posture (and I say it respectfully) touching this matter, but I noticed that he did not posture the other day when I offered the amendment to pay this force as he is trying to establish it. He passed between the tellers and voted "no."

Mr. COX. I did not want to break down the classification system.

Mr. CANNON. That is, you wanted to vote to pay special salaries, and then not give the money. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. That will be provided for.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I say again, in perfect good faith, wishing this classification system well, that if it is to stand and perform its functions for the best interests of these employés as well as the best interests of the country, it is proper that the boys when they go into this business should start upon a basis something near that on which other boys start when they go into other business. But even with this amendment the pay is substantially one-half more to the beginner in this service than it is when a similar beginner goes into a counting-house, or banking-house, or mercantile establishment to accept private employment.

Mr. BLOUNT addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. COX. I will withdraw the formal amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. I renew it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the pending amendment is a substantial amendment; but if there be no objection the gentleman from Georgia will be allowed to proceed.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from Illinois cautions members that the money proposed here to be appropriated will be used in the first and second class offices, and that the third-class offices will not get any, if we do not appropriate money enough. Now, I do not know where the gentleman gets his authority for that statement. I have never known anything like it in the practice of the Government under any administration; and it looks to me as if it were nothing more than a dogma of the gentleman, useful in debate, useful in advancing what he is attempting to accomplish in the way of argument.

The gentleman says that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and myself have been responsible for small salaries in the past. Mr. Chairman, let it be so. The Forty-seventh Congress did not change that policy; and the gentleman himself was alike responsible. But I acquit the gentleman from Indiana, the gentleman from Illinois, and the Congress of the United States, as well as myself, from any improper purpose in that regard. I have in my hand the designations of the various persons employed in the post-offices of the country; and it is a surprise to most of the gentlemen in the House that there are employés with these designations in the postal service at all. I am guilty of no disrespect to the House when I say that from lack of experience the House did not properly measure salaries when it voted these appropriations in the past. The House did not know that stenographers were getting a maximum or a minimum salary; it did not know that it was voting in that fund a dollar for a stenographer. So it is all the way through. What does this classification mean? It means that these employés shall not have their salaries go up and down by a see-saw movement from one year to another by reason of a lack of detailed information in this House in regard to the employés in the postal service.

It means that the only way to guard against that difficulty is by classification—by fixing their salaries. Never will the House come to consider these salaries in detail so long as the money is voted in gross. Just so long as it is voted in gross there will be a want of intelligent action in reference to these allowances.

There is no gentleman in this House, I take it, who would claim to have sufficient knowledge to enable him to take a gross sum of money and go through salary by salary among all the employés in the post-offices of this country and adjust the compensation. That is impossible for us; therefore we can only classify.

Now, it does not by any means follow that when these lower grades are lifted the gross amount is greatly enlarged. It is easy to make a declaration that such is the effect, but an examination of the rosters of the post-offices of the country does not sustain it. I say it is susceptible of absolute demonstration that this bill, with these minimum salaries as they are, provides money enough for all the clerks in the post-offices of the United States. I wish to see a proper minimum retained. I appeal to the experience of gentlemen all over this House whether or not they have not found that some of the postal employés within their knowledge were so poorly paid that they were not willing to remain in the public service. I appeal to members of this House to say whether the great postal system of the United States should be subject to such a contingency. Mr. Chairman, so far as I am concerned I am willing to meet the situation as the service requires, though it may cost an increase of a few hundred thousand dollars in the matter of expenditure.

Mr. CASWELL obtained the floor.

Mr. BLOUNT. Before the gentleman from Wisconsin proceeds I would like to have some agreement as to closing debate. I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto terminate in ten minutes.

Mr. CASWELL. I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] asks unanimous consent that debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in ten minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. KERR. I desire to say a few words.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa object?

Mr. KERR. I object unless I can have a few minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa objects.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then I move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate on this paragraph.

Mr. KERR. I withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there further objection? The Chair hears none; and debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto is limited to ten minutes. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CASWELL. I wish to say—and I would be glad to have the concurrence of the chairman of the committee having this bill in charge [Mr. BLOUNT]—that I want to move that the committee rise so that I may submit a conference report upon the direct-tax bill.

Mr. BURROWS. It will take but a minute.

Mr. CASWELL. It will take only a few moments. It is important that it should be considered at once. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to say, in reply to what the gentleman from Wisconsin has said, that this bill seems to be in the hands of the conferees, who can bring the matter up at any time. Appropriation bills should be acted on and sent to the Senate as soon as possible, and I hope they will not be delayed.

Mr. CASWELL. It has never been my wish to obstruct the general appropriation bills. On the contrary, I have always helped to pass them through the House. Action on the report of the conference committee will take but a few moments of time. I wish to say to the friends of the bill that it is important we should consider the report of the conference committee as soon as we can. I move that the committee rise.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 63, noes 68.

Mr. CASWELL. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BLOUNT and Mr. CASWELL were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 98, noes 83.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. DOCKERY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12490) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and had come to no resolution thereon.

DIRECT TAX.

Mr. CASWELL. I present a privileged report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The report will be read.

Mr. ROGERS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROGERS. What is this matter?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL] stated that he desired to submit a conference report.

Mr. ROGERS. Is it privileged?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 139) to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, and agree to the same amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to such person as shall in each case apply therefor, and furnish satisfactory evidence that such applicant was at the time of the sales hereinafter mentioned the legal owner, or is the heir at law or devisee of the legal owner of such lands as were sold in the parishes of St. Helena and St. Luke's, in the State of South Carolina, under the said acts of Congress, the value of said lands in the manner following, to wit: To the owners of the lots in the town of Beaufort, one-half of the value assessed thereon for taxation by the United States direct-tax commissioners for South Carolina; to the owners of lands which were rated for taxation by the State of South Carolina as being usually cultivated, $5 per acre for each acre thereof returned on the proper tax-book; to the owners of all other lands, $1 per acre for each acre thereof returned on said tax-book: Provided, That in all cases where such owners, or persons claimingunder them, have redeemed or purchased said lands, or any part thereof, from the United States, they shall not receive compensation for such part so redeemed or purchased, and any sum or sums held or to be held by the said State of South Carolina in trust for any such owner under section 3 of this act shall be deducted from the sum due to such owner under the provisions of this section: And provided further, That in all cases where said owners have heretofore received from the United States the surplus proceeds arising from the sale of their lands, such sums shall be deducted from the sum which they are entitled to receive under this act. That in all cases where persons, while serving in the Army or Navy or Marine Corps of the United States, or who had been honorably discharged from said service, purchased any of said lands under section 11 of the act of Congress approved June 7, 1862, and such lands afterwards reverted to the United States, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to such persons as shall in each case apply therefor, or to their heirs at law, devisees, or grantees, in good faith and for valuable consideration, whatever sum was so paid to the United States in such case. That before paying any money to such persons the Secretary of the Treasury shall require the person or persons entitled to receive the same to execute a release of all claims and demands of every kind and description whatever against the United States arising out of the execution of said acts, and also a release of all right, title, and interest in and to the said lands. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay for said lots and lands, which sum shall include all moneys in the Treasury derived in any manner from the enforcement of said acts in said parishes and not otherwise appropriated. That section 1063 of the Revised Statutes is hereby made applicable to claims arising under this act without limitation as to the amount involved in such claim: And provided further, That any sum or sums of money received into the Treasury of the United States from the sale of lands bid in for taxes in any State under the laws described in the first section of this act in excess of the tax assessed thereon shall be paid to the owners of the land so bid in and resold or to their legal heirs or representatives."

And the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its amendments numbered 3 and 4.

L. B. CASWELL,
GEORGE E. SENEY,
Managers on the part of the House.

JOHN SHERMAN,
JUSTIN S. MORRILL,
ISHAM G. HARRIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement accompanying the report is as follows:

STATEMENT.

The conferees on the part of the House submit the following statement to accompany their report upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses to the House amendments to the bill (S. 139) to credit and to pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861.

The effect of the report as agreed to leaves the first amendment to the bill adopted by the House, which was "by offset or otherwise," to stand as it passed the House.

The amendment known as section 2 is amended by this report so as to fix the sum to be paid for the lots in the town of Beaufort at one-half the sum named in the House amendment.

The sum to be paid for the lands known as cultivated lands is reduced by this report from ten to five dollars per acre.

The House amendment is further modified so as to require such sums as are paid to the State in trust for the owners of these lands to be deducted from the amount due to such owners under this section, and prevent double payments.

The section is also amended by the report so as to require payment to the owners of lands sold for taxes in any State and bid in by the Government such sums as have been received on a resale of the lands over and above the tax levied.

The amount appropriated to carry out the provisions of the amendment is reduced from $850,000 to $500,000.

Amendments numbered 3 and 4 are only formal amendments transposing the sections.

L. B. CASWELL,
GEO. E. SENEY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CRISP. I desire to raise the question of consideration.

Mr. MCMILLIN. That is what I rose to do. I have been unable to find the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES].

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Is this conference report signed by all the managers on the part of the House?

Mr. CASWELL. It is signed by all except the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES], who is not in his seat.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I hope the gentleman from Wisconsin will not insist upon taking it up now.

Mr. CASWELL. I regret exceedingly the absence of the gentleman from Alabama, but so much delay has already intervened I feel justified in pressing it forward.

Mr. WHEELER rose.

Mr. CASWELL. There is no intention of indulging in debate on this side of the House, and I suppose the conference report can be passed without debate pro or con.

Mr. WHEELER. Is it not in order to demand the reading of the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The report has already been read.

Mr. CASWELL. I will ask unanimous consent at the proper time that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] may have full opportunity to print such remarks as he wishes to print on this bill in the RECORD.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Oh! you are very magnanimous; but we would rather have him present when this report is acted upon.

Mr. CANNON. Let me ask where the gentleman is now.

Mr. MCMILLIN. He is temporarily out of the Hall.

Mr. ROGERS. He has been here all day.

Mr. CANNON. Why is he not here now?

Mr. ROGERS. For the same reason that you are not present at times. The gentleman will be here perhaps within five minutes. He is no doubt in the building.

Mr. CASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question on the adoption of the report.

Mr. CRISP. I trust I will be permitted to be heard in reply to the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question of consideration is not debatable.

Mr. CRISP. I ask unanimous consent to be heard.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. Regular order.

Mr. CRISP. Can I not be heard for a moment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the regular order is demanded by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, which cuts off all requests for unanimous consent.

Mr. RANDALL. That is on the question of consideration.

Mr. CRISP. I will state that it is my intention to call up the election case, and I only gave way this morning for the consideration of the appropriation bill—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. WHEELER. I wish to know, Mr. Speaker, whether before the vote is taken we may not have the bill read in order to see what it is? [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. ROGERS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question of consideration has been raised by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], pending which the gentleman from Arkansas moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Pending that, as there is a meeting to-night, I move that the House now take a recess until half past 7 o'clock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the motion to adjourn is of superior privilege to the motion to take a recess, and will be first submitted.

Mr. ROGERS. I withdraw the motion, and will let the vote be taken on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. DIBBLE. I raise the point of order against the motion to take a recess, that it can not supersede the question on the adoption of a conference report, which report may be submitted even to the interruption of a motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is correct in the view that the presentation of a conference report is a matter of the highest privilege; but the question of consideration has been raised against it, and the Speaker of the House recently held that under such circumstances motions to adjourn, or to fix a day to which the House shall adjourn, or take a recess, are in order.

Mr. DIBBLE. But does that apply to a conference report?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It applies to a conference report when the question of consideration has been raised.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Was there not a solemn agreement entered into that there should be no dilatory action—[cries of "Regular order!"]—that there should be no dilatory motions upon the consideration of this bill during this Congress?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that is not in the nature of a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. It is at least a very pertinent inquiry.

Mr. CHEADLE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CHEADLE. Is it not true that the Speaker recently ruled that a motion to consider a second conference report was not privileged against a motion to adjourn, but that the consideration of the first report was privileged, and we did consider one report?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is quite positive as to the ruling of the Speaker, and the views of the present occupant of the chair as announced a few moments since are in harmony with that ruling. The Speaker's decision will be found on pages 726 and 727 of the RECORD.

Mr. GEAR. I understood the gentleman from Arkansas to withdraw his motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He did; and the gentleman from Kentucky has moved that the House take a recess until 7.30, which is the pending question.

Mr. BRUMM. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it, although the vote is about being taken.

Mr. BRUMM. My inquiry is whether, after an agreement has been entered into unanimously by this House, it is admissible to entertain any motion in violation of that agreement?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair knows of no agreement inconsistent with the ruling already made. It may be that there is some outside understanding that will control the action of individual members, but the Chair knows of no order of the House that prohibits the submission of the pending motion.

Mr. REED. Oh, it was only the agreement of the Democratic caucus; that is all. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROGERS. Pending the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MCMILLIN. In order to give time to have the gentleman from Alabama here, I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Thursday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Thursday next.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. The point of order is that the Chair can not entertain the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] or the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN], because at the time the motions were made the question was being taken on a recess, and one side has been taken on the vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order, which even if good comes too late. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Thursday next.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Will it be in order to call attention to the fact that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] has arrived? [Laughter.]

The question was put; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 3, noes 132.

Mr. MORSE. No quorum.

Mr. CASWELL. I desire to call the attention of the House and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] [cries of "Regular order!" on the Democratic side] to the fact that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] is present. [Renewed cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL].

Mr. SOWDEN demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing was received from the President, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

It was also announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On February 12, 1889:

An act (H. R. 6217) to relinquish the interest of the United States in certain lands in Kansas;

An act (H. R. 9040) to confirm the homestead entry of Hugh Foster;

An act (H. R. 12009) to provide for keeping open the Potomac River;

An act (H. R. 11854) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889;

An act (H. R. 1860) to amend section 683 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the distribution of the reports of the Supreme Court; and

An act (H. R. 538) granting a pension to James Miller.

NOTE.—This bill was presented to the President January 31, 1889, and not having been returned by him to the House of Congress in which it originated within the ten days prescribed by the Constitution, has become a law without his signature.

On February 13, 1889:

An act (H. R. 1599) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Sedalia, in the State of Missouri;

An act (H. R. 3132) for the relief of David A. Haywood; and

An act (H. R. 331) for the relief of David Meriwether.

On February 14, 1889:

A joint resolution (H. Res. 257) making an appropriation for payment to the legal representatives of James B. Eads;

An act (H. R. 496) to authorize and empower the Mount Carmel Development Company to draw water from the Wabash River, or its tributaries, in the county of Wabash and State of Illinois;

A joint resolution (H. Res. 25) to print 4,000 copies of the report of Naval Constructor Philip Hichborn on European dock-yards;

An act (H. R. 550) for the relief of William R. Blakeslee; and

An act (H. R. 9396) for the relief of General William F. Smith.

On February 15, 1889:

An act (H. R. 3312) to create the northeastern division of the southern Federal judicial district of Georgia, and to take certain counties from the northern district and add to the southern district, and to provide for holding courts in said northeastern division, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. 11693) to amend section 555 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia; and

An act (H. R. 300) for the relief of the trustees of the First Baptist Church at Smithland, Ky.

On February 16, 1889:

An act (H. R. 6404) for the relief of Charles F. Swain, master of the bark Philena.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. WHEELER. I move to dispense with the reading of the names of members voting.

Mr. MORSE. I object.

The Clerk recapitulated the names.

The following-named members were announced as paired until further notice:

Mr. BURNETT with Mr. GOFF.
Mr. FORD with Mr. GUENTHER.
Mr. PERRY with Mr. CROUSE.
Mr. BARRY with Mr. YOST.
Mr. PHELAN with Mr. BUTLER.
Mr. WHITTHORNE with Mr. LYMAN.
Mr. MCSHANE with Mr. LAIRD.
Mr. SNYDER with Mr. BOWEN.
Mr. NEAL with Mr. HOUK.
Mr. COLLINS with Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts.

Mr. GROSVENOR and Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, were announced as paired from 3 o'clock, February 18, until Saturday, February 23.

The following members were announced as paired for this day:

Mr. ERMENTROUT with Mr. BUNNELL.
Mr. GREENMAN with Mr. NUTTING.
Mr. BRYCE with Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois.
Mr. LEE with Mr. KELLEY.
Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina, with Mr. KETCHAM.

Mr. WILKINS with Mr. PETERS.
Mr. STONE, of Missouri, with Mr. WILLIAMS.
Mr. MACDONALD with Mr. MOFFITT.
Mr. HERBERT with Mr. BOUTELLE.
Mr. ROBERTSON with Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio.
Mr. MCMILLIN and Mr. STRUBLE were announced as paired on this vote.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. SPINOLA. I rise for the purpose of asking unanimous consent that I may make some remarks in regard to a great national question.

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

Mr. MORSE. I now move that when the House adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday next.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. MORSE; and the Speaker pro tempore declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MORSE. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 2, noes 86.

Mr. MORSE. No quorum.

Mr. CASWELL. I suppose that my friend from Massachusetts has forgotten the obligation that gentlemen on the other side are under not to filibuster against this bill.

[Cries of "Regular order!" on the Democratci side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of no quorum being made, the Chair will appoint to act as tellers the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL].

Mr. SPINOLA. I rise partly to a question of privilege and partly by unanimous consent. While we are waiting—[laughter]——

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

Mr. CASWELL. I move there be a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The roll was called, and the following members failed to answer to their names:

Allen, Miss.	Dougherty,	Laird,	Shively,
Anderson, Miss.	Enloe,	Lee,	Snyder,
Bacon,	Ermentrout,	Lodge,	Stahlnecker,
Barry,	Felton,	Lyman,	Stone, Ky.

Crouse,	Johnston, Ind.,	Phelan,	Yost.
Dalzell,	Kelley,	Phelps,
Davenport,	Ketcham,	Robertson,
Dorsey,	Laidlaw,	Russell, Mass.

The following members were announced as absent on leave:

Bryce,	Crouse,	Lyman,	Phelan,
Bunnell,	Granger,	Perry,	Yardley,
Burnett,	Laird,	Peters,	Yost.

Mr. WHITING, of Massachusetts. I ask that my colleague from Massachusetts, Mr. ALLEN, be excused on account of sickness.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MERRIMAN. I ask that my colleague, Mr. BACON, be excused on account of sickness.

There being no objection, Mr. BACON was excused.

Mr. HOPKINS, of New York. I ask that my colleague, Mr. NUTTING, be excused on account of sickness.

There being no objection, Mr. NUTTING was excused.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I ask that my colleague, Mr. NEAL, be excused on account of sickness.

There being no objection, Mr. NEAL was excused.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask leave of absence for one hour.

Several members objected.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. The gentleman from Maryland, Mr. MCCOMAS, left the House yesterday on account of sickness. I ask that he be excused.

There being no objection, Mr. MCCOMAS was excused.

Mr. MCKENNA. I ask that my colleague, Mr. MORROW, be excused on account of important business.

There being no objection, Mr. MORROW was excused.

Mr. MOFFITT. The gentleman from Illinois, Mr. PAYSON, is absent on account of a lame ankle. I ask that he be excused.

There being no objection, Mr. PAYSON was excused.

Mr. COX. I ask that my colleague, Mr. STAHLNECKER, who is ill, be excused.

There being no objection, Mr. STAHLNECKER was excused.

Mr. HITT. I ask that the gentleman from Colorado, Mr. SYMES, be excused because he is sick.

There being no objection, Mr. SYMES was excused.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I ask leave of absence for my colleague, Mr. WHITTHORNE, on account of illness.

There being no objection, leave of absence was granted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this call 241 members have answered to their names, being more than a quorum.

Mr. CASWELL. I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

Mr. SPINOLA. Would it be in order to move an amendment to that motion?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It would not be.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. CASWELL; and there were—ayes 75, noes 3.

Mr. MORSE. I call for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered, only 10 voting in favor thereof.

The vote was announced as above stated.

So the motion of Mr. CASWELL that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with was agreed to.

Mr. SPINOLA. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This question does not require a quorum. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Friday next. The tellers will resume their places.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Will the vote be taken de novo?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL] will resume their places as tellers.

The tellers took their places. After the count had proceeded for some time,

Mr. CASWELL said: I ask, by unanimous consent, that the House now take its recess, to reassemble at half past 7 o'clock this evening; and I give notice that to-morrow I will again bring up this report for consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL] asks unanimous consent that the House now take its recess until half past 7 o'clock this evening, the evening session to be for the consideration of business under the special order.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. What is that?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This evening session has been assigned to business of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BLOUNT I ask that the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL] be so modified that we may proceed with the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill until 5 o'clock.

Mr. CASWELL. I have no objection.

Mr. MORSE. I do not object.

Mr. DIBBLE. I presume it is understood that the privilege and status of the conference report will not be lost by this intervening business. Unless that is understood I shall object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The report certainly can not lose its privilege.

Mr. CASWELL. I give notice that I will call it up again to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the House will now again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to resume the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12490) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890.

The CHAIRMAN. By consent the debate on this paragraph and all amendments to it has been limited to ten minutes.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, I believe the question before the House now is on the amendment striking out, in lines 1 and 2, on page 3, the words "two thousand and ten"——

Mr. FARQUHAR. The amendment is to make the minimum $800.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending amendment is that submitted by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], to which an amendment was submitted by the gentleman also from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS].

Mr. ADAMS. I withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the question is on the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to strike out, in the first and second lines, on page 3, the words "one thousand and two" and insert "eight," making it "$800 to not exceeding $1,600 per annum."

Mr. KERR. Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the adoption of the report of the committee would necessarily involve the expenditure of a large amount of money unnecessarily. It seems that we ought to allow the Post-Office Department—that is, the post-offices throughout the country—to employ their help at reasonable rates and as low as they can get it. I do not see any reason why the Government of the United States should apply another rule in the employment of its help than the rule that prevails in society usually as to the employment of men. My colleague on my left [Mr. ADAMS] informs me that in Chicago good stenographers are employed at from $40 to $50 a month who are employed during the entire day, which would be only about $500 per annum; and if that be the case, why should the United States Government say that the lowest-priced stenographers in the service of the Government employed in the Post-Office Department should be at least $800 per year?

I think we ought to be a little careful in the expenditure of the public money in this Department, for there is a general demand all over the country that we should, if possible, at the very earliest moment, adopt the policy of fixing postage on inland letters at 1 cent for transmission through the mails in place of 2 cents as at present. But if we pursue the policy of increasing the salaries of the employés of the Post-Office Department at this time, that reform now so generally demanded will become an impossibility and necessarily must be indefinitely postponed. I think we ought to do what we can to reduce the expenditures of this Department with a view of reaching this desirable condition of affairs in regard to postage as soon as possible.

In addition to that I wish to say in regard to this matter that I question very much the entire policy of the classification of the clerks in this Department. I do not believe it has worked well heretofore in the other Departments in Washington. I know, because I have heard the fact from men employed in the Departments here, that there is an eternal scramble on the part of certain persons occupying lower positions to be advanced to higher places, with the view of obtaining the larger salary, when they are not performing any more work; and if that rule of classification is extended all over the country you will find that same eternal scramble will extend to this department as it now exists in the Departments at Washington. I have heard, too, from many men in the Departments here in Washington that men are always pressing "the powers that be" for influence to promote them from one class of clerks to another, not because there is any more work to be done in the promoted class, but because it enables them to draw more pay; and I for one, as this new administration is coming into power, am not going to favor a proposition making larger and larger demands upon the time of members of Congress to answer letters of persons desiring positions in the Government service.

For these and other reasons I think the plan proposed here should not be adopted.

Mr. BLOUNT. How much time remains for the debate?

The CHAIRMAN. If no other gentleman desires to discuss the amendment, the Chair will assume that the time for debate has expired, and the question will be taken upon the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 61, noes 46.

Mr. BLOUNT. In order to secure tellers on this vote, I make the point that no quorum has voted.

Mr. CANNON. I ask the gentleman to let us adopt the minimum here.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman has been asking that all the time, and we do not agree.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers Mr. BLOUNT and Mr. CANNON.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 70, noes 75.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the point of no quorum insisted upon?

Mr. CANNON. Well, my friend from Georgia wanted a quorum, and I guess we had better have it on this vote. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers will resume their places and continue the count.

The tellers reported—ayes 80, noes 83.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HOLMAN. I submit, if the gentleman from Illinois will consent, an amendment to the paragraph. I move to strike out "one thousand and two," in lines 1 and 2 of this page, and insert "nine hundred."

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Indiana to offer the amendment?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, certainly.

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard——

Mr. BLOUNT. I rise to a question of order, not with a view of interfering with my friend from New York, but to suggest that debate has been closed on this paragraph and all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. The debate has been closed.

Mr. CANNON. I did not understand that.

Mr. DOCKERY. Debate has been closed.

Mr. CANNON. When?

Mr. DOCKERY. A few moments ago by consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee by unanimous consent ordered that debate upon this paragraph and all amendments to it be closed within ten minutes.

Mr. CANNON. And the time has expired?

The CHAIRMAN. Which time has expired, and the question is on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. I merely suggested the amendment to the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was put; and on a division there were—ayes 16, noes 36.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for tellers. I raise the point that no quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN appointed Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. BLOUNT tellers.

The tellers reported—ayes 36, noes 55.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. In order to enable the House to take a recess, in accordance with a prior order, the committee will now rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. DOCKERY having taken the Chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12490) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and had come to no resolution thereon.

And then (at 5 o'clock p. m.), under previous order, the House took a recess until 7.30 p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at half past 7 o'clock p. m., and was called to order by Mr. DOCKERY as Speaker pro tempore.

The Clerk read the following:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 19, 1889.

Hon. A. M. DOCKERY is hereby designated to preside as Speaker pro tempore at the session of the House this evening.

JOHN G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK, Clerk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the order under which the evening session is held.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That on Tuesday, February 19, 1889, the House shall take a recess at 5 o'clock p. m. until 7.30 p. m., the evening session to be devoted to the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, the session to be limited to 10 o'clock p. m.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask, by unanimous consent, the bills called up to-night reported from the Committee on Military Affairs be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I yield the floor to the gentleman from New York.

MONUMENT AT FORT GREENE, BROOKLYN.

Mr. SPINOLA. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 1687) for the erection and completion of a monument to the memory of the victims of prison-ships at Fort Greene, Brooklyn. The bill has been read through, the report has been read, the amendments adopted, and the bill ordered to a third reading.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $100,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, for the erection and completion of a monument to the memory of the victims of British prison-ships at New York during the war of the Revolution, to be placed at Fort Greene, Brooklyn, State of New York: Provided, That the money appropriated as aforesaid shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, and the plans, specifications, and design for such monument shall, before any of the money so appropriated is expended, be first approved by the Secretary of War.

Mr. KILGORE. I make the point of order that this bill ought to be considered in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House has just granted the request of the gentleman from Illinois that all these bills reported from the Committee on Military Affairs shall be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KILGORE. I want to give notice that none of these bills will pass in that way.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The House has adopted a resolution that these bills shall be considered as in Committee of the Whole, which gives the same opportunity for opposition in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KILGORE. Oh, no; there is not.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. In what respect is there any difference?

Mr. KILGORE. There is considerable difference.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask the gentleman for information, for I have been here twelve years and I have not learned what difference there would be.

Mr. KILGORE. I have been here for two years, and I know that there is a very great deal of difference.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I say that when the order is made to consider bills as in Committee of the Whole we are governed by the same rules as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KILGORE. Only when you consider them in Committee of the Whole a man has two chances at them; otherwise you have only one. [Laughter.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I can only say this to the gentleman from Texas: That under the rules of the House, having but a small attendance as there is just now, it is within the power of one man to prevent the consideration of these bills. There will be no quorum, and it does not require any intellectual power to do it, power to say whether or not we shall have any legislation, and one man can prevent action being taken in the House just as well as in Committee of the Whole. A page could do it if he had the power, and could do it just as well in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SPINOLA. Will the gentleman from Texas permit me——

Mr. KILGORE. I say this to the gentleman from Illinois, after the fair statement that he has made that every opportunity would be given in the House to oppose a measure, I will let this go on, but when it comes to an important bill that ought to be amended I think it ought to be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. A member would have the same privilege in the House as in Committee of the Whole. He can stop any bill he desires.

Mr. KILGORE. I have not been here as long as the gentleman from Illinois, but I know that it is an advantage to have a bill considered in the House instead of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. In all the experience that I have had here, I state to my friend that I have not been able to learn where he would get one single advantage by having a bill considered in Committee of the Whole that he would not be entitled to if it were considered in the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is advised that these amendments have been agreed to in Committee of the Whole; that the bill has been engrossed and read a third time; and the question, therefore, is on the passage of the bill.

The question was put; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. KILGORE. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 17, noes 3.

Mr. KILGORE. No quorum.

Mr. SPINOLA. Will the gentleman allow the bill to go over until to-morrow to a full House?

Mr. KILGORE. I can not, except you strike out the appropriation.

Mr. SPINOLA. Of course, then, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the bill.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. Before that bill is withdrawn I would like to say a word.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there is no objection, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL] will be heard.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. I will object to everything that is presented here this evening.

Mr. SPINOLA. I hope my friend will let the bill go through which I am going to call up.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. I will not let anything go through. The day for this sort of thing has gone by. There was an impression once that three men were not equal to one; but now it seems that fifty men are not equal to one, and that one undertakes to overrule fifty. That system has got to change in this country.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can speak only by unanimous consent.

MICHAEL KELLY.

Mr. SPINOLA. I call up the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9485) to remove the charge of desertion against Michael Kelly.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion now standing on the records of his Department against Michael Kelly, late of Company C, Eighty-eighth Regiment New York Volunteers.

Mr. MATSON. I ask for the reading of the report in that case.

The report (by Mr. SPINOLA) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9485) to remove the charge of desertion against Michael Kelly, have examined the same, and submit the following report:

Michael Kelly was enrolled and mustered March 15, 1864, at New York City, to serve three years in Company C, Eighty-eighth New York Volunteers, and served therewith until May 5, 1864, when, at the battle of the Wilderness, he received a gunshot wound which resulted in the amputation of the index finger of the right hand. He was also shot in the right arm above the elbow. He was sent to the hospital at Washington, D. C., where he remained until May 17, 1864, when he was granted a furlough for thirty days. Kelly went home to New York, but at the end of the thirty days he, not being able to perform duty, returned to the hospital at Washington, but was informed that owing to the crowded condition of the hospital he could not be admitted, but as he was unfit for further military duty he was told to go back home and his discharge would be made out and sent him. He returned home and remained there, thinking that he had done all that was required of him. The evidence is plain that this soldier did not leave the service for the purpose of avoiding danger, or avoiding service; and as he is a cripple from the effects of his wounds your committee believe he is entitled to the relief he asks for, and they therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The question was put on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time, and the Speaker pro tempore declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. I ask for a division.

Mr. SPINOLA. This is a proper bill, and it is for the benefit of a poor soldier. I hope the gentleman will let it go through.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 28, noes 2.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. No quorum.

Mr. SPINOLA. I withdraw the bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I yield now to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITCH].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITCH] appears to be absent.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY].

ROBERT H. MONTGOMERY.

Mr. CAREY. I call up the bill (H. R. 4246) for the relief of Robert H. Montgomery. In order to save time I ask unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill which is on the Calendar and is in all respects like the House bill.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 939) for the relief of Robert H. Montgomery.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Robert H. Montgomery, captain in the Fifth Regiment of Cavalry, United States Army, shall be entitled to credit for all purposes of pay and allowances, for the period of time from the 19th day of November, 1863, to the 16th day of February, 1865, during which time he was a prisoner of war in the hands of the enemy, the same as though he had actually been in the military service of the United States as a second lieutenant of cavalry during that period.

SEC. 2. That the judgment of the United States Court of Claims in the case of Robert H. Montgomery vs. The United States, rendered on the 7th day of April, in the year 1884, against the said Robert H. Montgomery for the sum of $1,651.37, upon a counter-claim presented by the United States, said sum having been received by the said Robert H. Montgomery as pay for the period during which he was, as hereinbefore stated, a prisoner of war, be, and the same is hereby, remitted, and the said Robert H. Montgomery is hereby discharged from all obligations to pay said judgment.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. Speaker, the report in this case is very long and I can state in a minute all there is in it. Captain Montgomery was an officer in the Army and was captured and confined in Confederate prisons from some date in 1863 until some time in 1865. Through an erroneous report he was summarily dismissed from the United States service. Afterwards a board of inquiry was held on the case and they came to the conclusion that he had been in no wise negligent when he was captured, that he had been acting under orders, and the consequence was that he was restored to his position in the Army and was paid for the time that he had been confined in a Southern prison. Subsequently, on his application for longevity pay, the proper officer of the Treasury Department held that he was not in fact in the military service of the United States during that period. He appealed to the Court of Claims and the court also held that he was not in the service, and that the amount paid to him for that period should not have been paid. Now, this is simply to allow him for the time that he was in a rebel prison. There is no claim that he was negligent in being captured or that he was in any wise at fault.

Mr. KILGORE. I understand that this man's pay went on, and that he received it, and that then the Government sued him and recovered it back.

Mr. CAREY. No; but in making his application for longevity pay this amount was held up against him.

Mr. KILGORE. What do you mean by longevity pay?

Mr. CAREY. Increased pay for length of service. The War Department say that there is no reason why he should not be relieved.

Mr. KILGORE. And this is a bill to give him that pay?

Mr. CAREY. No; he has had the pay. The Court of Claims simply passed on the question whether, after he was summarily dismissed on an erroneous impression, he was entitled to pay, and they held that he should not have been paid for that time.

Mr. KILGORE. Was he paid for it?

Mr. CAREY. He was paid for it.

Mr. KILGORE. Well, what is the purpose of this bill?

Mr. CAREY. I have said that in making his application for longevity pay this amount was held up against him, and he appealed to the Court of Claims and they took the same ground. I may add that Lieutenant Jones, under whose orders he was acting at the time he was captured, was also captured, and is in exactly the same position.

Mr. KILGORE. Then I understand that this bill does not take any money out of the Treasury to pay this man anything.

Mr. CAREY. Not a dollar. He is still in the Army, and has served in every Indian war since the close of the civil war, and is an excellent officer. I have known him fifteen years.

The question was taken on ordering the bill to a third reading; and there were—ayes 28, no 1.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL].

Mr. CAREY. I withdraw the bill, Mr. Speaker. I dislike to do it, but under the circumstances I am compelled to withdraw it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I yield now to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD].

INN AT OLD POINT COMFORT, VIRGINIA.

Mr. FORD. I call up the House joint resolution (H. Res. 200) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant a permit to Harry Libby and Philip B. Woodfin to erect a hotel upon the lands of the United States at Old Point Comfort, Virginia.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to grant permission to Harry Libby and Philip T. Woodfin to build a hotel, with its appurtenances, upon the military reservation of the United States at Old Point Comfort, Virginia, upon such site or location on said reservation, and of such plans and dimensions as shall be approved by the Secretary of War: Provided, however, That the said hotel building or buildings shall be fully completed within one year subsequent to the date of such approval, and with the further understanding that all the buildings constructed under the authority herein granted shall be destroyed or removed at the expense of the owner or owners, whenever military exigencies require the same to be done, and the Secretary of War shall so direct; and no claim for damages by reason of such destruction or removal shall be made upon the Government of the United States: And provided further, That the State of Virginia, by its General Assembly and governor, shall, by proper legal enactment, give the consent of said State to the erection of said building or buildings as a condition-precedent: And provided further, That the building or buildings so erected may be made subject to State and national taxation the same as other property.

SEC. 2. That the persons within named, to whom the license herein specified is granted, shall not assign, transfer, or set over the same to any other person or persons. That if the Secretary of War shall become satisfied that the persons within named have made such assignment or transfer, he shall be authorized to revoke the permission for the erection of a hotel herein given: Provided, That nothing in this resolution contained shall be construed to prevent said Libby and Woodfin from associating themselves with others in the construction and management of said hotel.

The question was put on ordering the joint resolution to be engrossed and read a third time; and the Speaker pro tempore declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 22, no 1.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. No quorum.

Mr. FORD. I will withdraw the joint resolution, but before doing so I ask to be permitted to make a very brief statement.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. I object.

Mr. FORD. Will the gentleman allow me a minute?

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Speaker, before withdrawing this joint resolution I wish to say that it was introduced with the purpose of permitting the erection of a hostelry down at Old Point Comfort, Virginia, at which a man of moderate means could afford to stay. There have been one or two similar rights given to other parties to erect hotels there, but for some reason or other they have not exercised that right, and, as I have said, the object of this measure is simply to permit the erection of a hotel or boarding-house at which people of moderate means can afford to stay and enjoy the pleasant climate of that locality; but as the gentleman from New York [Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL] makes the point of no quorum, I am compelled to withdraw the joint resolution.

Mr. GEAR. I move that the House adjourn. I make this motion for the reason that it is impossible to transact any business to-night as long as one member objects to all business.

Mr. SPINOLA. Let us try one more bill.

Mr. GEAR. It will be of no use.

The question was put on the motion to adjourn; and it was disagreed to, there being—ayes 4, noes 17.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. No quorum.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. This is one case in which the gentleman has no power to require a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The rules of the House do not require a quorum on a motion to adjourn.

COL. DANIEL M'CLURE.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. YODER].

Mr. YODER. I call up the bill (H. R. 9378) for the relief of Col. Daniel McClure.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to settle and close the accounts of Col. Daniel McClure, assistant paymaster-general in the United States Army, with the United States, under his official bond, dated March 22, 1859; and in such settlement the said accounting officers shall credit the said McClure with all sums not already allowed of money charged against him by said accounting officers in the "statement of differences" certified by the Second Auditor of the Treasury upon the final statement of his accounts, on the 9th day of December, 1873, except the three following charges, to wit: The item of $1,000 arising out of an overaddition on a company pay-roll, being voucher No. 65 of his accounts to May 31, 1861; also an item of $967.08 twice credited by him on account of a collection of that amount of internal-revenue tax, and an item of $4,993.06 paid him by Maj. V. C. Hanna on the 26th of September, 1862.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I call for the reading of the report in this case.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I trust that my colleague [Mr. HENDERSON] will not insist on having the report read. It may take an hour or more to read it, and if that should be done the session of to-night would of course be rendered a nullity.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. The bill may as well be withdrawn, for I should call a quorum upon it.

Mr. SPINOLA. Before the bill is withdrawn——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope that my colleague will not make the point of no quorum. Of course, if he insists upon raising that question to-night it is impossible to have any business transacted.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I think this bill ought not to pass; and I would be very unwilling to permit it to pass without an opportunity on my part to discuss its provisions.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. My colleague will, of course, do what he thinks right about this matter; and I will not raise any controversy with him. If it is his determination to demand a quorum upon this bill, I would advise my friend from Ohio [Mr. YODER] to withdraw the bill.

Mr. SPINOLA. Before the bill is withdrawn——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Ohio withdraw the bill?

Mr. SPINOLA. Not yet. He declines to do so for one moment. I want to inquire——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. YODER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. YODER. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] that he may make an inquiry.

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Speaker, how much time will I have on this bill in my own right, if I should desire to debate it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman obtains the floor in his own right, he will be entitled to one hour. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. YODER] has, however, been recognized.

Mr. YODER. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has the right to withdraw it without unanimous consent. The bill is withdrawn.

FRANCIS A. FIELD.

Mr. YODER. I call up the bill (H. R. 10137) for the relief of Francis A. Field.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions regulating appointments in the Army are hereby suspended for the purpose of this act, and only so far as they affect Francis A. Field, late captain in the Eleventh Regiment United States Infantry; and the President of the United States is hereby authorized to nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate appoint, said Francis A. Field, late captain Eleventh United States Infantry, to the rank and grade held by him in the Army at the date of his last honorable discharge: Provided, That the said Francis A. Field shall receive no pay or other allowances for any period prior to the date of the passage of this act, when the said Francis A. Field shall be placed on the active-list of the Army.

Mr. SPINOLA addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. YODER] is entitled to the floor. Does he yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. SPINOLA. I do not want the gentleman to yield. I want my own time in opposition to the bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then let the vote be taken.

Mr. SPINOLA. Before the vote is taken, I wish to speak in opposition to the bill in my own right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman from Ohio yields the floor, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TOWNSHEND (to Mr. YODER). Withdraw the bill.

Mr. SPINOLA. Before this bill is withdrawn, to which I object——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I understand the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] will not speak more than five minutes.

Mr. SPINOLA. I do not know whether I shall or not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. YODER] desires to take the floor and address himself to this bill the Chair will recognize him; if not, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York.

Mr. YODER. I withdraw the bill.

Mr. SPINOLA. I object to its being withdrawn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has the right to withdraw the bill.

ARCHIBALD HUNLEY.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I now call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 104) for the relief of Archibald Hunley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas it appears from the evidence of certain officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates of Company H, Thirtieth Regiment of Illinois Infantry Volunteers, that Archibald Hunley, late a private of Company H, Thirtieth Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers, was illegally charged and unjustly tried by military court-martial on charges and specifications alleging absence without leave and resisting his superior officer, and by decision of said court-martial he was unjustly and illegally discharged from the Army, with loss of all pay, bounty, and allowances due him at the time from the United States: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion, and of being absent without leave, and of resisting his superior officer, and the decision of the said military court-martial upon said charges, and all other charges which appear against said Archibald Hunley, late a private in Company H, Thirtieth Regiment of Illinois Volunteers, on the records of the War Department; and the proper department of the Government is hereby directed to settle all claims for back pay, bounty, pension, or allowances as if such charges did not exist.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

Strike out the preamble.

In lines 4 and 5 strike out the words "desertion, and of being absent without leave, and of."

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will ask that the report of the committee be read, unless my colleague [Mr. LANDES] desires to make a statement.

Mr. LANDES rose.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I yield a few minutes to my colleague.

Mr. MCCLAMMY. I would like to know the date of the introduction of this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk informs the Chair that the bill was introduced December 21, 1887.

Mr. MCCLAMMY. Very well; I make no objection. It is patriarchal. [Laughter.]

Mr. LANDES. Mr. Speaker, as the report in this case is somewhat voluminous, I desire to state briefly the facts. The Secretary of War has removed from the record of this soldier all the charges preferred against him that it was within the power of the Secretary to remove. It appears from the report of the War Department that the finding of the court-martial which adjudged this soldier guilty of resisting a superior officer still remains against him. The evidence discloses the fact that no attempt was made by this soldier to resist his superior officer by the use of physical violence. The chief proof before the court-martial was embraced in testimony which I will read for the benefit of the House.

To my certain knowledge, during all the time aforesaid (meaning from Hunley's enlistment to date of court-martial), Hunley always obeyed his officers, and never refused to do duty.

I was the officer whom Hunley should have resisted and for which he was court-martialed.

I was the material witness against him, and testified that said Hunley always obeyed his officers and was a good soldier; that the captain of said company had ordered me to put a private by the name of Graves in a tent, which I was trying to do; and Graves, being under the influence of liquor, resisted me and we got into a scramble, and I got Graves down in the mud and water and was holding him down, when Hunley came up and said to me, "Sim, let him up and don't hurt him," and I, being mad, said to Hunley, "Do you take it up?" at the same time releasing and letting Graves up, and the whole matter ended.

* * * I do not consider that A. Hunley ever resisted me from enlistment, August, 1861, to date of court-martial.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, this evidence is frivolous and that the court-martial rendered a very unjust verdict against this soldier. I think, therefore, this House should grant him the relief provided for in this bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask my colleague on the committee to yield to me for one word.

Mr. LANDES. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The Committee on Military Affairs, after a very careful examination of the evidence in this case, were unanimously of the opinion that this soldier was unfairly tried and the verdict rendered against him was unjust. He was found to be a faithful and orderly soldier, and the bill provides for restoring him. I ask for a vote.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I have but a word to say to the House, and ask the gentleman from Illinois to yield to me.

Mr. LANDES. I will yield to the gentleman for two minutes.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I shall vote in favor of the passage of this bill because the Military Committee, the jury in this case, has reported in favor of it

I will use the remainder of the two minutes yielded to me in making an appeal to gentlemen in regard to the business of this evening's session. The Committee on Military Affairs has had referred to it in this Congress about twelve hundred bills.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Fifteen hundred.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The chairman of the committee thinks I am below the mark, and the number will reach fifteen hundred. I know that it has been a laborious committee. It has been faithful in maturing business upon the Calendar. There are many bills awaiting our action, many of which should pass without any objection from any member of the House. This is the last chance we shall have, perhaps, to secure the passage of this legislation to which we have given unwearied labors of two sessions of nearly fifteen months. I make an appeal to gentlemen here, in the interest of good legislation and in behalf of the beneficiaries of these bills, not to take away from the Committee on Military Affairs the last opportunity they may have to consider these matters. If a single member shall insist on his objection as an obstruction, and thus prevent this legislation reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, the work of that committee will be practically thrown away.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. No quorum has voted.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I withdraw the bill.

Mr. STEELE. I would like to know whether that is done as a statesman, or because some man outside of the committee has interfered with the gentleman?

This bill was referred to our committee and we have considered it. Now because some gentleman outside of the committee objects he is going to punish the committee. If that is his statesmanship, I move that the committee rise.

Mr. SPINOLA. I hope the gentleman will give me his time.

Mr. STEELE. I move that the committee rise.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. We are in the House and not in the committee.

Mr. STEELE. Then I move the House adjourn.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I trust before the question is put on the motion to adjourn that the House will hear me for a moment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the gentleman from Illinois making his statement?

There was no objection.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. So far as the statement of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] is concerned I think he has been misunderstood by myself and by others. The gentleman from Indiana was present at the meeting of the committee in calling up a bill for consideration at this evening's session. It was distinctly understood if a protracted opposition on any bill should take up longer than ten minutes, then it was the duty of the member to withdraw the bill. I have acted in strict compliance with that resolution adopted by the committee. Therefore, when he criticises what others have done in withdrawing bills, I can only repeat that they have acted with myself in accordance with the terms of the resolution adopted by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. STEELE. I would like to make a brief statement.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman will be permitted to proceed.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman can call up a bill if he desires.

Mr. STEELE. I have understood all the time that I could do so. But I understand that there is a fixed determination on the part of gentlemen on the floor to allow no bill to be considered to-night. If that is so, and we have evidence that it is true, I do not think the House ought to sit here and go through the farce of attempting to pass bills.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I misunderstood my friend. I thought he was criticising my action.

Mr. STEELE. Not at all. If the gentleman will give any assurance that we are going to pass a bill I would like to remain.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. I give notice that I will object.

Mr. STEELE. Then I move that the House adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 9, noes 31.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I yield to my colleague on the committee from Indiana.

Mr. STEELE. Very well; I will call up the bill I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What bill does the gentleman call up?

BOUNTIES TO VETERAN VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. STEELE. I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 1921) directing the payment of bounties to veteran volunteers who were promoted after enlistment.

The bill is as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That all veteran volunteers who re-enlisted and were mustered into the volunteer service of the United States in accordance with the provisions of General Order No. 191 of the War Department, dated June 25, 1863, and who were afterwards promoted and who were not paid the bounty promised by said order to volunteers enlisted and mustered into service as veterans on the ground that such promotion deprived them of the right to such bounty, shall be entitled to the full benefits of and shall be paid the bounty provided and promised by said order to the same amount and extent as they would have been entitled had they not been promoted, anything in any law, regulation, or ruling to the contrary notwithstanding.

SEC. 2. That the legal heirs of any such veteran volunteer, now deceased, who was so deprived of such bounty, and who would have been entitled to the same by virtue of said order if he had not been promoted after such re-enlistment, shall be entitled to receive the whole of such bounty remaining unpaid at the time of the soldier's death.

SEC. 3. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum sufficient to pay the said bounties.

Mr. STEELE. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. ROBERTSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1921) directing the payment of bounties to veteran volunteers who were promoted after reinstatement, having considered the same, respectfully report the bill favorably, with the recommendation that it do pass, appending hereto and making part of this report the following letter:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, SECOND AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., December 16, 1887.

SIR: I am in receipt of your favor of the 14th instant, containing the following interrogatories in relation to veteran bounty under General Orders No. 191, series of 1863:

1. Has the Treasury Department ruled that unaccrued installments of said bounty should be withheld from men who were promoted after enlistment?

2. Was such ruling made in pursuance of law? If not, upon what authority was it made and what is the full meaning of it?

3. Does the Department still adhere to such ruling?

By the general order to which you refer the War Department offered a bounty of $400 to every volunteer enlisted and mustered into service as a veteran within ninety days, said bounty to be paid as follows:

Installment.	Service.	Amount.
First	On muster into service	$25.00
Second	On first pay day, or two months after muster in	50.00
Third	After six months' service	50.00
Fourth	After twelve months' service	50.00
Fifth	After eighteen months' service	50.00
Sixth	After two years' service	50.00
Seventh	After thirty months' service	50.00
Eighth	At the expiration of three years' service	75.00
	Total	400.00

Paragraph IV of the order directed that "if the Government shall not require these troops for the full period of three years, and they shall be mustered honorably out of service before the expiration of their term of enlistment, they shall receive upon being mustered out the whole amount of bounty remaining unpaid the same as if the full term had been served."

In practice this paragraph has been construed as referring only to those men who were mustered out by reason of their services being no longer required in consequence of the close of the war. A soldier discharged for promotion was not considered to have been discharged in such a manner as to sever his connection with the military service, and he was allowed only such installments of bounty as he had earned under his contract of enlistment.

Replying categorically to your questions, I have the honor to say:

1. It has been repeatedly ruled by the Second Comptroller that unaccrued installments of veteran bounty shall be withheld from men who were promoted after enlistment. Section 296 Comptroller's Digest of 1869 reads as follows:

"In the case of an enlisted man entitled to the veteran bounty, but who is discharged before the expiration of the term of his enlistment by reason of promotion, he is entitled to the installments of bounty matured and become payable before the date of his discharge, less $25, by law required to be refunded."

The law referred to will be found in section 6, act March 3, 1883 (12 Stat., 743); but it is not embraced in the Revised Statutes (see section 280). On April 3, 1878, and again on December 31, 1879, the above ruling was affirmed, as will be seen by section 183, Comptroller's Digest, volume 2, which reads as follows: "A soldier who re-enlisted as a veteran under the provisions of General Orders No. 191, Adjutant-General's Office, of 1863, and was subsequently discharged for promotion, is not entitled to any installment of veteran bounty that had not become due at the date of his discharge."

2. The ruling was not in pursuance of any act or resolution of Congress, there being no law, so far as I am informed, declaring that veterans discharged for promotion shall not receive unmatured installments of bounty.

The authority to rule upon any matter over which they have jurisdiction is conferred upon the accounting officers by the statutes creating their offices and defining their duties (see sections 191, 273, and 277, Revised Statutes). The full meaning of the ruling is, I think, explained by the decisions herein quoted.

3. The ruling is still in force.

Respectfully, yours,

WM. A. DAY, Auditor.

Hon. O. B. THOMAS,
House of Representatives.

Mr. MCCLAMMY. I repeat my interrogatory in the former case. What is the date of the introduction of this bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the bill was introduced on the 4th of January, 1888.

Mr. STEELE. This bill is in the interest of some enlisted men who were promoted in the very last days of the war. It was held that because they were getting pay as officers for from fifteen to thirty days they were to forfeit the two or three hundred dollars bounty to which they were entitled. In other words, it said to the soldiers, "If you do a gallant deed and are promoted, we will take $300 from you and give you your promotion and fifty or sixty dollars." That was the construction that was placed upon the law, and this bill will affect but few soldiers. We have petitions asking its passage, and it is recommended.

The question being taken on the engrossment and third reading of the bill, the House divided; and there were—ayes 38, noes 3.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL and Mr. STEELE as tellers.

Mr. STEELE. I will withdraw the bill because I find I have to do so.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I now yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER].

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman from Mississippi yield to me to make an explanation?

Mr. HOOKER. I will.

Mr. STEELE. I call for the regular order. You can not fix anything by my consent. No one man is going to dictate to me.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. I have the floor, I believe, by consent of the gentleman from Mississippi.

The bill, Mr. Speaker, No. 1687, appropriating $100,000——

Mr. STEELE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. This is a personal explanation and I have the right to make it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman desire to make a personal explanation?

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEELE. I object.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman has a right to proceed. The gentleman from Mississippi yielded to the gentleman from New York the right to the floor, and unanimous consent is not required.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the gentleman from New York asked unanimous consent.

Mr. GLOVER. The gentleman had the floor, though, by consent of the gentleman from Mississippi.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York will proceed.

MONUMENT TO VICTIMS OF BRITISH PRISON-SHIPS.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. The bill of the House, No. 1687, appropriating a hundred thousand dollars for a monument to the martyrs who died in the prison-ships of the Revolution was before the House, and I am informed that some gentleman in the House would be willing to withdraw the objection recently made if the appropriation is reduced to $50,000. To do away with objection, I will offer this bill for passage, making the appropriation fifty thousand instead of a hundred thousand dollars.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The title of the bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1687) for the erection and completion of a monument to the memory of the victims of the prison-ships at Fort Greene, Brooklyn.

Mr. SPINOLA. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I rise to a question of order. I desire to know who is entitled to the floor. I yielded to the gentleman from Mississippi, who was recognized.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. And the gentleman from Mississippi yielded to me.

Mr. HOOKER. But I understood the gentleman to ask only to make a personal explanation.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. This will take but a few moments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is advised that this bill has been considered, the amendments recommended by the committee concurred in, and the question is on its passage.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. I move to amend the bill by making the amount fifty thousand instead of a hundred thousand.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs upon the passage of the bill as amended.

The question was put; and upon a division there were—ayes 38, no 1.

Mr. KILGORE. I will have to make the same point of no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL].

Mr. DUNHAM. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent pending the appointment of tellers to make a statement. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. DUNHAM. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I certainly supposed there was an understanding between the gentleman from Texas and myself that this bill was to go through. With that understanding I informed the gentleman from New York [Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL], and the reason the bill has gone thus far in the House is in consequence of what I said to the gentleman from New York. I am surprised that after the conversation between the gentleman from Texas and myself the point of no quorum is made, and I desired to make this statement so as to set myself right and give a reason why the bill was brought up again.

Mr. SPINOLA. Is the bill open to debate?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not.

Mr. KILGORE. I would like to make a personal explanation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] asks unanimous consent to make an explanation. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. KILGORE. I desire to say to the gentleman from Illinois that he certainly must have mistaken me if he understood that I consented to allow this bill to go through under any consideration. I said in advance if General SPINOLA would consent to strike out $100,000 I would agree for the bill to go through, and I do not remember to have had a conversation with the gentleman from Illinois. [Laughter.] If I made any such statement in regard to the bill I will only say this to the gentleman from Illinois: I will stand by it, however much it may be against my convictions; but I am satisfied I did not make any such arrangement. [To Mr. DUNHAM:] When was that conversation, if the gentleman will allow me to ask him?

Mr. DUNHAM. The gentleman will recollect that I came to him about five minutes ago and called his attention to the fact when this bill was before the House last summer he expressed his willingness to let the bill pass, provided the appropriation was reduced from $100,000 to $50,000.

Mr. KILGORE. That is true.

Mr. DUNHAM. Your answer to me was that if that amendment was made you would not object to it.

Mr. KILGORE. That is true.

Mr. DUNHAM. And that if it was made you would allow the bill to go through.

Mr. KILGORE. That is exactly what took place. I do not remember who I had the conversation with. That is what took place between myself and a member. I remember distinctly about being spoken to about it, but I did not remember with whom I had the conversation. That, however, was objected to on the other side. They refused to accept that compromise and kicked up a row. I then declared all promises were off.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, what is the condition of the bill now? Is it being considered, or is it on its third reading, and has the House found itself without a quorum?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is now on its passage; and on the vote the ayes were 38, the noes 1. Thereupon the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] made the point that no quorum had voted. The Chair appointed as tellers the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL]. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] then arose and asked unanimous consent to make a statement, which was given, and the gentleman made a statement. Thereupon a like request was made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE], and granted, and the gentleman made a statement. Nothing now is in order except the vote by tellers.

Mr. MILLS. I wish to inquire whether, in case the House finds itself without a quorum, this bill would come up to-morrow as unfinished business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question has not been ordered on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MILLS. But you are taking a vote on the final passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman in charge of the bill did not demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. SPINOLA. I have charge of the bill from my committee.

Mr. GEAR. Is it competent to demand the previous question now?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not at this time, because a vote is being taken on the passage of the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. Was not the previous question ordered on the passage of this bill when it was previously before the House? My recollection is that the previous question had been ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is advised that the previous question has not been ordered.

Mr. MILLS. But this is the previous question. The previous question being ordered, the vote is taken on the passage of the bill. The ordering of the previous question cuts off amendment and debate, and the House had proceeded to vote without any order for the previous question. The House is now considering the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman in charge of the bill had arisen before the Chair put the question on the passage of the bill, and had demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill, and it had been ordered, the effect of that order would have been to carry the bill over and give it privilege to be called up hereafter at any time in the House——

Mr. MILLS. Precisely. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the previous question was not demanded.

Mr. MILLS. But the previous question was being considered without any demand.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Texas to the fact that the point of no quorum had been made; on that the Chair had appointed tellers, and the House was in the act of dividing upon the question. The House is acting under a special order, and there is no possible way under the practice of the House to carry this bill over to a future session except by ordering the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. PEEL. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PEEL. Is it in order to ask unanimous consent at this stage that the previous question be considered as ordered?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. Then I ask unanimous consent that the previous question be considered as ordered upon the passage of this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL] asks unanimous consent that the previous question be considered as ordered on the passage of the bill.

Mr. KILGORE. I object to that.

Mr. SPINOLA. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement.

Mr. HOOKER. I hope that now the gentleman from New York [Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL], in response to the courtesy he has received, will withdraw his bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] asks unanimous consent to make a statement at this time.

There was no objection.

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Speaker, I had the honor on a former occasion, as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs of this House, to ask the consideration of the bill which is now before this body. The House kindly acceded to my request, and the bill was taken up for consideration. It occupied an entire evening, to the exclusion of all my associates on the committee, each of whom had a bill of his own which he desired to put forward. The discussion on this bill took so wide a range that it excluded them from the presentation of their bills simply because they had consented to indulge me in an attempt to secure the passage of this important measure—important to the people of the city of Brooklyn and to the whole State of New York and to the whole Union, for, Mr. Speaker, this is a national issue and not a local one. To-night I came here again and was first entitled to recognition among the members of my committee. I again took up this bill for my friends from Brooklyn, to the exclusion of a bill of my own. I made a proposition to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE], who had objected. I asked him whether by any modification of the bill which might be made, or any form of amendment which might be adopted, he would consent to withdraw his opposition, and he replied, in a very gentlemanly manner, I admit, that the only proposition that could be made that he would accept would be to strike out the entire appropriation. I made that inquiry of the gentleman from Texas to ascertain whether, by modifying the bill, his objection would be withdrawn, because of certain rumors which had come to me this afternoon as well as this evening that he was willing to agree to an appropriation of $50,000 instead of $100,000.

Those rumors, I say, had been poured into my ears in the House all day, and I thought that if that amendment was acceptable to the gentleman from Texas I was certainly willing to agree to it and reduce the appropriation to $50,000, but it seems that the proposed modification was not satisfactory to the gentleman. I then saw that there was no possible chance to pass the bill to-night. Common sense told me that it was useless to sit here and fritter away the time of the House in attempting to pass a bill which could not be passed without a quorum, when we all knew that a quorum could not be secured at an evening session like this. I asked the gentleman from Texas, further, whether he was willing that the bill should go over until to-morrow and come up for a vote in a full House. That proposition also he declined.

Now, Mr. Speaker, some gentlemen around this circle are whispering among themselves that when New York wants assistance she carries the hat around the country. Oh, with what bad grace that statement comes from any gentleman as applicable to the city of New York, the greatest city of charities to-day upon the face of the earth, without a peer, much less a rival, as a city of charity! No suffering people in any quarter of the globe ever appealed to the generosity of New York and had a deaf ear turned to their application.

Our hearts and our pockets are ever open to the calls of suffering humanity in all parts of the earth when they appeal to us for aid. Even at this very moment our friends from the Southern country are asking us to aid them to provide a home for their disabled veteran soldiers, and, sir, that appeal will be responded to in the city of New York in a manner that will bring a blush to the cheek of every man who has thrown out these uncalled for intimations and insinuations regarding that great city. Her bounty, gentlemen, you will find, will be poured out lavishly in that cause, and, sir, I thank God that such people exist as to-day constitute the inhabitants of the city of New York. I regret, Mr. Speaker, that members of the House do not deem our proceedings here of sufficient importance to attend evening sessions like this. They are of the utmost importance to the men who saved your country. The men who encountered all the dangers, all the hardships, and all the sufferings of a four years' struggle come to these evening sessions for help and for justice, yet there is not interest enough felt by the Representatives of the American people to attend here and make a quorum, thus leaving it in the power of any one gentleman on either side of the House to prevent the passage of meritorious measures by a single objection. And, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say right here to my friend from Brooklyn [Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL] that I regret that he has taken the course which he has taken to-night. Sir, during my life I have known of but one way to whip an enemy, and that is to train my guns upon my foes and not upon my friends. I fear that my friend from Brooklyn has injured his cause here to-night, for while one gentleman may have been opposed to this bill there were forty or fifty others present who were in favor of it.

Mr. PERKINS. And they are yet.

Mr. SPINOLA. And they are yet.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. And they will stay here, too.

Mr. SPINOLA. God grant that they may never wilt nor lower their colors, so far as this bill is concerned.

Mr. Speaker, it is more than a hundred years since our fathers gathered together and promulgated to the world the greatest document ever given to humanity, the Declaration of Independence. The promulgation of that great document led to the formation of armies, the fighting of great battles, the shedding of blood, the maiming of patriots, and the death of thousands of men struggling for the liberty of the colonies, among whom were the eleven thousand five hundred martyrs who perished in the British prison-ships at New York. They came from every section of the country as it existed at that time. This bill is for the perpetuation of their memory.

After the lapse of a quarter of a century, after the results of that great struggle had been achieved and the American Republic had been created, the Tammany Society gathered up the bones of these martyrs and had them suitably interred. That funeral was not a New York matter. It took in the whole country. There in the column stood the representatives of the State of Georgia, from which the parents of my friend from Texas came, as I understand his pedigree. Arm in arm stood Georgia with New Hampshire. Then came Massachusetts shoulder to shoulder with South Carolina. Then came Rhode Island with North Carolina upon her flank. And so it went on through all the thirteen States, each of which was represented. There existed among those people a feeling of brotherly friendship and love which seems to have been almost forgotten in these days. This is a measure upon which I believed all could unite. The brigadier from the South could shake hands across the aisle with the brigadier from the North. The chasm could be crossed on this matter, and friendship and brotherly love established upon a broad basis of patriotism.

Mr. MAISH. Will the gentleman from New York allow me to suggest that there ought to be a limit to this? There are a great many of us——

Mr. SPINOLA. Yes; and you will get nothing through here to-night; I am satisfied of that.

Mr. MAISH. It would seem so; but I have simply thrown out this suggestion. I thought that the gentleman did not realize that he was consuming time a large part of which belongs to some other members of this committee.

Mr. SPINOLA. I would say to my friend that I fully realize the fact that I am consuming time—wasting it in all probability——

A MEMBER. No, indeed; you are making a good speech.

Mr. SPINOLA. But I do not see the first opportunity for us to pass a bill of any character to-night; and there is not a man on this floor who regrets it more than I do. I am very sorry that the objection has come from the source it has. I have done all that I could, our committee has done all that it could, and the friends of the measure have done all that it was in their power to do to secure its passage.

Why, Mr. Speaker, if we should go into the history of this thing it is enough almost to make every man's blood curdle. When you remember the privations and sufferings and the awful death of these martyrs of liberty——

Mr. DUNHAM. I rise to a question of order. I make the point of order that a request on the part of a gentleman "to make a statement" is practically rising to a privileged matter, and that he has——

Mr. SPINOLA. No, sir; I am making a speech on this question.

Mr. DUNHAM. I make the point that a member who takes the floor under permission "to make a statement" is practically rising to a question of privilege——

Mr. SPINOLA. I hope the gentleman will not undertake to interrupt me in my time.

Mr. DUNHAM. And the gentleman has no right to go on and make a speech——

Mr. SPINOLA. I received permission to make some remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unanimous consent was given to the gentleman from New York to make a statement.

Mr. SPINOLA. And I hope I shall not be interrupted.

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] has the floor.

Mr. SPINOLA. Yes, sir; thank you.

Mr. DUNHAM. I rise to a question of order. The request of the gentleman from New York was to make a brief statement. I desire the Chair to decide what is a brief statement.

Mr. SPINOLA. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I did not say "brief." I said "to make a statement."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not think that the gentleman from New York has exceeded the unanimous consent given by the House.

Mr. GLOVER. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GLOVER. I think the attention of the Chair was not called to the suggestion made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, or some other gentleman, who rose with the intention of ascertaining, for the benefit of the House, the extent to which the gentleman's remarks would go. Thereupon within my hearing a statement was made that they would be very brief and in the nature of a personal statement.

Mr. SPINOLA. Is this to be taken out of my time? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] will proceed.

Mr. SPINOLA. I have already called the attention of the House to the fact that the eleven thousand five hundred martyrs who perished in those British dungeons came from all the thirteen original colonies, each colony furnishing its full quota. Sir, I can hear to-night a voice from Bunker Hill appealing to us through the blood of Warren to pass this bill. [Applause.] And, sir, from the snow-clad hills of Valley Forge a voice appeals to us, coming from that little perishing army which passed that terrible winter at that place, asking us to do justice to the memory of their comrades who died in defense of the liberties with which we are now blessed.

Mr. CAREY. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SPINOLA. Yes, sir.

Mr. CAREY. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he did not agree this morning in the committee that he would only occupy ten minutes?

Mr. SPINOLA. Yes, sir; when I saw it was utter folly to attempt to pass the bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let us try it once more and see what we can do.

Mr. SPINOLA. When I finish my few remarks I will yield the floor.

Mr. DUNHAM. Very well. Then we can go on with business.

Mr. SPINOLA. You can talk on it to-morrow in the House as far as I am concerned. If it is used up unnecessarily by putting obstructions in the way of business the responsibility is not mine.

Mr. DUNHAM. Let some one else have a chance to make a speech.

Mr. GLOVER. Let the gentleman from New York ask leave to print. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPINOLA. I do not want leave to print. Let those who can not express themselves through their mouths get leave to print. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. PERKINS. Is it in order to ask unanimous consent to withdraw the bill?

Mr. SPINOLA. Not while I am on the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to carry out, and will carry out, the manifest intent of the House. The gentleman from New York has been allowed to proceed for a brief time.

Mr. CUTCHEON. How much time does the gentleman from New York propose to occupy?

Mr. SPINOLA. I think about five minutes will finish up what I have to say.

Mr. DUNHAM. Do you not think you have finished it up already? [Laughter.]

Mr. SPINOLA. Your soul is so dead to patriotic appeals that you want to cut me off. [Applause.] I wish to appeal to you, Mr. Speaker, and to gentlemen of the House, I wish to appeal to the patriotic heart of every man upon this floor; and right here let me say that the blood-soaked field of Monmouth appeals to us in defense of this bill. What American can refuse the appeals I have referred to? And from Camden comes a voice, trumpet-tongued, from the eleven gaping wounds of Baron de Kalb. Those wounds speak to us in a voice that no true American can refuse to listen to. [Applause.] And they are in favor of this bill.

Then come Marion and his men. They speak to us, sir, through the spirits of the departed free. [Applause.] I can hear their voices to-night imploring the Representatives of the American people to do justice to the brave men who died for American liberty. [Renewed applause.]

Mr. PERKINS. But what about KILGORE and his men? [Great laughter.]

Mr. SPINOLA. The gentleman from Kansas will answer that question himself in his own time. He can not take up my time to do it. Now, for fear the House may become weary and dissatisfied, I will bring my remarks to a close by hoping that the bill will pass, although to do justice to this great question I should be allowed at least another hour, but, thank God, the responsibility of the defeat of the bill will not be on me.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I rise for the purpose of asking unanimous consent that the bill be withdrawn.

Mr. SPINOLA. I move the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill can only be withdrawn by unanimous consent. It was introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL], and of course can only be withdrawn by his consent. Is there objection?

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. I will not object if the gentleman from Texas will relent a little and withdraw his objection to letting the bill pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois to withdraw the bill?

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. To retain its place on the Calendar?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Of course.

There being no objection, the bill was withdrawn.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I rise to call the attention of the House to the fact that we are notified unmistakably by a gentleman on the floor that he feels it his duty to make the point of no quorum against any measure that may be presented this evening. That being the case, it is utterly useless, it seems to me, for the House to sit here and indulge in mere oratorical pyrotechnics. We might as well adjourn.

Mr. HOOKER. Let me try to pass a bill to which so much merit attaches that I feel there can be no objection.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I have no objection to the gentleman's trying, but it seems useless.

Mr. HOOKER. Let me make one further effort.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Very well.

CHAPLAIN C. M. BLAKE.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I call up now the bill (H. R. 640) to restore Chaplain C. M. Blake, United States Army, to rank and pay.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas it appears that Charles M. Blake, a post chaplain in the United States Army, while suffering in Arizona from a wound and fever received and incurred in the line of duty, and from which he became for some time insane and was wholly irresponsible, and in that condition did, on or about December 24, 1868, make a tender of his resignation to the Secretary of War, and the same was accepted by the President while the said Chaplain Blake was thus sick and entirely unconscious of the said resignation having been tendered: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That Charles M. Blake, post chaplain in the Army, retired, shall be entitled to the full rank, pay, and allowances of chaplain in the Army from April 28, 1869, to May 14, 1878, the same as if his service had been continuous from August 13, 1861; and the accounting officers of the Treasury be, and are hereby, directed to settle his accounts.

Mr. McCLAMMY. When was this bill introduced?

Mr. HOOKER. In December, 1887.

Mr. MAHONEY. I ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. HOOKER. I desire to say a single word which will explain the report, as it is somewhat lengthy.

Mr. KILGORE. I think the reading of the report would be better.

Mr. HOOKER. I can give it much sooner by "word of mouth," as the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] says, and save the time of the House.

A MEMBER. Let the report be read.

Mr. HOOKER. I hope the gentleman from New York will not insist upon that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the reading of the report is in the nature of debate.

Mr. HOOKER. I am aware of that, and if it be desired I will have the report read in my own time; but I think I can satisfy gentlemen by making a statement in reference to the merits of the case.

I appeal now to the gentleman from New York, to whom I yielded time a moment ago to which I was entitled for the purpose of getting his bill before the House and passing it, to let me proceed with this matter, to which I am sure there can be no reasonable objection.

The gentleman from New York has had his opportunity; he has endeavored to pass his bill; and because he failed to pass the bill in which he is interested, a bill from his section of the country, I hope he will have the generosity of heart, which I am sure he possesses, not to object now when the bill I introduced to do an act of tardy justice to an old man who served the country faithfully and honorably during the war in the hospital and in the field, and has long been deprived of justice, is before the House for consideration.

This is an act which will be of benefit to the living. It is not a monument in commemoration of the dead, but it is for the benefit of an old man living in poverty, and under peculiar affliction and suffering. I hope the gentleman from New York, therefore, will yield now to the passage of this bill, and not raise the question of the absence of a quorum from the House, or require a lengthy report to be read.

The evidence, Mr. Speaker, in this case, which is conclusive, discloses the fact that owing to a severe injury received during the war, and long and trying and arduous service, a disorder of the brain was occasioned, which has given him trouble ever since, and while stationed in Arizona and on duty there he became insane as the result of this injury. While so afflicted, and acting under a delusion that he was being wronged by his superior officers, he wrote to the War Department and threatened to resign if his wrongs were not righted. Not realizing his condition his resignation was recommended to be accepted, and it was accepted and his pay was suspended. Attempts were made afterwards to explain the condition of affairs to the Secretary of War, but the information reached that official too late, and this afflicted man relapsed into a state of mental incapacity and was unable to protect himself. That is exactly the condition of the case.

This bill is simply to right the wrong that was done to him by accepting his resignation at a time when he was incapacitated to understand the effect of it; and I do invoke the charity of my good friend, the gentleman from Texas, to whose heart I know I can appeal even beneath the objections which he sometimes urges against measures pending in the House, that he will not insist on his objection in this case; and I know the gentleman from New York, animated by the spirit of generosity which he must possess, coming from the country he does, will not interpose objection to an act which will restore this old man to his rightful position, a position to which he was entitled by the services rendered his country in its time of peril. [Applause.]

Mr. COBB. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to offer an amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. COBB. Then I move to strike out the provision for pay and allowances.

Mr. HOOKER. He is certainly entitled to pay and allowance if he is entitled to anything, and I hope my friend from Alabama will not insist upon the amendment.

Mr. COBB. Do I understand that he resigned when he was crazy?

Mr. HOOKER. That is the evidence in the case.

Mr. COBB. He resigned in 1869, I believe?

Mr. HOOKER. Yes.

Mr. COBB. And you propose to pay him from that time to 1878? Do you think he is entitled to that?

Mr. HOOKER. Unquestionably.

Mr. KILGORE. If the gentleman from Mississippi will accept the amendment I will make no objection, otherwise I shall feel compelled to do so.

Mr. HOOKER. Very well; I am compelled to accept the amendment that he be entitled to no allowance or pay. Now let us pass the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the fourth line, strike out the words "pay and allowance."

Mr. COBB. The purpose of my amendment is to allow no pay or allowance until he is restored by this act.

Mr. HOOKER. Well, we understand the amendment; now let us have a vote upon it.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. There is no gentleman whom I respect more than the honorable gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER], but I ask him now to appeal to his own side of the House and to his own section of the country and not to New York and the Northern section of country. It is his own section of country that has been doing all this mischief in the House. Is it right, fair, or just that one man shall bar the action of sixty or sixty-five members and prevent them from passing a bill? Now, appeal to your own section of country and let them help you pass the bill.

Mr. HOOKER. I beg leave to say to the gentleman from New York that I have bestirred myself with gentlemen from all sections of the country, and I have made this appeal to both sides. If my friend from Alabama [Mr. COBB] will take his seat we will pass the bill.

Mr. COBB. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL] never knew me in this House and he never will——

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. That is true.

Mr. COBB. To stand here and obstruct the course of business in the House because I had been irritated by reason of not getting a bill of my own through; never. I shall never be guilty of that sort of conduct. Further than that, I have never made a motion or made an objection unless it was in the utmost good faith, and because I believed at the time that my course was right. For that reason and for that alone I have offered this amendment, and I did so in the way that I regulate all my conduct upon this floor.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I now appeal to my friend from Mississippi to withdraw the bill from further consideration as the gentleman from New York [Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL] has fairly indicated that he will call a quorum on it,

Mr. HOOKER. In obedience to the agreement entered into this morning by the Committee on Military Affairs, of which I am a member, and on the appeal of the chairman of the committee, I feel constrained to withdraw the bill.

Mr. COBB. I want to state that I am not insisting upon that.

Mr. KILGORE. I wish to state to the gentleman that I will let the bill go through with the amendment.

There was no objection, and the bill was withdrawn.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON] to call up a bill.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. I move that the House adjourn.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 5, noes 35.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. I move to take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House is proceeding under a special order, which provides for adjournment at 10 o'clock p. m., and the Chair thinks that the intent of the House would prohibit the motion offered by the gentleman from New York. The motion may be technically in order, but the Chair would suggest that good faith to the House would require that it should not be considered at this time.

BREVET RANK FOR SERVICES IN INDIAN CAMPAIGNS.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I call up the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (S. 1323) to authorize the President to confer brevet rank on officers of the United States Army for gallant services in Indian campaigns.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered, at his direction, to nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint to brevet rank all officers of the United States Army, now on the active or retired list, who by their department commander and with the concurrence of the Commanding General of the Army, have been or may be recommended for gallant service in action against hostile Indians since January 1, 1867.

SEC. 2. That such brevet commissions as may be issued under the provisions of this act shall bear date only from the passage of this act: Provided, however, That the date of the particular heroic act for which the officer is promoted shall appear in his commission.

SEC. 3. That brevet rank shall be considered strictly honorary, and shall confer no privilege of precedence or command not already provided for in the statutes which embody the rules and articles governing the Army of the United States.

SEC. 4. That all laws and clauses of laws in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

The amendments proposed by the committee were read, as follows:

Strike out all after the word "date," in section 2, to the end of the section, and insert "from the date of the recommendation thereof by the department commander in each case respectively."

Mr. CUTCHEON. I would like to say a word in explanation of this bill. This bill has passed one House or other of Congress in each of the last three Congresses. In the last Congress it passed this House by a unanimous vote. It went to the Senate and there was unanimously reported by the Senate committee, but was not reached for final passage. It does not call for a single cent now, hereafter, or at any time. It proposes only and simply to recognize the gallant conduct of certain officers in Indian campaigns, and to confer upon them brevet rank. These recommendations were made nigh on to twenty years ago. Many of these officers were wounded, several of them are now dead, and their friends are only interested in this little act of justice to their memory.

Others in due course have been promoted to ranks superior to that which this bill proposes to confer. At the same time they have a pride in the completion of their military record. There has been a doubt as to whether there was under the power to confer brevet rank in the time of war power to confer it for services in Indian campaigns. This simply solves that doubt. There is absolutely no rank or pay conferred; there is nothing but the name, the same as you might tie a piece of ribbon in the button-hole or place the insignia of the Legion of Honor upon the breast of a man. That is all there is in it. It does not involve the expenditure of a single dollar which is in the Treasury. It simply confers this rank for gallant services.

Mr. MCCLAMMY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I would like to know the date of the introduction of that bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. May 21, 1888.

Mr. MCCLAMMY. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. It is a substitute for the House bill which was introduced on January 4, 1888.

Mr. MCCLAMMY. I want nothing but hoary-headed measures, and I must object to any bill which is not older than January 4.

Mr. CUTCHEON. This is a substitute for House bill 1561.

Mr. MCCLAMMY. It may be meritorious.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The Senate bill was introduced May 21, 1888.

Mr. MCCLAMMY. Then I withdraw the objection. That is old enough.

The amendment was agreed to.

The question was put on ordering the bill to be read a third time, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 47, noes 5.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. No quorum.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask the gentleman from Michigan to withdraw the bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I withdraw the bill.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. I move that the House take a recess until fifteen minutes to 10.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I think I had the floor, and I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAISH].

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I think my motion takes precedence.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON] desires to withdraw this bill. Is there objection?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. There is no objection.

There was no objection, and the bill was withdrawn.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I trust the Chair will, as has heretofore been done this evening, recognize the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs when a measure is disposed of. The motion of the gentleman is not a privileged motion of a character to take me off the floor. The order of the House is that this evening is set apart for the consideration of business that is reported from the Committee on Military Affairs. Now, it has heretofore been the practice in the transaction of the business under that order to recognize the chairman as controlling the floor and yielding it to other members of the committee to call up bills. I therefore simply ask that the same privilege be accorded now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will first recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAISH] and then the gentleman from New York [Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL].

Mr. TOWNSHEND. But the gentleman can not take me off the floor with a motion for a recess.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. What has become of my motion to take a recess?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will be in order when the gentleman is recognized. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAISH] to call up a bill.

ROAD TO NATIONAL CEMETERY, DOVER, TENN.

Mr. MAISH. I call up the bill (H. R. 11694) to construct a road to the national cemetery at Dover, Tenn.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of constructing, under the direction of the Secretary of War, a macadamized road from the river landing or its vicinity, in the town of Dover, Tenn., to the national cemetery near old Fort Donelson: Provided, That the right of way, not less than 50 feet in width, shall first be secured to the United States to any part of the ground over which said road shall run, not now owned by the United States.

The Committee on Military Affairs reported an amendment as follows:

Strike out the word "ten" in the third line of the bill, and insert "seven."

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask to be recognized for my motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SPRINGER). The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAISH] has the floor.

Mr. MAISH. Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield to my friend from Tennessee [Mr. WASHINGTON].

Mr. WASHINGTON withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I would be very much pleased to serve my friend from Tennessee [Mr. WASHINGTON], but when he speaks in this House of patriotism and of honoring the dead, he certainly does not remember the eleven thousand five hundred men whose bones lie without a monument over them in the city in which I reside, although it is not in my Congressional district.

It is men from the gentleman's own section of the country who object to this measure. Here were eleven thousand five hundred brave and patriotic men. Only one of those prisoners, so far as I have been able to learn, was willing to accept his liberty on condition of going into the British army; the rest perished there; were starved or cut to pieces. The gentleman from Tennessee now undertakes to appeal to my sympathy when other gentlemen coming from the Southern section of the country are not willing to agree to this bill, even with an amendment making the appropriation $50,000, when the purpose is to erect a monument over the bones of those brave patriots of whom I have spoken.

Mr. MAISH. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL] knows that no one has worked more for the bill to perpetuate the memory of those martyrs to whom he has referred than I have done. I made the report in this case; I devoted a good many days and nights to its preparation. I trust he will not make any objections to the pending bill. He has not objected, I believe. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (having put the question on the amendment reported by the committee) said: The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. I call for a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 43, no 1.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. No quorum.

Mr. MAISH. I withdraw the bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I now yield to the gentleman——

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. I move that the House now take a recess until a quarter to 10 o'clock.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I was recognized——

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DOCKERY). The Chair recognized the gentleman from New York to make a motion to take a recess, which is a privileged motion.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Pending that I move to adjourn.

Mr. WHEELER. Pending that I ask unanimous consent to occupy one minute. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL] moves that the House take a recess until a quarter before 10 o'clock. Pending that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] moves that the House do now adjourn. Pending these motions the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] asks unanimous consent to speak for one minute. Is there objection?

Mr. MACDONALD. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. So far as I am concerned I am perfectly willing to yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MACDONALD] has objected.

Mr. WHEELER. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that objection.

Mr. MACDONALD. I will if the gentleman proposes to speak on his bill; otherwise I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pending these motions the gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to speak for one minute.

A MEMBER. On what subject?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama does not state.

Mr. DORSEY. I object.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, fifty-seven years ago a brave man——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama has not the permission of the House to proceed. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. DORSEY] objected.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. At the suggestion of several gentlemen, I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. DORSEY. I withdraw my objection to permitting the gentleman from Alabama to speak for one minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion remaining is that of the gentleman from New York, that the House take a recess until quarter before 10 o'clock, pending which the gentleman from Alabama again asks unanimous consent to be allowed to speak for one minute. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLMES. I object.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. I withdraw the motion for a recess.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GEAR].

WARREN C. ALDEN.

Mr. GEAR. I call up the bill which I send to the desk—a bill (S. 1871) to perfect the military record of Warren C. Alden. I wish to make a brief statement before the bill is read. We have heard much to-night in regard to the dead, all of which I heartily indorse. Here is an opportunity for this House to do something for the living. Here is the case of a boy who at the age of fifteen enlisted in the service of the United States, and who afterward enlisted a second time. He drew no compensation for his service; and this bill provides no compensation, except that his record shall show an honorable discharge. I appeal to the good feeling and the good sense of every man on this floor to permit this bill to be acted on and passed.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to enter on the rolls of Company C, Fourth Independent Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, the name of Warren C. Alden, with a statement of the fact that he entered the United States service as a private on the 10th day of July, 1863, and performed faithful and patriotic services as such private in Company C, Fourth Independent Battalion Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, until October 10 of said year, and was then compelled to leave the Army because he was under the age that entitled him to be mustered into the United States service.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following:

"Provided, That the said Warren C. Alden shall by virtue hereof neither receive nor be entitled to any pay, bounty, pension, or other pecuniary benefit."

Mr. GEAR. I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa demands the previous question on agreeing to the amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (having put the question on agreeing to the amendment) said: The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. I call for a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 34, noes 2.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. No quorum.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask my friend from Iowa [Mr. GEAR] to withdraw the bill.

Mr. GEAR. I withdraw the bill, and in the time allowed me I will call up another.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the bill is withdrawn.

COUNTERPOISE BATTERY, POTOMAC RIVER.

Mr. GEAR. I call up for consideration the bill (S. 2394) to authorize the construction of a counterpoise battery on the bank of the Potomac River below Washington.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $35,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the construction of one counterpoise battery to mount one 6-inch breech-loading rifled cannon of the new pattern. This battery shall be erected on the bank of the Potomac River below the city of Washington and within a distance of 12 miles.

SEC. 2. That Beverly Kennon, the inventor and patentee, shall superintend and direct the work, and shall complete the same for actual service within three months after the passage of this act. The gun to be mounted upon it, with its fittings, may be loaned by the Ordnance Department of the Navy. All expenses attending its removal to the battery and from it, if required, to be borne by money embraced in this appropriation.

Mr. GEAR. I wish to say a word in regard to that bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope my friend will remember the rule adopted by the committee.

Mr. GEAR. Certainly; and I will occupy but a moment. I wish to say in regard to this invention of Mr. Beverly Kennon, a former naval officer, that the gun was fairly tested at the siege in the last war of the British in Egypt. It was the only gun that was not dismounted by the fire of the English fleet. The Military Committee unanimously reported $35,000 for this invention last year, which was increased by the Senate to $100,000, but by some misconception by the authorities of the War Department the appropriation was diverted for a 12-inch gun.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

Mr. KILGORE demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 32, noes 2.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. No quorum.

Mr. GEAR. I withdraw the bill.

MACADAMIZED ROAD TO NATIONAL CEMETERY, WILMINGTON, N. C.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will yield the floor now to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ROBERTSON].

Mr. ROBERTSON. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 11524) to construct a road from Wilmington, N. C., to the national cemetery adjacent thereto, and for other purposes, which has been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs as a substitute for House bill 4307.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the construction of a macadam road, at a width of 30 feet, leading from Fourth street, on Market street, in the city of Wilmington, N. C., to the national cemetery in the vicinity of said city, the same to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War: Provided, That no part of the money so appropriated shall be expended until the city of Wilmington shall, by proper ordinances, grant to the United States the right, without expense, to grade and macadamize the street along the route selected for the construction of said road, and also provide in said ordinance that when said road is constructed that said city will keep the same in repair as far as the entrance to the national cemetery: And provided further, That no part of said money shall be expended until the county of New Hanover shall, by proper orders duly entered of record, widen the county road, if necessary, along the route selected, so as that it shall correspond in width to the street of said city selected for said macadamized road: Provided also, That the city of Wilmington shall put in at its own expense a suitable stone curb and gutter along so much of said streets as are situate in said city: And provided further, That the contract to construct said road shall be awarded to the lowest bidder, after due advertisement, the Secretary of War to have authority to reject any and all bids.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. As other gentlemen are allowed to call up bills for consideration, I hope I will not be denied the right, before the evening closes, to call up and pass a bill (H. R. 2575) for the relief of John Schenk.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I do not yield at this time to the gentleman from Missouri, but will yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. MCCLAMMY].

Mr. TOWNSHEND. How long?

Mr. MCCLAMMY. I only ask for two minutes. I do not want to detain the House by any eloquence with which I might entertain them on this occasion. If I had time I would launch out in praise of my friend from Indiana "in thoughts that breathe and words that burn" for giving me sufficient time to appeal to the House in favor of the passage of this bill. As showing how much I appreciate his courtesy and kindness, I must be pardoned for saying my heart—and I carry one in a thin bosom—beats heavily for him. While I know I could entertain the House, I prefer, however, to take up the time in securing the passage of my bill. It is a just measure. Everybody is in favor of it; and I hope the House will pass it at once. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. WASHINGTON. How old is that bill?

Mr. MCCLAMMY. It is of age, and I hope you will allow it to pass. [Laughter.]

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 34, no 1.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. No quorum.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I withdraw the bill.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I have the floor and desire to call up another bill.

JOHN C. GREEN.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I call up the bill (S. 67) to perfect the military record of John C. Green, of Tennessee, and will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE].

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, this bill is to perfect the military record of John C. Green, who was a soldier in the Federal Army in Tennessee and was on special duty when his company was mustered in, and hence did not have an opportunity to be mustered into the service. He was captured at Union City and carried to Andersonville, Ga., where he subsequently died. This is simply to perfect his military record, and is, I think, a matter of justice to him. I have nothing further to say in support of the measure. I shall not make any appeal to the gentleman from New York in behalf of the claimant in this case.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. I should not think the gentleman from Tennessee would make many appeals to me.

Mr. ENLOE. No, sir; I will not.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. For I made one to him without much success.

Mr. ENLOE. I will not waste any "sweetness on the desert air" in that quarter.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. You will certainly waste all the sweetness that "the gentleman from New York" wants.

Mr. ENLOE. I am perfectly willing that the gentleman shall interpose his objection, as I presume he will without regard to the merits of the case.

The question was put on the third reading of the bill; and on a division there were—ayes 28, no 1.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. No quorum.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I withdraw the bill.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. DORSEY. I hope that the gentleman will withhold that motion for awhile.

Mr. CUTCHEON. What is the use? We can not pass any bills.

Mr. DORSEY. I want to make an attempt to pass one which I am sure can not be objected to.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Very well; I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask unanimous consent to have one minute to make a statement.

Mr. DORSEY. I will yield to the gentleman, when I get the floor, for that purpose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana is still entitled to the floor.

TENEDORE TEN EYCK.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 5569) to authorize the President to restore Tenedore Ten Eyck to his former rank in the Army, and to place him upon the retired-list of Army officers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to restore to his former rank in the Army, and to place upon the retired-list of Army officers, Tenedore Ten Eyck, late a captain in the Eighteenth United States Infantry: Provided, That the said Tenedore Ten Eyck shall be entitled to no pay and allowances as an Army officer for the time he may have been out of the military service, but shall, from the date of his restoration, be entitled to the pay and allowances pertaining to an officer of his rank on the retired-list: And provided further, That he shall receive no pension from and after the passage of this act.

The question was taken on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. DUNHAM. I move the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The first question is on the third reading of the bill.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 23, no 1.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. No quorum.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I withdraw the bill.

ALFRED J. WORCESTER.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I now yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITCH].

Mr. FITCH. I call up the bill (H. R. 7470) for the relief of Alfred J. Worcester.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to correct the muster-roll of Alfred J. Worcester, late first lieutenant of Company G, Fourteenth Regiment of Illinois Volunteers, according to the terms and provisions of the act to provide for the muster and pay of certain officers and enlisted men of the volunteer forces, approved June 3, 1864; and the said Worcester shall have all the benefits of that act, notwithstanding his commission bears date July 3, 1863, instead of prior to June 20 of that year.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendment:

Strike out all after the word "act," in line 10, and insert "from October 1, 1863."

Mr. FITCH. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GLOVER].

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, in that time I will ask the Clerk to read a passage from the report of General Kelton, which explains the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

From the foregoing it will be seen that although a numerical vacancy occurred for Worcester as a first lieutenant, Company G, Fourteenth Illinois Volunteers, December 22, 1863, and he rendered service and was recognized as of that grade from December 23, 1863, to the date of his discharge, the relief to which it appears he is equitably entitled can only be afforded by special legislation.

Mr. GLOVER. This is simply an act of justice to a most deserving man, approved by a report of a committee of the House—I may say by two reports, for it is reported both from the Committee on War Claims and from the Committee on Military Affairs. The bill has passed the Senate, is recommended by the officers of the Army who have knowledge of its justice, and without further debating it I will ask unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill, being the bill S. No. 2163, of the same title, for the House bill, and ask to put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. KILGORE. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Missouri, if this bill should become a law, whether the beneficiary would be entitled to pay from the time mentioned in the amendment, October, 1863?

Mr. GLOVER. This is not a case of restoration.

Mr. KILGORE. What is it?

Mr. GLOVER. It is a case in which by a technicality this officer did not receive the pay of the rank whose duties he was performing. He has done the work for the Government, and the only question is, shall he not be paid for the services?

Mr. KILGORE. The effect of this bill is to give him pay from that time?

Mr. GLOVER. Certainly. The effect of the bill will be to give him pay which he earned.

Mr. DORSEY (to Mr. GLOVER). You may as well withdraw the bill.

Mr. GLOVER. The gentleman from Texas does not object in the present stage of the bill.

Mr. KILGORE. I do not object.

The question was put on ordering the bill to a third reading, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 18, no 1.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. No quorum.

Mr. FITCH. I withdraw the bill.

There was no objection, and the bill was withdrawn.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I yield the floor to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY].

EDWARD H. LEIB.

Mr. CAREY. I call up for consideration the bill (S. 119) for the relief of Edward H. Leib.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of law regulating appointments in the Army are hereby suspended for the purposes of this act, and only so far as they affect Edward H. Leib, late captain Fifth United States Cavalry and brevet lieutenant-colonel United States Army; and the President of the United States is hereby authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint said Edward H. Leib, late captain Fifth United States Cavalry, to the grade and rank in the Army held at the time of his dismissal; and on account of his disabilities, incurred in the line of duty, the said Leib shall be placed upon the retired-list of the Army without regard to the limit fixed by law: Provided, That the said Leib shall receive no pay except from the date of appointment under this act, nor any pension from and after his full retirement as provided herein.

Mr. CAREY. I yield the floor to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. DORSEY] for two minutes.

Mr. DORSEY. I feel that in the present temper of the House it is useless for me to tell of the gallant services performed by Colonel Leib. He entered the service as a lieutenant at the commencement of the war; he was wounded upon seven different battle-fields; he is to-day sick and suffering nigh unto death, and we ask that he be restored to the Army. I do not expect this bill can pass to-night. I am satisfied that it can not, and therefore will not consume time, but will yield one minute to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, fifty-seven years ago a young man entered the Army of the United States and has been a soldier ever since. His career has been honorable and creditable to him and the country. He was deprived of the rank to which he was entitled, and the Senate has just passed a bill restoring him to his proper rank, which was that of colonel. The House Committee on Military Affairs has reported the same bill favorably and it is now on the Calendar.

He is confined in a hospital in this city; he can not live long, and he wants to be buried in the uniform of a colonel. It will cost the Government scarcely anything, and I ask this House to pass the Senate bill and gratify this laudable desire. I very much fear that Colonel Belger will not be living when the next Congress meets. The bill will give to him that which every soldier desires—that he may be buried in the uniform of the rank to which he was entitled; and I appeal to the gentleman from New York not to oppose this bill. Let the brave old soldier have this his last wish. Can any one refuse this gallant veteran so slight a request?

Mr. DORSEY. I demand the previous question upon the third reading of the Senate bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The question was taken on the third reading of the bill; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 18, no 1.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. DORSEY] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL] to act as tellers.

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Does the ordering of the previous question on the passage of the bill carry it over until to-morrow?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question is ordered on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask that the bill be withdrawn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It can not be withdrawn except by unanimous consent. Is there objection to the withdrawal of the bill? The Chair hears none. The hour of 10 o'clock——

Mr. CUTCHEON. On behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs I wish to return their thanks for the courteous way in which members have treated the committee after its two years of hard work.

Mr. DORSEY. I object to the withdrawal of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska objects to the withdrawal of the bill. The bill, therefore, is before the House; and the hour of 10 o'clock having arrived, the House, under previous order, stands adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock m.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. VOORHEES: Of 118 citizens of Waitsburgh, Wash.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 20, 1889.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to know whether the Journal should not state that the unanimous consent given to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] to call up the appropriation bill yesterday just after 2 o'clock included the laying aside informally of the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the entry in the Journal to which the Senator from Massachusetts calls attention.

The Secretary read as follows:

The President pro tempore announced that the hour of 2 o'clock had arrived, and laid before the Senate the unfinished business at its adjournment yesterday, to wit, the resolution directing the Committee on Privileges and Elections to revise the laws regulating elections of members of Congress; when,

On motion by Mr. ALLISON, and by unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded, etc.

Mr. HOAR. I understood that was the laying aside of the unfinished business and not displacing it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. So the Chair understood. The unfinished business will be announced at 2 o'clock to-day.

Mr. HOAR. That is all right; but the Journal does not state that the unfinished business was laid aside, or that it was laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The uniform practice of the Senate is that when pending and unfinished business is informally laid aside, at the conclusion of the business for which it was laid aside the consideration is resumed, or, if the business be not concluded that day, then at 2 o'clock on the following day the Senate again resumes the consideration of the unfinished business.

Mr. HOAR. I so understood, but I did not know whether that required an entry in the Journal.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does not, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. HOAR. I did not know but that the Journal should show that it was informally laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The expression to which the Senator from Massachusetts refers does not appear in the Journal. If there be no motion to correct or amend, the Journal will stand approved as read.

SPECIAL AGENT BYRNE'S REPORT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the 14th instant, copies of the sworn testimony in regard to alleged frauds and undervaluations in the New York custom-house taken by Special Agent Byrne, and submitted with his report of November 1, 1887; which, on motion of Mr. HOAR, was, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Select Committee to Examine the Condition of the Several Branches of the Civil Service, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. FRYE presented the petition of D. G. Luce and 70 others (31 voters and 40 women), citizens of Easton, Me., praying for the submission to the States of a constitutional prohibitory amendment; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Maine, praying for the conclusion of a treaty which shall provide for the settlement by arbitration of any differences which may arise between the United States and Great Britain; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. PADDOCK presented a petition of 63 citizens of the State of Nebraska, praying for the passage of a Sunday-rest law; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented the petition of Robert Sterrett and 17 others (10 voters and 8 women), citizens of West Lincoln; the petition of A. McWhinney and 24 others (15 voters and 10 women), citizens of Emerald; and the petition of Robert D. Anderson and 98 others (40 voters and 59 women), citizens of DeWitt, all in Nebraska, praying for the submission to the States of a constitutional prohibitory amendment; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE presented the petition of A. C. Hoxie and 36 others (17 voters and 20 women), citizens of East Bay, Mich., praying for the submission to the States of a constitutional prohibitory amendment; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. STEWART. I present a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Nevada, representing that a large number of suits have recently been brought against mining corporations and individual miners in Eastern Nevada for cutting fire-wood for mining and domestic purposes as authorized by law, which suits have greatly embarrassed the business of mining, which is the principal business of that section, and caused great damage and hardship to the people, and asking for the suspension of these suits until a full investigation into the facts may be had.

I ask that the memorial be printed in the RECORD, as it is a memorial of a State Legislature.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial presented by the Senator from Nevada will be printed in the RECORD, if there be no objection, and referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. BLAIR. What is the memorial which is to be printed in the RECORD?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the memorial will be stated.

The Chief Clerk read the indorsement on the memorial.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Assembly concurrent memorial and resolution relative to certain suits for taking fire-wood from certain lands in this State.

We, your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Nevada, most respectfully represent that our State is now suffering great and perhaps irreparable injury from the prosecution in the United States circuit court for this district of a number of suits for alleged trespass in cutting timber from public lands situated therein; and with due and proper respect we take this method of appealing for relief in this behalf.

For many years prior to 1878 our people had exercised and enjoyed the privilege of cutting and using the timber growing upon the mineral lands of this State for building, mining, agricultural, and other domestic purposes. By the act of Congress of June 3, 1878, this privilege was recognized and confirmed, subject to such rules as the Secretary of the Interior might prescribe for the protection of the timber and undergrowth.

In establishing such rules the Secretary has prescribed, among other things, that the brush shall be piled or otherwise disposed of so as to prevent forest fires; that no trees shall be cut that are less than 8 inches in diameter, and that no person shall cut such wood or timber for the purpose of selling it to others. In other words, that every man, no matter what business he is engaged in, must cut his own wood, either in person or by agent.

It is respectfully submitted that these rules are utterly inapplicable to the anomalous condition existing in Nevada. The requirement that the brush shall be piled or disposed of is not an especial subject of complaint, except that it is unnecessary.

The wood growing in these mineral districts is very sparce; it causes but little brush, and such a thing as a forest fire, we believe, has seldom been known in Eastern Nevada.

But the other rules mentioned are peculiarly objectionable. Except in the Sierra Nevada Mountains, on the western border of the State, we are almost destitute of what is commonly known as timber. Our wood, which is thus designated, consists mainly of a dwarfed and scrubby growth of cedar, nut-pine, and mountain mahogany. Owing to the dryness of the climate and the paucity of the soil in the locations where this wood grows, it frequently takes an age for a tree to attain a diameter of 8 inches, and much of it never reaches that size, hence a rule fixing such a minimum in many cases amounts to an inhibition against the cutting of any wood at all, and in a large measure deprives our people of the benefit the statute was intended to confer.

In this State timber of any kind is very scarce; it is inferior in size and quality, straggling in its growth, and is found only upon the mountain ranges in tracts widely separated from each other. Some idea of the insufficiency of our wood supply may be gathered from the fact that at Tuscarora, one of our most important mining towns, almost the only accessible fuel is sage-brush, so small that it is loaded and hauled the same as loose hay in the Eastern States, and thrown into the furnaces with pitchforks, and even such fuel as this is now being brought from a distance of over 20 miles. The rule requiring each person to cut his own wood himself, or by agent, has the effect of almost completely nullifying the statute. Mining is the chief industry of our State, the one upon which every other industry depends, and in the great majority of cases it is utterly impracticable for a miner to go into the mountains and cut his own wood or establish an agency for that purpose. The mining itself is a precarious business, requiring all of his energy, thought, and capital.

The wood grows in regions difficult of access and it has generally to be transported great distances on the backs of mules. It is obvious, therefore, that it is a tedious and expensive process, and to carry on the business at all demands a considerable investment of capital in a mule train and packing apparatus. No miner or agriculturist, save a wealthy one, could comply with these rules, and it would be highly inconvenient for even him to do so. We submit, therefore, that any wood cut and used for the above specified purposes in the State of Nevada is used for domestic purposes within the meaning of the statute. That the decision of Secretary Teller, of date May 25, 1882, in the case of Frank P. Harden, enunciates the correct doctrine upon this point; that it is the only doctrine which can give our people the full benefit of the law, and that the later rule, as established by circular of May 7, 1886, from the Interior Department, should be modified accordingly. But even this rule, unjust and oppressive as it seems to us, is not at present our only grievance. There are now pending in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Nevada no less than eleven suits for alleged trespass upon these timber lands situated in the counties of Eureka and White Pine. These suits involve different corporations and many individuals, and the amount sought to be recovered reaches the enormous aggregate of over $10,000,000.

We are informed and believe that the amount claimed from the Richmond Mining Company, in the town of Eureka, for wood used in reducing ores is greater than the net value of all the ore that has been extracted from its mines. The timber for the cutting of which these actions have been brought, in our opinion, has been used exclusively by actual residents of this State, and in strict accordance with both the letter and spirit of the act of 1878. None of it has been transported from the State, and none of it is fit for such transportation. It is not timber which can be profitably wrought into lumber, and its character may be inferred from the circumstances that, notwithstanding the great demand for lumber which has heretofore existed in the town of Eureka, the second in importance in the State, there has never been, since 1870, a saw-mill located within 75 miles of that place. The timber is absolutely without value, except as an aid to the development of the mineral resources of the districts in which it is found.

We are not aware that any of this wood has been cut or removed, even in violation of the rules established by the Department of the Interior, nor is it so alleged in any of the complaints filed. It is a well-known fact that the land upon which it grows is mineral in character—clearly within the purview of the statute—and if it can not be used under its provisions, it can not be used at all, for there is no practical way by which it can be purchased or the title to the land acquired. The institution of these suits has had the effect of causing nearly every mine in the two counties named to suspend operations; business therein is paralyzed, and the people are menaced with absolute financial ruin. A continuation of the course foreshadowed by these prosecutions threatens the closing of every mine within the borders of our State, and the complete destruction of the Commonwealth. We believe that these suits are purely vexatious in character; that they have been commenced upon the basis of misapprehension, induced by misrepresentation; that the motive which underlies them is a desire to create fees for officials and attorneys. We believe this because of the enormous amounts sued for, which are beyond all reason, being the market value of the wood instead of its stumpage value, which is all that it is worth to the Government. We believe it because the same unjust and rigorous rate of valuation has been established with regard to its redemption, the party from whom it was seized being compelled to give bond according to the full measure of the market value in order to procure its release. As a result, the defendants dare not or can not redeem; the wood remains in the hands of the officer who made the seizure, and the entire business of that community is prostrate.

Our belief that these suits are vexatious is strengthened by the fact that although the business of cutting and disposing of the wood has been carried on openly and notoriously for years, and the right to do so unquestioned, these actions are brought now for the first time, and at the particular season of the year when wood is the most valuable, seeming to be designed for the express purpose of forcing the defendants into compromise and settlement; and, further, by the fact that so many suits were brought at one and the same time, instead of first establishing the right and settling the legal principle through the medium of a single suit; and, finally, by the still further fact that, according to our information and understanding, these actions are similar in character and involve the same principle as those under which large quantities of wood were seized by the United States authorities at Butte City, Mont., in the year 1878, which action was strongly denounced at the time on the floor of the United States Senate, and led to the passage of the act of 1878, above referred to.

If this wood has been unlawfully cut and removed we believe that it has been innocently done, in the exercise of what was thought to be a well-established legal right; and as a minor, although still important, consideration, we beg to suggest that the maintenance of these suits is a great hardship upon the defendants, they being compelled to entirely cease operations, abandon their business, and travel nearly or quite 500 miles to the place of trial. In view of the foregoing we therefore most respectfully, but urgently, ask that all proceedings in these actions be suspended and held in abeyance until a full investigation of the facts may be had; and upon the completion of such investigation, if it be found that any of this wood has been cut in violation of prescribed rules, we ask that these rules may be so modified as to accord with the character of our so-called timber, and the particular conditions existing in Nevada. But if it be impracticable to so modify such rules we ask for some adequate measure of legislative relief at the hands of Congress.

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That copies of the foregoing memorial and these resolutions be transmitted by the governor of this State to the President of the United States, and to each of our Senators and to our Representative in Congress.

Resolved. That we cordially indorse the action of our Senators and Representative in Congress in their efforts to procure for us relief from the vexatious suits complained of in the foregoing memorial.

Approved January 21, 1889.

STATE OF NEVADA, Department of State, ss:

I, John M. Dormer, secretary of state of the State of Nevada, do hereby certify that the annexed is a true, full, and correct copy of the original "Assembly concurrent resolution and memorial relating to certain suits for taking fire-wood from certain lands in this State" (approved January 21, 1889), now on file and of record in this office.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of State at my office, in Carson City, Nev., this 13th day of February, A. D. 1889.

[SEAL.] JOHN M. DORMER, Secretary of State,
By P. B. ELLIS, Deputy.

Mr. STANFORD presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of California, favoring legislation for the exclusion of Chinese immigrants; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BLAIR presented the petition of Robert Weir and 68 others (21 voters and 48 women), citizens of Forestville, Cal., praying for the proposal of a constitutional amendment prohibiting the manufacture, exportation, transportation, and sale of all alcoholic liquors as a beverage; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. EVARTS presented the petition of William H. Winans and 54 other citizens of New York, praying for the passage of a law securing the observance of the Sabbath; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented the memorial of William H. Denney and 36 other citizens of New York, remonstrating against the passage of any bill in regard to the observance of Sunday or any other religious institution or rite; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. SPOONER presented the petition of George Wilcox and 69 others (38 voters and 32 women), citizens of Clinton, Wis., praying for the submission to the States of a constitutional amendment in relation to prohibition; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2661) for the relief of James Caler, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 9159) granting a pension to William A. Taylor;
A bill (H. R. 9113) granting a pension to Frank M. Martin;
A bill (H. R. 2737) granting a pension to Anna Krumpholz; and
A bill (H. R. 6763) granting a pension to John Mann.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3929) to provide for the erection of a public building at the city of New Berne, N. C., reported it with amendments.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 8225) for the relief of William S. Kellington;
A bill (H. R. 4203) granting a pension to the widow of Adam Shrake;
A bill (H. R. 11707) granting a pension to Gertrude Northrop;
A bill (H. R. 12403) granting a pension to Bennett Cooper;
A bill (H. R. 12491) granting a pension to Lucinda Mewman; and
A bill (H. R. 12510) granting a pension to George Hunter.

Mr. SAWYER. I move that Order of Business 2726, being the bill (S. 3935) for the relief of George Hunter, late captain of Company A, Columbia County (Washington Territory) Volunteers, be indefinitely postponed, as I have just reported favorably a similar House bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11184) for the relief of Jessie Isherwood, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. DOLPH. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the petition of Lewis C. Schilling, setting forth that he was wrongfully and illegally imprisoned by the Mexican authorities; that he was wounded and beaten and robbed of his money and goods; that he is and was an American citizen, and now prays Congress for some measures of relief, to submit a report thereon and ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee will be discharged from the further consideration of the petition, and it will lie on the table.

Mr. DOLPH. There are some documents accompanying the report which I do not care to have printed as a part of the report, but which may be filed with the petition.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8276) for the relief of the estate of Benjamin F. Richardson, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 3791) for the allowance of a claim in favor of Milton J. Durham, administrator of Leonard Taylor, deceased, of Boyle County, Kentucky, for stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army, as reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman act; and

A bill (H. R. 7618) for the relief of the Shepard and Morse Lumber Company, of Burlington, Vt.

DISPOSAL OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. PLUMB. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands to report back the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2511) to provide for the disposal of certain public lands of the United States under the provisions of the homestead laws only, and ask that the conference heretofore requested by the House of Representatives upon the bill may be granted. I therefore move that the request of the House for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses be acceded to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Kansas to the fact that the House of Representatives made no request for a conference upon the bill.

Mr. PLUMB. Then I change the form of the motion, and move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House of Representatives and ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PLUMB, Mr. PADDOCK, and Mr. BERRY were appointed.

Mr. WALTHALL. Just as I came into the Senate I understood the Chair to state that there had been no conference asked by the House on Senate bill 2511.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. So the Chair was informed by the clerks.

Mr. WALTHALL. That is a mistake. The conference was asked for and the conferees were appointed by the Speaker of the House. Their names will be found on page 1743 of the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the facts are as stated, the proper order will be made.

Mr. WALTHALL. The facts are shown to be so by the RECORD.

Mr. BERRY. The conferees on the part of the Senate have been appointed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They have been announced.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore subsequently said: The papers in Senate bill 2511, to which amendments were made in the House of Representatives, have been examined, from which it appears that the Clerk of the House did not transmit any announcement that a conference was asked or conferees appointed by that body. The Chair can not take judicial notice of what was done there, and the first order of the Senate therefore will stand.

Mr. PLUMB. Let me inquire, does that mean that the Senate accedes to the request of the House?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no notification to the Senate that the House of Representatives asked for a conference.

Mr. PLUMB. Then I repeat the motion I heretofore made, that the Senate non-concur in the amendments of the House to Senate bill 2511, and request a conference on the part of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered if there be no objection, and the conferees previously announced will stand.

PAY OF STENOGRAPHER.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred a resolution submitted by Mr. PLATT February 19, 1889, reported it without amendment, and the resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the stenographer employed by the Committee on Territories in considering the bill (H. R. 10614) to organize the Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes, be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers properly approved by the chairman of the committee, and that the hearings before the committee be printed for the use of the Senate.

MESSENGER TO COMMITTEE ON THE LIBRARY.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred a resolution reported from the Committee on the Library for the appointment of a messenger to that committee, to report it favorably with an amendment. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate be, and is hereby, directed to appoint a messenger for the Joint Committee on Library, whose services shall be devoted exclusively to the business of said committee, and that the messenger so appointed shall be selected by the said committee.

The amendment reported by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate was to add to the resolution:

The compensation of such messenger shall be at the rate usually paid to messengers of the Senate, and shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

HETTINGER COUNTY LANDS.

Mr. PLUMB. The Committee on Public Lands instruct me to report back with amendments the bill (S. 3751) for the relief of certain settlers in Hettinger County, Dakota. I think I will venture to ask the Senate to consider the bill now. The facts in the case are these: By reason of an error in the survey certain persons settled upon lands and acquired title from the Northern Pacific Railroad Company on the supposition that they belonged to that company. A correction of the survey demonstrated the fact that they were on public lands and not on Northern Pacific lands. The bill provides merely that the Government may convey the lands which they are on, being public lands, to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company in exchange for a similar quantity of lands. It has been recommended by the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length for information.

The bill was read; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The first amendment of the Committee on Public Lands was, in line 10 of section 1, before the word "settlements," to strike out "real" and insert "actual;" and in the same line, after the word "settlements," to insert the words "made prior to Government survey;" so as to make the section read:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and empowered to give relief to such homesteaders or others as have been adversely affected by the Government survey, by an exchange of lands with the Northern Pacific Railroad, section for section, or fraction thereof, as the interests of the parties may appear, so as to admit of the company taking other lands within the indemnity limits in lieu of the tracts covered by actual settlements made prior to Government survey: Provided, That the said railroad company will become a party to said exchange.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add as a new section:

SEC. 3. That nothing contained in this act shall be taken or construed as waiving, releasing, or in any wise affecting any right of the United States to forfeit any lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company by act of Congress to aid in the construction of its line of railroad by reason of the breach of the conditions of any such grant; and any rights to any lands acquired by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company under the provisions of this act shall be taken and held subject to whatever conditions and right of forfeiture now attach to the lands which the Northern Pacific Railroad Company may give in exchange under the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The committee reported to amend the preamble so as to read:

Whereas certain settlers in townships 135 and 136 north, range 97 west, and 134 north, range 96 west, fifth principal meridian, Hettinger County, Dakota, find that by reason of a mistake in the preliminary survey their homestead claims are on lands of the Northern Pacific Railroad rather than on Government sections: Therefore,

The preamble as amended was agreed to.

HOT SPRINGS RESERVATION.

Mr. BERRY. From the Committee on Public Lands I report favorably without amendment the bill (S. 3938) granting the use of certain lands in the Hot Springs reservation, in the State of Arkansas, to the Hot Springs Benevolent Association. It is a very small matter for a very worthy object, and I ask that the bill may be now considered.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PERSONAL EXPLANATIONS.

Mr. PASCO. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief explanation. At the time the vote was taken yesterday on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference on the bill for the return of direct taxes I was absent from the Chamber on important business. Relying upon my general pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL], nothing was said about this special matter, and he inadvertently voted. I merely wish to state that had I been present I should have voted in favor of a reconsideration. The fact that I was absent was overlooked by the Senator from Illinois, and therefore I was not reported as being represented on the question at all.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to say that upon the vote yesterday upon my motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business, failing to remember that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], with whom I have a standing pair, was absent, I voted, when I should have announced the pair.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CALL introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 139) to appoint additional commissioners to the Paris exposition; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. PADDOCK submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STEWART submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the House concurrent resolution relating to Maj. A. M. Miller's translation of Harris's report on irrigation in Egypt; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. STEWART. I submit a resolution to be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Select Committee on the President's Message transmitting the Report of the Pacific Railway Commission be continued until the indebtedness of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the Kansas Pacific Railway Co 1 pany, the Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company, and the Centra Pacific Railroad Company, as the successor to the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California, and the Western Pacific Railroad Company, to which the subsidy bonds of the United States were advanced in aid of the construction of the roads of said companies, shall be adjusted by Congress; and that said committee be instructed to personally examine during the recess of Congress preceding the meeting thereof in December next the roads of said companies and the country through which they pass for the purpose of ascertaining the ability of said companies to pay their indebtedness to the Government, and how the indebtedness of said companies can be so adjusted and paid as to advance the development of the country through which said roads pass and afford to the inhabitants thereof reasonable fares and freights. And the expenses of such examination shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. GORMAN. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over and be printed.

Mr. GORMAN subsequently said: I desire to withdraw the objection I made to the resolution offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] for reference to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The objection is withdrawn, and the resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

DISTRICT JURORS.

Mr. HARRIS submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (S. 3640) to amend the laws relating to the selection and service of jurors in the supreme court of the District Columbia, the Committee on Enrolled Bills is hereby authorized and directed to strike out the word "fifty-two," where it occurs in the first line of section 8, and substitute therefor the word "sixty-two."

PUBLIC PRINTING-OFFICE BUILDING.

Mr. BLAIR submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be directed to inquire into the condition of the Public Printing-Office building and to report to the Senate what immediate repairs and improvements are in their opinion necessary and practicable to insure the safety and health of the employés and the preservation of the public property; also, to report an estimate of the expenditure required, if any, for the purpose mentioned.

CONGRESSIONAL ELECTIONS.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to have the resolution reported by me yesterday from the Committee on Privileges and Elections laid before the Senate. I suppose when it is laid before the Senate it will be referred instantly to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not understand that the resolution reported by the Senator from Massachusetts occupies any other position than that of the report of a committee. It is on the Calendar.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of that resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator withhold his motion until the morning business is concluded?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

JOHN S. M'ELWEE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution offered by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], coming over from a previous day.

The resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. HALE was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, directed to inform the Senate whether the sugar division in the appraisers' office in the New York custom-house is now in charge of John S. McElwee; and to further inform the Senate whether charges have lately been made against said McElwee affecting his personal character and conduct, and whether said charges have been investigated by Special Agent George C. Tichenor, and if such be the case to send to the Senate copies of said charges and of the testimony taken upon them, and the report of Special Agent Tichenor; and also to inform the Senate whether said McElwee has been before dismissed from the Treasury Department upon charges made against him affecting his personal character.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

CONGRESSIONAL ELECTIONS.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

Mr. VEST. Is the morning business closed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would inquire if there be further morning business?

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask the Senate to take up the joint resolution I reported yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair feels impelled, under the notice given by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] yesterday, having charge of the appropriation bill, if there be no further morning business, to recognize the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator from Maine will yield for me to ask the Senate to take up the resolution reported yesterday from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to go instantly to the Committee on Contingent Expenses without debate.

Mr. HALE. If it is simply a question of reference, of course I have no objection.

Mr. GORMAN. I desire to say to the Senators from Massachusetts and Maine that it is impossible to have an understanding that the resolution shall be referred without debate.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to inquire of the Chair if when the resolution is taken up it does not go instantly, under the rules, to the committee without further action?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that the resolution taken up would be open to debate.

Mr. HOAR. Without a reference? I supposed that the Chair had held otherwise a great many times in similar cases.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has always held, when no objection was made, that resolutions of that kind should be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. The Chair does not, however, understand that that precludes debate upon the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator from Maryland will allow the matter to be debated when it comes back from that committee and not now. I assure him that it shall have full opportunity for debate. I merely wish to have the committee make the formal consideration required by the rules.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GORMAN. I object to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. Then I rise to further morning business. I will introduce the resolution, if I may be permitted to withdraw it, without the part which provides for the expenditure, and I ask that it be treated as regular morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution can not be withdrawn, except by unanimous consent, without being taken up for consideration.

Mr. HALE. I will move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I rise to morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be authorized to inquire whether in any State the free and lawful expression of the will of the people in the election of members of the Fifty-first Congress and ascertaining the result thereof, or in the election of members of State Legislatures who have elected or are to elect Senators of the United States who may claim seats during said Congress, and ascertaining the result thereof, or in the choice of electors of President and Vice-President of the United States in 1888 and declaring the result thereof, has been prevented by violence, intimidation, fraud, or other crime.

Also, whether the laws governing such elections in any States have been so framed or administered as to accomplish or permit the defeat of the will of the people in such elections.

Also, to inquire into the facts of the recent election in the State of Louisiana, held on the 17th day of April, 1888, at which there was chosen a Legislature which has since elected two United States Senators.

And said committee shall also inquire whether there were in connection with the aforesaid election illegalities, frauds, false canvasses, and false returns so extensive and so systematic in their character as to show that there existed on the part of the various State election officers a deliberate plan to apparently carry said elections without regard to the votes actually cast, and to choose a governor and other State officers and a State Legislature by such illegal, false, and fraudulent means, and if so, whether said Legislature was actually and duly elected by the people of Louisiana or was in fact substantially the creation solely of the returning and canvassing officers, and whether said State of Louisiana has a republican form of government, including a Legislature entitled to choose United States Senators and to provide methods for the appointment of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States.

Mr. HARRIS. Is that resolution just offered at this time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is just offered.

Mr. HOAR. Let it go over.

Mr. HARRIS. Let it go over and be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over and be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri rise to morning business?

Mr. VEST. No, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I move to proceed to the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. VEST. I ask the Senator from Iowa to give way in order that I may call up a bridge bill, which is merely a formal matter and will lead to no debate, and it is absolutely necessary.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that it is the same bill of which I spoke to him this morning, and which he promised to extend his courtesy for the consideration of, if the Senate would agree, upon the assurance that there would be no debate.

Mr. ALLISON. Then after the appropriation bill is taken up I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business, the Calendar under Rule VIII being in order, the Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill

(H. R. 12008) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. Now, I ask the Senator from Iowa to allow me to call up the bridge bill. It is merely a formal one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield?

Mr. ALLISON. I yield for that purpose only.

KENTUCKY RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. VEST. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3921) to authorize the Kentucky Union Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Kentucky River.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendments will be acted upon as they are reached in the text of the bill.

The first amendment was to add to section 1:

But the rate of tolls charged by said company for the passage of wagons and vehicles shall first be approved by the Secretary of War, and no tolls shall be collected unless the amount thereof is so approved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 9, after the word "be," to add "commenced or;" so as to read:

That any bridge authorized to be constructed under this act shall be built and located under and subject to such regulations for the security of navigation of said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe, and to secure that object the said company or corporation shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, a design and drawing of the bridge and a map of the location thereof; and until the said plan and location of the bridge are approved by the Secretary of War the bridge shall not be commenced or built.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 12, after the word "War," to insert:

And all the expense of said change shall be paid by the parties owning or controlling such bridge or bridges.

So as to read:

And should any change be made in the plan of said bridge during the progress of construction, such change shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War; and all the expense of said change shall be paid by the parties owning or controlling such bridge or bridges.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the Kentucky Union Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Kentucky River and its tributaries."

BILLS BECOME LAWS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had this day approved and signed the act (S. 1305) to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua.

The message also announced that the bill (S. 2460) granting arrears of pension to Theodore Rauthe, having been presented to the President of the United States on the 7th instant and not having been returned by him to the House of Congress in which it originated within the ten days prescribed by the Constitution, had become a law without his signature.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 139) to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by act of Congress approved August 5, 1861.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12008) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 112, after line 9, to insert:

Expenses of inaugural ceremonies: To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay the necessary expenses of the inaugural ceremonies of the President and Vice-President of the United States, March 4, 1889, incurred by order of the Senate, including pay for forty extra Capitol police for three days, at $3 per day each, $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 113, after line 8, to insert:

Works of art: For the purchase of works of art, and the necessary cleaning and repairing thereof, under the direction of the Joint Committee on the Library, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Public printing and binding," on page 14, line 1, after the words "two million," to strike out "and thirteen thousand" and insert "three hundred and thirty-six thousand two hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

PUBLIC PRINTING AND BINDING.

For the public printing, for the public binding, and for paper for the public printing, including the cost of printing the debates and proceedings of Congress in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and for lithographing, mapping, and engraving for both Houses of Congress, the Supreme Court of the United States, the supreme court of the District of Columbia, the Court of Claims, the Library of Congress, the Executive Office, and the Departments, including salaries or compensation of all necessary clerks and employés, for labor (by the day, piece, or contract), and for all the necessary materials which may be needed in the prosecution of the work, $2,336,200; and from the said sum hereby appropriated printing and binding shall be done by the Public Printer to the amounts following, respectively, namely, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 114, line 7, after the word "debates," to strike out "eight hundred and two thousand" and insert "one million;" so as to read:

For printing and binding for Congress, including the proceedings and debates, $1,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 114, line 24, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty;" so as to read:

For the State Department, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 115, after the words "one hundred and," to strike out "fifty thousand" and insert "fifty-five thousand two hundred;" and in line 8, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "ten" and insert "twelve;" so as to make the clause read:

For the War Department, $155,200 (of which sum $12,000 shall be for the catalogue of the library of the Surgeon-General's Office), and not exceeding $12,000 for carrying into effect the appropriations for the Signal Service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 115, line 15, before the word "thousand," to strike out "forty" and insert "forty-five;" so as to make the clause read:

For the Interior Department, including the Civil Service Commission, $345,000, including not exceeding $10,000 for rebinding tract-books for the General Land Office.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 115, line 21, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "twelve;" so as to make the clause read:

For the National Museum: For printing labels and blanks for the use of the National Museum and for the "bulletins" and annual volumes of the "proceedings" of the Museum, $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for printing "for the United States Geological Survey," on page 116, to insert:

For engraving the geographical maps of the United States, $45,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 116, line 7, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seven" and insert "ten;" so as to read:

For the Department of Justice, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 116, line 9, after the word "hundred," to insert "and fifty;" so as to read:

For the Post-Office Department, $250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 116, line 11, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty" and insert "forty;" so as to make the clause read:

For the Agricultural Department, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 10, on page 117, to insert as a new section:

SEC. 2. That in order to provide additional accommodations for the Post-Office Department and other Departments of the Government, including accommodations for the city post-office, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Postmaster-General, and the Secretary of the Interior, acting as a board, be, and they are hereby, empowered and instructed to acquire, as hereinafter provided, the several parcels of real estate embodied in square numbered 406 of the city of Washington, bounded by F street on the north, E street on the south, Eighth street on the east, and Ninth street on the west; and for the purpose of acquiring said square, or any part thereof, a sum sufficient to pay the cost thereof is hereby appropriated; and when said property shall be acquired said board may direct that Eighth street, between E street and F street, northwest, shall be closed and used for the aforesaid purposes.

That for the purpose of acquiring said real estate the said board may purchase the same, or any part thereof, from the owner or owners; and if the said board shall be unable so to purchase the same, or any part or parts thereof, at a price that, in their opinion, is reasonable, they may, by petition in writing, apply to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, in general term, setting forth a description of the property they have been unable to purchase, and which they desire to obtain for the public purposes aforesaid, with the names of the owners or claimants of the title thereto, and of any incumbrances thereon, so far as the same may be known to them, and praying that the court will cause the same to be condemned and appropriated to the public use.

Thereupon the court shall cause public notice to be given of such application by a publication three weeks successively in two daily newspapers published in the city of Washington, stating the substance of said application, and notifying all persons having any interest or claim in or to the property so mentioned to appear before said court on a day named and become parties to the proceeding, which publication, so made as aforesaid, shall be deemed due notice to all persons having any interest in or claim to such property. And thereupon said court shall appoint five disinterested residents of the District of Columbia to be appraisers of the value of such property and pieces of property, respectively. The said appraisers shall be sworn to a just and impartial performance of their duty; and said appraisers having been so appointed shall give notice to all persons interested in or having claims to any of such property of a time and place of hearing, by publication in two daily newspapers published in the city of Washington for six successive days, and thereupon the said appraisers shall proceed to view the said respective parcels of property and hear the representatives of the United States and the said persons in interest and claimants, and shall thereupon estimate and appraise the true and just value of such pieces of property, respectively, and report their findings thereon to the court. Upon the filing of such report the said court may hear the representatives of the United States and any parties in interest or claimants and proceed to confirm, modify, or set aside such report and appoint new appraisers as shall appear to said court to be just, and make such further orders in the premises as shall effectuate the purposes of this appropriation. And when any such report shall have been finally confirmed by said court the United States shall, upon the payment of the sums awarded by said court as the proper and just price thereof, to the parties found by said court to be entitled thereto, be deemed seized and possessed of said property for the purposes herein mentioned. If it shall appear to said court that any person having an interest in or any claim to any such parcel of such property can not be found or is unknown, or is an insane person or an idiot, or is a married woman or an infant, or is under any disability, the said court may appoint guardians and trustees for such persons, and make all such orders in the premises as shall be just for the protection of all rights, and may order that the sum of money to be paid in respect of any such parcel of property shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of such persons so interested in or having a claim upon such property, in trust for the person legally entitled thereto. Any such sum of money so deposited may be paid out of the Treasury at any time upon the order of said court to any person deemed by the court entitled thereto upon the proper application to said court for such purpose. And in respect of any such sums of money so deposited the said court shall have all the powers of a court of equity in the administration of trust funds.

Mr. HALE. I suggest to the Senator in charge of the bill, on page 117, line 18, where the word "embodied" occurs, that a better word would be "included."

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to either word.

Mr. HALE. I move simply to strike out "embodied."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be agreed to if there be no objection.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 120, to insert as section 3 the following:

SEC. 3. That in order to provide additional accommodations for the Government Printing Office, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Architect of the Capitol Extension, acting as a board, be, and they are hereby, empowered and instructed to acquire, as hereinafter provided, the several parcels of real estate embodied in square No. 624 of the city of Washington, lying east of a 20-foot alley running from G street to H street, and bounded by H street on the north, G street on the south, North Capitol street on the east, and said named 20-foot alley on the west; said parcels being divided east and west by Jackson alley, and intersected in part by a 14-foot alley running from G street to Jackson alley; said real estate now in part being occupied by the Government Printing Office. And for the purpose of acquiring said square, or any part thereof, a sum sufficient to pay the cost thereof is hereby appropriated. And when said real estate shall be acquired, said board may direct that the 14-foot alley, running from G street to Jackson alley, shall be closed and used for the aforesaid purposes.

That for the purpose of acquiring said real estate the said board may purchase the same, or any part thereof, from the owner or owners; and if the said board shall be unable so to purchase the same, or any part or parts thereof, at a price that, in their opinion, is reasonable, they may take proceedings for the condemnation thereof in the manner provided for in section 2 of this act.

Mr. HALE. On page 121, line 1, I move to strike out the word "embodied."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That change will be made if there be no objection.

Mr. VEST. I want to make an inquiry before the amendment is agreed to. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if this amendment comes from any standing committee of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. No standing committee except the Committee on Appropriations that reported it.

Mr. VEST. I raise the point of order on it, and I want to state it now.

Mr. ALLISON. To which amendment does the Senator refer?

Mr. VEST. Is it in the general Book of Estimates?

Mr. ALLISON. To what section does the Senator refer?

Mr. VEST. The last section, in regard to the purchase of ground for the Printing Office.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think it is in the Book of Estimates.

Mr. VEST. Is it in the report of the Public Printer or asked for by any officer?

Mr. ALLISON. I think the Public Printer asked for it in his report.

Mr. VEST. Does it come from the head of any Department?

Mr. ALLISON. It was inserted last year in this appropriation bill, and is one of the most necessary and important things in this bill.

Mr. VEST. I simply have to say that this amendment ought to have been submitted to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. That is the committee of this body which should have considered this matter and passed upon it. The preceding amendment, which is a very important one, providing for a city post-office, has come from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, I think, and we have passed it through the Senate twice, and yet it has been given up in each instance in conference by the conferees of the Senate.

Now, we have an amendment here which does not come from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds or from any other standing committee, which is not in the Book of Estimates, not recommended by the head of a Department, and I raise the point of order upon it. I have not had time to examine it thoroughly, but I am informed it involves an expenditure for ground alone of more than $180,000 with a necessary expenditure afterwards of over $500,000 for the addition to the Printing Office which is contemplated by the amendment, making altogether in the neighborhood, I am safe in saying from my experience in this District in constructing public buildings, an expenditure of from $700,000 to $1,000,000 without having passed through the committee of this body which is presumed to know its duty and discharge it.

I raise the point of order.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is not open to debate, but by unanimous consent the Senator from Maryland may proceed.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, if there be no objection to my proceeding, in response to the Senator's suggestion of the point of order I will state that my recollection is very clear that this amendment was recommended and submitted at the last session by the Committee on Printing precisely as the amendment in relation to the post-office, which is contained in this bill, was recommended by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; and again this session, as I remember. Therefore, I do not think the point of order is well taken. I think it is only during this session that it was reported by the committee. I do not think I can be mistaken about it.

In addition to that, I want to say to the Senator from Missouri that in no case, at no time since the establishment of the office of Public Printer, has the question of the enlargement of that building, of the additional facilities that have been required from time to time, ever come from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, but it has been by law in special charge of the Joint Committee on Printing. There can be no question as to the necessity of this appropriation. It is a case that appeals to every Senator who has examined the matter. It is a question of the lives and health of the poor people who are employed in that establishment.

We have reported upon it year after year, and the Public Printer has drawn attention to it, and in his very last report is this picture drawn of the condition of that building, which is not overdrawn:

The condition of the H street wing of the office, as to its capacity to carry the weight to which it is subjected in its present crowded condition, has been a source of daily anxiety during the past year, and I have frequently felt impelled to order the discontinuance of labor and the removal of work awaiting completion, in order to relieve the floor from the dangerous accumulation of weight upon it, which threatened the lives of the employés and the safety of the property under my charge.

That building was purchased by the Government from a private citizen, it having been erected many years ago, and to-day it is in the condition which the Public Printer describes in that paragraph of his report. Not only is there danger from the building falling and burying the poor people who are employed therein, but it is anything but fireproof. It is liable to be destroyed by fire at any time, and a fire in that section of the building would stop all the public printing of this Government the moment it took place, for there is but one engine with one motive power to run all that great machinery.

But more than that, experts who have examined it and humane people who have looked at it all declare that if it was a private establishment conducted by any citizen of the District of Columbia he ought to be presented or indicted by the grand jury for maintaining such a nuisance and keeping such a dangerous structure. I have been in it in the performance of my duty as a member of the Committee on Printing when it was impossible for the workmen to remain engaged in the work one hour at a time without being overcome with the foul gases and heat. It is a disgrace to the Government that we should compel these poor people to labor eight or ten hours a day doing the work that is absolutely necessary for the transaction of the business of the Government in such an unventilated building, one so dangerously constructed, and I submit to my friend from Missouri that it ought not to be a question of consideration of this upon a matter which is so vital and which appeals to us from every instinct of humanity.

I again repeat that it is a subject that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have never had charge of. It belongs properly and has always belonged to the Joint Committee on Printing.

I trust that the Senate will retain the provision.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I fail to appreciate the argument made by the Senator from Maryland, after reading this amendment. What he has said goes to the present dangerous condition of the Public Printing Office, and he has drawn a very pathetic picture, and doubtless a just one, of the want of accommodations there and the absolute danger, both from fire and the falling of the building, to employés, but there is nothing in this amendment to repair that building. I agree with him that if it is in a condition such as is stated by the Public Printer in his report, it is a scandal, a shame, a disgrace to this Government, and there ought to be a new building provided; and if a bill is introduced by the Senator from Maryland for that purpose I will undertake, though not the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, but a member of that committee, to say that it shall be reported back promptly, and I have no doubt it will be promptly passed by the Senate.

What I objected to was the purchase of an additional piece of ground without remedying the very danger of which the Senator from Maryland has spoken. I will not insist on the point of order, because I do not choose to put myself in the attitude of being in the slightest degree responsible for anything that may happen there after this statement; but I do say that this matter ought to have been considered by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and I heard nothing heretofore and knew nothing of the facts which have been stated here to-day by the Senator from Maryland.

There are a great many things about the Public Printing Office which I do not approve; a great many abuses existing there; but I have long since given up any Utopian ideas of reforming the abuses that exist in this District, and I propose to avoid, except when called upon by direct duty, the cleansing of the Augean stables around the seat of Government. But it is an outrage if that state of things exists and that building is as dangerous as is stated in the Printer's report. It is an outrage to permit it to exist one session of Congress, but by this amendment it is proposed to have it continued and to purchase more ground simply to put an addition to that very dangerous and insecure structure.

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. VEST. Let me read the amendment and see if I am mistaken:

That in order to provide additional accommodations for the Government Printing Office, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Architect of the Capitol Extension, acting as a board, be, and they are hereby, empowered and instructed to acquire, as hereinafter provided, the several parcels of real estate, etc.

Mr. GORMAN. I hope the Senator from Missouri will allow me to explain, for evidently he has not given the question any personal examination. The whole machinery of the Government Printing Office is propelled by one engine located in the dangerous part of the building which I have described and to which I have called attention. It is not possible to stop that machinery without stopping all the printing for the Government. There is, therefore, no remedy whatever except to acquire the adjacent ground and put up a new building with another engine in it, and then tear down and remove the old structure or repair it. It is the only possible way it can be done. The Committee on Printing have spent days in looking at it. I have gone over the ground carefully myself. The present building is surrounded with rumshops, dives of all sorts and descriptions, and stables, and the Senator from Missouri, if he would go to the Government Printing Office and look at it and examine it and see the condition these poor people are in and compelled to be in, not by any fault of theirs except their poverty, he would be the first to defend it and do what I tried to do at the last session, and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations as well as of Printing ought to see that this great wrong is righted at once. It is not the fault of the Senate. It is the first time the whole statement has been made here, and I say now the Senate ought never to submit to this proposition being eliminated from this bill. There is every reason why it should be attended to. I trust it will be, and I trust it will have the hearty support of my friend from Missouri.

Mr. VEST. The fact still remains that this report ought to have been submitted to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, in order that the facts which have been stated here should be met with the proper remedy. Now, the Senator states that this building can not be repaired—that is to say, this engine can not be discontinued without stopping the entire printing of the Government. That is a fact about which I have no personal knowledge, but I do say that a new building ought to be constructed at once, and that this state of things which is disgraceful to the Government and which seems to have been in existence for some months, if not years, should have been remedied long ago by a bill to erect an addition to the Printing Office which is clear and free from the dangers that have been stated here to-day.

I withdraw the point of order, but I want to say now that whenever a bill for the purpose comes to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds we will act upon it promptly, for if one-third of what the Senator from Maryland says is true, it is a scandal to the Government.

Mr. ALLISON. Before the Senate passes on this section, I desire to say a word in response to the suggestions made by the Senator from Missouri. I want to say to him and to the Senate that there was no disposition in the Committee on Appropriations to aggrandize power or to draw into that committee appropriations that are not properly and fairly considered by the proper committees of this body; but it so happens that last year the Committee on Printing, which I think is the committee having proper jurisdiction of everything relating to public printing, presented this amendment to the Committee on Appropriations, not only by referring it to that committee, but by appearing and explaining in detail what has been so well stated to-day by the Senator from Maryland, as to the necessities of the Public Printing Office, and we inserted in the sundry civil bill of last year this identical amendment. We were, however, compelled to give up the amendment in conference, as we were compelled to give up the amendment respecting the post-office provision of that bill, simply because the House of Representatives would not agree to it. We could not convince the conferees on the part of the House of the importance of the amendment. Now, seeing this condition of things and the matter appearing to the Committee on Appropriations to be urgent, we believed it to be our duty to call the attention of the Senate to the necessity of the acquisition of this property in order that a suitable building might be prepared to enable the Public Printer, without stopping the Government work, to repair the old building, which is in the condition stated in the report read by the Senator from Maryland.

I am very glad that the Senator from Missouri has made his suggestion, because it will cause the Appropriations Committee to be especially careful to not infringe upon the prerogatives or rights of other great committees of this body. We do not desire and have not in the past desired to take from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds any of the proper considerations that pertain to that committee as respects public buildings. We have never put upon these bills and do not propose to put upon them appropriations for new structures without those appropriations having first been considered by the proper committees of this body, and I think if the Senator from Missouri will look at the records of the past as respects our Committee on Appropriations he will see that we have with scrupulous care adhered to our proper relations to other committees of this body.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I concur heartily and entirely with what has been said by my colleague upon the Printing Committee, the Senator from Maryland, and I do reproach myself somewhat that I have not been more active in this matter; but I have had such bad success in any matter connected with the Printing Office that I have subsided. Four years ago we obtained the passage by Congress of an amendment, I think in the sundry civil bill, that authorized the expenditure of seven to eight thousand dollars for putting into the Printing Office one or the other kind of automatic fire-extinguishers. These fire-extinguishers are very largely in use by the large manufacturers of the country. Water pipes run through the rooms near the ceiling at intervals. They have a sprinkler, as they call it, through which the water is allowed to flow freely, distributing a shower of water over a circle, perhaps 30 feet in diameter. This sprinkler can be set in operation by a heat of any degree that may be chosen, say 140 degrees, and a fusible alloy locks the plugs, and if a fire breaks out a heat of 140 degrees melts the fusible alloy, and the sprinkler goes to work instantly whenever the heat rises to that.

The use of these automatic spinklers in some of the great factories has proved invaluable. There never has been a large fire where the best of these sprinklers have been used. We supposed that by putting in an item of $7,500, if that was it, for these sprinklers, it would be virtually a command to the Public Printer to do the work. I have not examined the extent to which he did do it, but for a long time he did nothing, absolutely nothing, notwithstanding the danger, and then he put in something or other over a small portion of the building.

There is a million dollars' worth of combustible property there with insufficient protection against fire. Congress did what it could in the matter, but the Public Printer, like some other Government officers—and I am not bringing that in question—assumed a special discretion over the matter after Congress had expressed its opinion.

But that is not the pending question. I said I concurred with my colleague of the Committee on Printing. The present condition of the rooms occupied by compositors and binders is discreditable to the Government. The ceilings are too low; the operatives are very much crowded there, and it is high time that we put up a safer and more wholesome building, if not more than one.

Mr. BLAIR. One gets the impression from listening to this debate that that old trap down there is very much like the Hartford hotel, and that at any time we are liable to have fastened upon us the responsibility, after due notice, of an explosion demolishing that structure and destroying the lives and health of those who are employed there.

The mere interruption of the public business is the difficulty which has been suggested, but it strikes me that we may possibly find a more serious responsibility upon the Senate and the other House now that these facts are brought to our attention if we fail in this bill immediately to make provision for such repairs—immediate and necessary repairs—and the strengthening of the structure, or the improvement of the machinery, or the immediate surroundings of that machinery, the engine, etc., as can be made with a view to immediate safety during the interim wherein even to buy this land the Public Printing Office must be utilized. It has to be occupied and kept going just as a fort is defended and kept ready for a siege, because the public business and the interests of the country require that to be done. These people must stay there, although it may be a more dangerous point on the whole than Fort Sumter in Charleston Harbor was during the siege prior to the breaking out of the war.

I suggest that this difficulty, if it be a difficulty, between the suggestions of the Senator from Maryland and the amendment pending and the Senator from Missouri might be obviated by an amendment to the pending provision by which five, or ten, or twenty thousand dollars, as the case may be, shall be appropriated for immediate and necessary and possible repairs. I suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether his knowledge of how to do it may not be utilized by his proposing right here and now an addition to this amendment which the committee have reported, a slight additional appropriation to keep this old trap safe to live in or to die in, at least safe to die in, in the meanwhile.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say, in response to the suggestion made by the Senator from New Hampshire, that the Committee on Appropriations have no information that would justify them in suggesting any specific sum. If the Committee on Printing or the Architect of the Capitol will show us any way whereby this building can be temporarily patched up, I shall be willing as one member of the Appropriations Committee to appropriate a sufficient sum for that purpose.

Mr. GORMAN. We did make an appropriation last year covering that, and so far as temporary repairs are concerned all has been done by the Architect of the Capitol that it is possible for him to do.

Mr. BLAIR. Am I to understand, that notwithstanding what has been said here, the Government Printing Office is a safe and proper place for human beings to be employed in?

Mr. GORMAN. Not at all.

Mr. BLAIR. Do I understand that everything has been done to make it as safe for present occupancy as can be done?

Mr. GORMAN. I think so.

Mr. BLAIR. Then there is no immediate danger to life?

Mr. GORMAN. I think there is yet.

Mr. BLAIR. Do I understand that the engine is in danger of blowing up any more than it used to be? Is it a safe, strong, and proper engine to be employed about the work and not specially liable to explosion?

Mr. GORMAN. The engine I spoke of is within the walls of the building itself. I understand from the Architect that no further improvements can be made upon the structure as it now stands.

Mr. BLAIR. Does the Architect report this building as safe to be occupied at the present time?

Mr. GORMAN. He does not.

Mr. BLAIR. I fail to be convinced that the building can not be made safer. You can take a dying, struggling, rotting railroad bridge, and make it safe by proper supports and appendages until a new one can be erected instead of it and be ready for occupancy; and I do not believe that the Architect has made a proper report or done his full duty unless he has gone to the limit of expenditure allowed. If that building is unsafe for occupancy, if it must be abandoned until we have to find more money to make it safe, it is not the right thing that these fifteen or sixteen hundred people there are to be put day and night going in there and coming out with their lives at stake in the rendition of the service which they give for the payment of the pittance we allow them; and I respectfully ask that those charged with this matter take great care to clear their consciences, as we are informed of the existing danger.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think from the language of the Senator from New Hampshire he supposes that I am chairman of the Committee on Printing. The chairman, the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] is not now in his place.

I have not supposed that there was any more than the ordinary risk, the average risk, in that building from the steam engine. I supposed it to be a good engine and the boiler to be good, and I supposed that the engineer and fireman are temperate and faithful men. Nor do I think the building is actually liable to fall down at any day unless the Public Printer should carelessly permit too great an accumulation of weight somewhere. Fire escapes, I think, have been sufficiently provided so that the employés can get out. But the building is unwholesome, and, as I said, the ceilings are too low and the accommodations are not sufficient. It is an old building which we ought not to continue.

Mr. BLAIR. I certainly intended no reflection upon anybody.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not think there was any reflection.

Mr. BLAIR. I am as much to blame as any other Senator. We have a cage of death right under our own personal observation, for there is no Senator here who does not occasionally visit that building, I suppose.

I understood it to be emphatically stated in response to my inquiry, by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], just now that the Architect, notwithstanding his expenditures, still says the building is unsafe. It is uncertain whether he says it has been made as safe as money can make it. That is the point I am dwelling upon. Now, suppose we buy the land proposed; we erect a new Public Printing Office. We know very well that is a process of three, four, or five years; and meanwhile this building must answer the purpose, or be made to answer the purpose, for the public work must go on.

After what has been said here to excite attention and arouse suspicion and apprehension on the part of those obliged to do this work as well as on the part of those who may feel some responsibility in regard to these employés, their health and their lives, it does seem to me that immediate provision should be made for the safety of the building to be sure that the machinery, the engine, and everything else is as safe as it can be made to be meanwhile.

The matter of ventilation is not so difficult a thing for a man who knows anything of the laws of atmosphere or atmospheric circulation. If the men and women are working in dens and dungeons there, holes can be cut and apertures can be opened and machinery introduced to create a circulation of air, as we do here in this building, as we do in this interior box, which would be simply a Black Hole of Calcutta but for some of the improvements which we have introduced here. Something of that kind can be done to save the lives of these young consumptives or these old consumptives down there, who have become such by reason of the kind of place we compel them to work in, during the next four or five years, when they must stay and work, or their successors after they have gone to the cemetery.

I think an investigation could be made within a day by the Architect of the Capitol, which would result in an estimate so that, not upon this bill, but upon the deficiency bill, or some proper bill, there could be provisions made to have something done forthwith, so that we might not at least look upon ourselves as accessories to the murder of these people if they go up in an explosion.

Mr. VEST. I want to suggest to the chairman of the committee, on page 121, line 19, to strike out the word "take" and insert "institute legal." I do not like that expression as a lawyer. At the same time it would be better to say "they may institute legal proceedings." I propose, in line 19, on page 121, to strike out the word "take" and insert "institute legal;" so as to say:

At a price that, in their opinion, is reasonable, they may institute legal proceedings for the condemnation thereof in the manner provided for in section 2 of this act.

Mr. ALLISON. I see the point of the Senator. I rather think the word "take" is a better word, because it refers back to the provision of section 2, which is a long provision, in respect to these proceedings, some of which are legal and some of which may not be absolutely in a technical sense legal proceedings. I will say to the Senator that this matter was submitted last year to the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary for the legal phraseology, and my recollection now is that that particular word was substituted by the chairman for some other word.

Mr. VEST. I beg the Senator's pardon. I had something to do with that matter, because I drew part of this clause here. That is the very reason I suggest the amendment. The word "take" contemplates an action by the commissioners in the way of purchase which does not apply. It is not a legal term as to condemnation proceedings. The latter part of the amendment provides—

That for the purpose of acquiring said real estate the said board may purchase the same, or any part thereof, from the owner or owners; and if the said board shall be unable so to purchase the same—

Repeating the language that is used in the post-office amendment. Then we come to the coercive part, where they are not able to buy at a reasonable sum, then the language ought to be in my judgment that they "may institute legal proceedings." They do not take these proceedings themselves.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to the phraseology. I only hope it will stand until the amendment is finally disposed of in the Senate. I hope no other lawyer on the Judiciary Committee will suggest other words.

Mr. VEST. It is not a matter of any vital importance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULLOM in the chair). The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 19, page 121, after the word "may," it is proposed to strike out "take" and insert the words "institute egal;" so as to read:

1 They may institute legal proceedings for the condemnation thereof, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to offer an amendment, and I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to offer it. It is to add an independent section to this bill—the same provision that was inserted by the unanimous vote of the Senate the other day on another bill, which may not reach final action. I should like to have it adopted here. My amendment is:

SEC. 4. That any company authorized by law to run cars propelled by horses within the District of Columbia is hereby authorized to substitute for horses electric power by storage or independent electrical batteries or under-ground wire, or by under-ground cables moved by steam power, on the whole or any portion of its roadway, the same to be done under the direction and with the approval of the commissioners of the District of Columbia, with authority to purchase and use any terminal grounds and facilities necessary for the purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to receiving this amendment? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to it.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator showed me that amendment the other day and I was a little doubtful about the phraseology of it. I wish he would add to that "not with overhead wires."

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to that, because the language of the amendment would not permit overhead wires in any case. It only authorizes these companies to take one of the different modes of power named, either the independent battery, which is the storage battery, or the cable-road, or the electric wire with under-ground cables.

Mr. DAWES. I am inclined to think the Senator is right, but it may be possible to describe an independent battery as one which carries its power with an overhead wire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts will please repeat his amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. The independent battery means where the battery is in the car.

Mr. DAWES. I know that is what the Senator means and what I mean, but I do not know what somebody else may think it means, and, therefore, after the words "independent electric batteries," I move to insert "not by overhead wires."

Mr. SHERMAN. That is all right.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to this amendment, as the Senator from Ohio seems to think it an important amendment. I shall simply feel constrained hereafter to object to any amendments that may be offered of this character.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, of course I do not believe that this is the proper place for such an amendment, and while I believe that it will probably be very beneficial to change horse-railroad power for electricity or cable, still I think it is but fair in considering this question and giving such privilege that you shall attach to it a proviso that each of these companies shall pay to the District of Columbia 4 per cent. on the gross receipts of its road. That is a provision that we have inserted in the bill that passed through the Senate last session for a cable road. It is the same provision that is in the Eckington road charter, which is propelled by electricity, as I understand.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Maryland will allow me, I think that provision has been incorporated into every charter that has been granted by this Congress, but contemplating as the Committee on the District does a thorough revision and the adoption of what we may ultimately decide to be the best system of street transportation the committee has thought we would leave that question of overhauling the general matter of taxation in respect of all the roads until we were prepared to determine upon the system that we would require to have adopted by the roads.

Mr. GORMAN. So I understand. I have heard that statement for several years, since I have been here, but we have never reached the point where we can get a test vote on any question in which the railroads are interested where we can induce them to accept a proposition of this sort.

Mr. SHERMAN. If my friend will excuse me, this provision, which is simply permissive, will not interfere in the slightest degree with the power of Congress to levy any system of taxation that it may deem proper, either upon the street-railroads or upon the other railroads. All that this does is to give them no privilege, but to give them fair notice that they will have the opportunity to substitute modern power. If they do not do this I, for one, shall be in favor at the next Congress of requiring them to do it by a pretty severe measure.

I am assured by a gentleman at the head of one of these corporations that if they had this legal authority (for I asked the question, why do you not adopt modern means of locomotion in Washington where you ought to have the best possible road) they would proceed to act, though it would involve a very large expenditure, three times the cost of the road. I said, "That makes no difference; it ought to be done." He said that their road would do it. He said—I make this statement frankly, because I expect the gentlemen to do it—he said if they got the authority, if you gave them the power, they would make a cable road the whole length of Seventh street, and they would as soon as the best motive power by electricity could be decided upon make the best possible electric road from Georgetown to the navy-yard. If they do not do it nothing is lost. We are then in a condition to make such provision as we choose; but if they do it we accomplish by their consent a great improvement for the city of Washington and the people of the whole country.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio will not understand me as opposing any of these improvements. I think with him there is great necessity for them. But I do believe it is impossible to settle this question now upon an appropriation bill. The other question of the class of rail they ought to use upon the Avenue and the F street lines is just as necessary to be settled as the motive power; and while I am in thorough accord with him and have no desire whatever to hamper any of these roads, but on the contrary wish to give them all proper facilities and all the power needed to do what is required, still we are going on in a way that I think is very unjust to the people of the District of Columbia.

If these roads get such a privilege as you grant by this amendment, in competition with the other roads that you have already chartered, they would unquestionably subject themselves without a murmur to proper taxation. They would change the rail. There are no more profitable roads than the F street and the Avenue roads in the United States, certainly none more profitable than the Avenue road. They have defied the District commissioners; they have defied everybody in Congress. There is not a possibility of getting an improvement from them unless you couple it with the condition of giving them increased facilities.

I do not want to take the time of the Senate by going into this matter now, and therefore I raise the point of order on the amendment. I object to it because we can not consider it properly at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senator from Maryland to withdraw the point of order that he raises upon the amendment, for a moment at least.

Mr. GORMAN. I will do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not understand that the Senator from Maryland has raised a question of order.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Maryland distinctly made a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. But he made it after the amendment had been received and the question stated on its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair asked if there was objection to receiving the amendment, and none was made.

Mr. HARRIS. I understood the Senator from Maryland to raise the question of order, and he certainly did.

Mr. GORMAN. I did.

Mr. SHERMAN. I beg pardon. The Senator from Maryland raised the point of order too late. I do not wish to make a technical point, but the question was put by the Chair before the point of order was raised.

Mr. HARRIS. That is a matter for the Chair to determine, or for the Senate to determine if there shall be an appeal; but I want to say to the Senator from Maryland that this amendment of the Senator from Ohio, whether in order or out of order, simply grants to the existing street-railroad companies of the District the right to use either electricity or cable as a motive power, or electricity by underground wires or storage batteries. I think there can be no doubt that electricity is the power that will be generally, if not universally, adopted for street transportation, and I think the earlier it is adopted the better. We need not connect in giving this authority any question of taxation upon the railroads.

That is an open question with which Congress can deal at any hour of any day that it is in session as it chooses to deal with it, and if the Senator from Maryland will introduce a bill and send it to the Committee on the District of Columbia, that committee will investigate the whole question and determine whether 4 per cent. on the gross earnings or 5 per cent. or 10 per cent. is a fair and reasonable taxation to subject them to.

But I should be unwilling to act upon that question of taxation without investigation, and therefore I hope the Senator from Maryland will not seek to incorporate into this bill anything upon the question of taxation upon the railroads, but I hope he will not object to the adoption of this amendment that the greater of these railroad companies may at once adopt electricity as a power, as some of them, I know, will do if the authority is given. I think it important to the District that they have the authority.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, one year ago, or about a year ago, we had under consideration the charter of a cable road running from the east of the city and parallel with the Avenue and F street lines, and so on to Georgetown, and this same question came up. The bill came from the proper committee, and in opposition to a 4 per cent. tax at that time—it was a greater amount as I offered it, I think, as by referring to the RECORD he will find—substantially the statement he has made to-day he made then.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator will allow me. Do I understand him to say that I was opposing the 4 per cent. tax?

Mr. GORMAN. Not at all.

Mr. HARRIS. On the contrary, I reported the bill and supported it.

Mr. GORMAN. I say that on the cable line the question of a tax upon the gross receipts arose upon an amendment offered by himself; and if my recollection is right the Senator from Tennessee, who is an honored member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, made the same statement he makes now, that it was a matter that ought to be considered by itself and without any relation to the specific bill that was under consideration granting the charter. The Committee on the District of Columbia reported another bill at this session, and they incorporated the amount that the Senate at that time thought was a fair tax—4 per cent. upon the Eckington road and upon other roads since chartered.

Therefore the Committee on the District of Columbia, so far as I know, have come to the conclusion that upon an average that is a fair tax upon the street-railroads. I think myself it is very low on the Avenue road and the F street road. But I do not care to go into that discussion now. I do not think this is the time or place for it. I do not believe we have the time for it now. Therefore I raise the point of order on this amendment; and I submit, if the Chair will permit me, that I have never known of a proposition presented and read for information against which a point of order did not lie at any time. When a Senator offers a proposition as the Senator from Ohio has offered this the custom of the Senate has always been that at any time before the vote is had upon the amendment a point of order will lie. I submit that to the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio when he offered the amendment stated that he desired to do so by unanimous consent. The amendment was read, and the Chair announced that if there were no objection to receiving it the question would be on the adoption of the amendment, and he proceeded to put the question. However, the Chair is not inclined to be rigid in reference to such a matter, and if the Senator from Maryland states that he did raise the point of order at any time during the discussion of the question, the Chair is inclined to hold that he will allow the point of order to be entertained, and he thinks the amendment can not be received unless by unanimous consent if the point of order is made.

Mr. VEST. I think I am responsible for this condition of affairs. I heard the Senator from Ohio ask unanimous consent, and I asked the Senator from Maryland a question and called his attention away from the proceedings of the Senate, and while I was discussing this identical proposition, as soon as I ceased speaking, the Senator from Maryland raised the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes his right to do it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not wish at all to insist upon a technical point. All I want is to accomplish a purpose. I have no more interest in the matter than anybody else. I sincerely hope that the Senator from Maryland will, before the bill is disposed of, allow the option to be given to these railroads between now and next year. I trust therefore he will reconsider the matter himself.

Mr. GORMAN. I will say to the Senator from Ohio that the identical proposition that he presents now has passed the Senate, and I am sorry to say that it was during my absence with my friend from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] on the Appropriations Committee, and it is now a part of the Eckington Railroad charter which is pending elsewhere, so that the Senate has acted upon this proposition, and the other House has the opportunity to pass the bill which gives all that is asked for.

Mr. SHERMAN. But I was told that there was some doubt about the passage of the bill, and therefore, desiring to accomplish this object in a direct way, I offered the amendment to this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no amendment pending. The bill is still open to amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. On behalf of the Committee on Appropriations I offer an amendment to be inserted on page 3, after line 18.

Mr. HISCOCK. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Iowa, who represents the Committee on Appropriations, what action has been taken on the amendment in reference to establishing a light and fog-signal on the western end of Coney Island.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator that the committee has authorized me to report that amendment, and I shall do it in a few moments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, after line 18, it is proposed to insert:

For post-office at Lincoln, Nebr.: For paving, curbing, grading, and setting stone steps about the post-office site and public grounds, and repairing the fountain and walks in said grounds, at Lincoln, Nebr., $10,000.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I also offer on behalf of the Committee on Appropriations the amendment which I send to the desk, and I call the attention of the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 8, after line 23, it is proposed to insert:

Coney Island, New York: For establishing a light or lights, and a fog-signal on the western end of Coney Island, New York, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to amend, to come in on page 8, after line 19:

Castle Hill light-station, Rhode Island: For the construction of the light-house at Castle Hill, Rhode Island, $5,000, additional to the sum already appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 45 there was an amendment overlooked. In line 16 I move to strike out "fifty" and insert "eighty-six," so as to make the sum "$86,000," which is the amount estimated for by the Treasury Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated from the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 45, line 16, before the word "thousand," it is proposed to strike out "fifty" and insert "eighty-six;" so as to read:

Quarantine service: For the maintenance and ordinary expenses, including pay of officers and employés of quarantine stations at Delaware breakwater, Cape Charles, South Atlantic quarantine station (Sapelo Sound), Key West, Gulf quarantine station, San Diego, San Francisco, and Port Townsend, $86,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to page 64. On page 64, line 4, after the word "repair," I move to insert the words "and protect."

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 64, line 4, after the word "repair," it is proposed to insert "and protect;" so as to read:

Repair of the ruin of Casa Grande, Arizona: To enable the Secretary of the Interior to repair and protect the ruin of Casa Grande, situate in Pinal County, near Florence, Ariz., etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Now I ask to go back to the reserved amendments.

The SECRETARY. On page 19, line 12, after the word "exceeding," the Committee on Appropriations reported to strike out "1 cent" and insert "50 cents," and in line 14, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seventy-six" and insert "ninety;" so as to read:

For wages of plate-printers, at piece-rates to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, not to exceed the rates usually paid for such work, including the wages of printers' assistants, at $1.25 a day each when employed, and for wages of printers' assistants at steam-presses, at $1.50 a day each when employed, and for royalty at not exceeding 50 cents per thousand impressions for use of steam plate-printing machines, $390,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. ALLISON. I call the attention of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] to the reserved amendments.

Mr. GEORGE. Is that matter up now for consideration?

Mr. ALLISON. It is before the Senate.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I have been requested by the representatives of a very respectable organization of the laborers in this country and the laborers themselves, to insist before the Senate that the bill upon this subject of engraving and printing as contained on pages 19 and 20 of the printed bill, as it came from the House of Representatives, should be passed.

The bill as it came from the House provided for a royalty "not exceeding 1 cent per thousand impressions for the use of steam plate-printing machines." That provision, as I understand, was inserted for the purpose of securing a disuse of those machines in the Government Engraving and Printing Bureau. The laborers of the country, as represented by the Knights of Labor, insist that this legislation of the House, which will secure the disuse in the Engraving and Printing Bureau of the steam plate-printing machines, should receive the sanction of Congress.

They are largely interested, Mr. President, in the disuse of these machines, which put out of employment a large number of skilled laborers. Whilst I do not understand the organization to insist that merely because a large number of skilled laborers are deprived of employment by these printing machines, and for that reason alone, they should not be used, their opposition is about this: that these machines should not be substituted for human labor and to the dismissal of a large number of skilled workmen unless it can be shown that these machines do the work of the Government in a proper manner, do it as well and as effectually as it would be done by hand-work.

I have looked over the report of the House committee upon this subject, and I find that committee has reached this conclusion after a very laborious and careful investigation:

The great weight of the evidence submitted and of the opinions expressed to the committee overwhelmingly establish the proposition that the work done on the steam-press is not so good as that done on the hand-press, and the only ground upon which it is sought to justify the continued use of the inferior process is merely that the best printing is only obtainable at an increased cost.

That is the judgment of the House committee, and upon that the House acted in providing that the royalty on these steam-press machines should be so low that the effect would be to discontinue their use. This morning there has been laid upon my table a report of the Finance Committee of the Senate, who have had the same matter under consideration for some time. There is a large body of evidence which I have not had time to read, because it was only laid on my desk an hour or two ago, taken on the subject of these steam printing machines. The report of the committee, however, is very short, and I have been enabled to read it once, and I understand it to be directly in opposition to the report made by the House committee—that the Senate committee has reached the conclusion that the work can be done as well by these machines as by hand, and that therefore our committee is not in favor of the proposition to discontinue their use.

So we are confronted in the investigation of this question by the report of the committee of the other House declaring, as I have read, that these machines do not do perfect work, and with a report from the Senate committee asserting the direct contrary. In this conflict of opinion between the two committees I think it would be safe for the Senate and safe for the House to regard the matter as not determined positively by the evidence, as not taken by the evidence out of the region of debate and fair disputation; or, in other words, that the proposition that the printing can be done as well and as perfectly and with as much security against counterfeiting by the steam-machine presses has not been made out beyond reasonable and fair dispute; and in that state of the case, as it is not contended anywhere that the work done by these machines is superior to the hand-work and affords better guaranties against counterfeiting, it would be the safe thing for us to do to adhere to that mode of printing which both committees, the House and the Senate committee, agree is a perfect mode of doing the work.

I think the situation is about that. I would not be prepared to affirm, and I do not think the Senate, in view of the adverse report, and in view also of some of the evidence from which I shall read to the Senate very short extracts, is prepared to rest firmly upon the position that this printing can be as well and as perfectly done by the steam-presses as by hand-work.

I said I would read a little from the testimony upon that subject. I will read very little and it is abstracted here for my convenience by the attorney for the general executive board of the Knights of Labor.

Some of these extracts I have verified from the original documents and some I have not. I take it, as the extracts are made by a reputable lawyer, that I may rely and the Senate may rely with some confidence that the extracts are correct and not garbled or misquoted:

Mr. Graves, Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, in Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 131, says:

"As to the comparative merits of steam-printing and hand-printing, it may be said that, speaking in the widest sense, steam-printing is not equal to hand-printing. * * * There is no doubt that the printing by that process [by hand] would best carry out the intention of the engraver." * * *

There are several other extracts in this paper from skilled engravers, and I believe some from bank presidents, all to the same effect. It is not necessary to read them all.

My position, then, is simply this upon this matter: that there being conflict of opinion between the Senate committee and the House committee, there being this admission which I have read to the Senate made by the chief of the bureau, the person who is managing this business, in favor of the view presented by the House committee, we should be taking a risk upon ourselves to disregard the protest of these laborers and submit to the manufacture of the very important and very essential thing, the common currency of our country, by these steam-presses, because every greenback bill, every national-bank bill, every certificate of silver or of gold, which passes into general circulation in the country as currency is, every one of them, manufactured in this bureau. So we are under the very highest obligation, not only to these persons whose business, whose labor, whose vocation in life is interfered with by the substitution of machines for human skill and human muscle, but we are also under obligation to the great mass of the people of this country who are not skilled and can never be skilled in the detection of counterfeits; we are under the highest obligations to both these parties to pursue such course as will best tend to protect the great mass of our community from being imposed upon by counterfeit money.

As far as I have learned, all agree that the very highest type of workmanship, the very best guaranty against counterfeiting, can be had by the hand-presses. The contention upon the other side, as I understand, has never amounted to more than this, that a part of the printing on each bill, not all of it, but a part of the printing on each bill, may be as well and as satisfactorily done by the machine as by hand. But I have not heard it suggested that the operation of a machine or the use of a machine will furnish a better style of work or a better guaranty against counterfeiting than hand-work.

In view of this state of facts, I submit, with deference to the Senate Finance Committee, and to all who may disagree with me, that we ought not to discard hand-work on any part of these bills, ought not to incur the risk of counterfeiting, and ought not—and I confess that this last consideration weighs very greatly with me, and I think it ought to weigh very greatly with the Senate—we ought not in this case of doubt to discard human labor, human skill, human muscle, and substitute for them a mere machine.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Mr. President, I only wish to make a single statement that will take but two or three minutes.

I think an examination of both the testimony taken by the House committee and the testimony taken by the Senate committee will reveal the fact that the plates printed by labor are much plainer, much more perfect in detail, much more difficult to counterfeit than those printed upon the machines. Certainly I so understand the testimony of the present chief of the secret service, coupled with the testimony also of his predecessor, Mr. Brooks, both of whom are charged with the discovery and detection of counterfeits; and really when a counterfeit bill is placed in circulation or suspected of being in circulation the matter is turned over immediately to the chief of the detective service. The result of his investigation is, of course, an alarm sent all over the country, and the bill is declared to be a counterfeit if discovered to be so. Therefore I do not think it ought to be a question of expense at all. It is not a question of whether it costs a certain sum of money to produce a certain result in the printing-office, but what is the most perfect mode of procedure; what is the most perfect method by which these bills may be printed. If by hand labor, then certainly no machine should be used for the purpose. I think the testimony all goes to prove, as the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] has said, that in a comparison between the machine-printed notes and the hand-printed notes the hand-printed are declared to be the better.

I have also had a personal conversation with the gentleman who occupies the position of superintendent of the Bureau of Engraving—not Engraving and Printing, but Engraving—perhaps one of the best experts in this country, perhaps one of the most accomplished engravers in this country, and he gives me as his view that the hand-printed notes are much more difficult to counterfeit and much more perfect and complete.

Now, in a matter which concerns the circulation of the country where people are not all supposed to be experts, certainly the very best method that can be devised should be employed, irrespective of cost. Therefore, for one, I shall vote for the House proposition in this bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. President, with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] I devoted a good deal of time to the investigation of this much-vexed question, and it is proper that I should state the conclusions which the committee reached in respect to it.

For ten years steam printing-presses have been used in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. We print with them the backs of the silver certificates and also the internal-revenue stamps, or a part of them. The question of their introduction was first thoroughly examined by the Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and the experts of the Treasury Department nearly ten years ago, and the then honorable Secretary of the Treasury, the present Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], ordered their introduction into the Department. Following him, they were approved by the late Secretary Folger after a thorough investigation of their work. Its value, its economy, every question connected with it was thoroughly investigated by him, and he approved of the introduction of the presses and ordered more of them.

The present Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Fairchild, has thoroughly investigated the question, and has made it the subject of his report to Congress, approving of the introduction of steam printing-presses into the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and indorsing their work. The Postmaster-General of the United States, after a thorough investigation of the question, has concluded that postage-stamps should be printed by steam-presses. The Treasurer of the United States, who is the officer to whose attention it would be specially called if imperfect work was done by steam-presses, has most emphatically approved of the character of the work, after full examination, his judgment being based upon the work as it is turned out and based upon the reports of experts charged with investigating it. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, thoroughly investigating the work of steam-presses, has added his approval to that of these other Government officials, and it stands upon the record to-day that every Government official charged with responsibility for the perfection of this work has approved it; there is no exception.

A Senator has read a quotation from the report of Mr. Graves, the chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, from which it is argued that the work is not as perfect as that of hand-presses. If you consider all the work which can be printed—and that is what I understand him to say and to mean—I suppose this may be true, that with reference to the highest and most elaborate character of engraving hand-presses are better adapted for the work than steam-presses, and it is for that reason that they have only been put to work upon postage-stamps, the backs of silver certificates, and internal-revenue stamps.

It is suggested here that the work turned out by the steam-presses is more easily counterfeited. I say to Senators that that is not proved before either committee. Detectives might express their opinion, experts might express their opinion, but there is evidence more unerring than that. That evidence is the record of the counterfeits which have been put into circulation; and when you call for the counterfeits that have been put into circulation and compare those printed by the steam-press with those by the hand-press the case fails, and since they have been in use the evidence is that only two of the silver certificates have been counterfeited.

But, Mr. President, on this question of the acceptability of the work there is a class of evidence which is higher than all this I have referred to, which is above it, which should answer the objection of the Senator from New Jersey. This matter has been under discussion before committees now for nearly a year, and not a word of complaint has come from the people who take the money, or from the bankers or the officers of banks; quite the contrary. Leading bankers gladly, at least readily, furnished the committee that had this matter under discussion and investigation with their testimonials in favor of the present printing of the silver certificates. Those banks, through which the most of this currency goes, readily furnished the testimony that this printing was satisfactory to them and satisfactory to the money-taking people of the United States. The effort to abolish the use of steam printing-presses is not backed up by any officer or by any individual in the whole country responsible for the character of the money which is put into circulation or by one that places money in circulation. The work of the steam printing-presses has the approval of moneyed institutions of the country, and I do not recall now a scintilla of evidence or a suggestion of an objection from the banks or bankers of the United States opposing this manner of printing.

Mr. BLAIR. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HISCOCK. You certainly may.

Mr. BLAIR. Do they claim that the steam-printing press-work is better than the hand-work?

Mr. HISCOCK. The letters with which we were furnished are printed in the report and are brief, and I have not the slightest objection to reading them, and then their language will not be misunderstood. Here is the letter of Mr. George S. Coe:

THE AMERICAN EXCHANGE NATIONAL BANK, 128 BROADWAY,
New York, October 4, 1888.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your note of yesterday asking my opinion of the design, engraving, and printing of the United States silver certificates of series 1886, especially of the backs, I take pleasure in saying that they seem to me to be of excellent quality in every respect. The backs of them all, which I have carefully examined, are in printing and in every particular in the best style of the engraver's art, and I see nothing in them to condemn, but everything to commend their workmanship.

I have also seen a counterfeit of each the $1 and $5 notes. They are such miserable imitations of the genuine that a glance at them by the least experienced observer would show them to be spurious. They have never caused us annoyance. The faces of them are bad, and the backs are worse.

Yours, very respectfully,

GEORGE S. COE, President.

E. O. GRAVES, Esq.,
Chief of Bureau, Washington, D. C.

Mr. BLAIR. My question to the Senator was one which that letter does not seem to answer, and if the other letters are of the same import they would not reach the question. My question was whether these bankers and outside parties who are engaged in printing certificates and notes and stamps themselves, and are, of course, interested to make them as cheap as possible in order that they may make as large a profit as possible on the product which they put forth upon the country—I ask if even they claim that the steam printing-press does any better work than the hand-press? I do not ask if they say it is equally good, but whether they claim that it is any better than the work of the hand-press.

Mr. HISCOCK. I may say, in reference to that, that as to the printing of the backs of the paper, the weight of the evidence was that it was fully equal to the work of the hand-presses and that the general average of it was better.

Mr. BLAIR. May I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. HISCOCK. I will add this, which perhaps to some extent answers the question, that in the examination before the committee experts who were produced by those who were urging the hand-presses and that they should do the work, in designating the work which was submitted to them, they claiming that the work of the hand-presses was superior to that of the steam-presses, in three cases out of four I think every one of them indicated the work which was presented to them as coming from hand-presses when in fact it was the work of steam-presses.

Mr. BLAIR. May I now ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask just this specific question, whether it was proved in his belief before the committee that the highest style of the steam printing art is superior to the highest style of the hand-press work?

Mr. HISCOCK. I will answer that.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not ask now, for I see that either I do not make my question distinct or the Senator does not understand me.

Mr. HISCOCK. I understand the Senator's question and I will answer it.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not ask for a comparison of inferior hand-press work or average work as it is done, because I do not understand that is the real issue.

Mr. HISCOCK. The judgment reached by the committee was that the average of the work by the steam-presses upon the backs of notes was superior to the average of the work done by hand-presses.

Mr. BLAIR. That does not answer my question, if the Senator will pardon me. I am of the opinion myself that there is a great deal of bad work put upon the country, and that counterfeits result, and that the currency of the country is a very inferior article to some extent, whether done by hand or steam presses. I do not ask the Senator to compare the average of the two kinds of bad work, but I ask the Senator whether it is not the force and effect of all the testimony from every source that the highest quality of hand-press work is better than the steam-press work?

Mr. HISCOCK. I say to the Senator no, so far as hand-presses and steam-presses are used upon the backs of notes. The only way we could judge in reference to that was by the results, and I think the Senator who united with me in this investigation will concur with me that the best average results are reached by the steam-presses rather than by the hand-presses. I hope that answers the Senator's question.

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly. That is all I asked for some time ago.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have tried to make it clear, and trust I have.

Mr. BLAIR. It is clear now.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will say also in reference to this subject that it was not supposed by the committee that that high art which should be employed in printing engravings for the decoration of gentlemen's houses should be resorted to in the printing of money, but that a high enough art and excellence should be invoked to guard against counterfeiting and answer the needs and requirements of the country, and if you please make the work respectable for a great nation. If high art protects against counterfeiting, that high art should be invoked; but money at most is for temporary use; it is not to be preserved for ornamentation; and when you have reached that excellence which answers the needs and requirements of the Government, that excellence which is above criticism from the money-taking people and the money-circulating people of the country, the Government has got far enough. That was the conclusion that we arrived at.

Mr. BLAIR. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask whether the Senator considers the paper money of the country in circulation as we find it as universally of good quality as it ought to be.

Mr. HISCOCK. Well, I do not know that I want to pass judgment on it, but I will say this——

Mr. BLAIR. It is a vital question.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will say if it is not, it is not the fault of the steam-press printing.

Mr. BLAIR. That is the question at issue.

Mr. HISCOCK. It is not the fault of the steam-press printing, and in my opinion the faces of the silver certificates, taking into account the combination of figures in the engraving and all that, is not comparatively a higher style of art than the backs.

The committee that have had this subject under investigation were very much disposed to believe that a question of administration of this kind could well be trusted to the Secretary of the Treasury, the experts under him, the Treasurer of the United States, officers most sensitive to public opinion on the question; and we were of the opinion that Congress was encroaching a little too far upon the executive when it proclaimed as to the manner in which postage-stamps were to be printed, internal-revenue stamps were to be printed, the backs of silver certificates were to be printed, and when it came down to the manner in which they were to execute it these high officers that I have named in constant contact with the public could not be intrusted with the administration of the Engraving and Printing Bureau of the United States.

In reference to the economy your committee were entirely satisfied that the work which is done by steam-presses is done at least 50 per cent. less than it would cost to do the corresponding work upon the hand-presses. I am not so much of an economist as to stand here and advocate that even if it would be with the result of poor work which might be counterfeited and through which the people of the country might be defrauded. But there was no evidence of that kind before the committee. Quite the contrary, the evidence was that it was no more susceptible or easily counterfeited at least than the work by hand-presses. The evidence in my judgment is uncontradicted that the use of steam-presses does save to the Government annually between three or four hundred thousand dollars. I have seen no successful criticism of the estimates of the Treasury Department in making that statement.

As I said a little while ago, if that is at the expense of work which does not come up to the expectations and the desires and the demands of the people, then expend the three or four hundred thousand dollars more; but I repeat that the people, so far as they have been heard from, through the representative bankers of the country at least, stand here to-day commending and approving this work, and saying they are satisfied with it.

It has been said in the course of this discussion that the effect of the steam-presses has been to turn people out of employment. That is quite a mistake. An effort was made to prove that lower wages had been paid by reason of the introduction of steam-presses. That part of the attack broke down and the average wages paid by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing to-day are as high as they have been, and I think it is fair to say that the employment has been more constant.

Mr. BLAIR. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIR. I may say in excuse that we have just this moment, or at least 10 minutes to 1 o'clock, received the evidence from the committee, and of course the Senate is entirely in the dark as to the ground of the Senator's statements; but my question is this: The Senator states that the working people are as well off with steam-presses as without them.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do.

Mr. BLAIR. If that be so, why is it that the working-people are, and so far as I know all the working organizations of those who are employed in this specific industry, universally opposed to the steam-press, saying that it does interfere with their avocation, and also contending that the work is of an inferior quality?

Mr. HISCOCK. Do I understand, as we are now asking questions, that the Senator from New Hampshire stands here to-day as the advocate of the removal of labor-saving machinery from the country? Do I understand that that is the ground of attack?

Mr. BLAIR. Does the Senator want an answer?

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes.

Mr. BLAIR. Does he recognize that I may want one to my question too, because I asked him one first?

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAIR. If the Senator will answer my question I shall be very glad to answer his.

Mr. HISCOCK. I certainly shall answer any question the Senator wishes to ask.

Mr. BLAIR. If you take them in chronological order, my question was how it happened that those employed in this specific avocation universally, so far as I know, and the working organizations generally, are opposed to this steam printing-press if it does not intermeddle with their occupation and does not for the time at least reduce the rewards of their labor?

Mr. HISCOCK. I can only say in answer to that question that it is a subject for speculation. How this has been brought about is more than I know. How far the labor organizations of the country are understandingly or without thoroughly understanding this question against it is more than I know. On that question I say to the Senator frankly that it is a matter for guessing and speculating, and I have no doubt that he can guess and speculate on that matter as wisely as I can.

Mr. BLAIR. Then the Senator has introduced no point of difference about it.

Mr. HISCOCK. I simply said, which I repeat, that so far as work is concerned as high wages are paid for that and as constant employment is furnished as before those presses were introduced into the bureau.

Mr. BLAIR. Does the Senator mean that as high wages are paid for steam-printing work?

Mr. HISCOCK. I would say as high wages in some instances, where the mode of compensation has been fixed for the piece as for the day. I would say that on an average the employés receive as high wages.

Mr. BLAIR. Then I understand the Senator's statement is with reference to those employed in steam-printing.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am not aware that there has been any considerable abatement of the wages that have been paid to those.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator's statement, which led me to trouble him with the question originally, was that the wages of the hand-press printers had not been interfered with by the steam-press printing, and that being so, why should they oppose it?

Mr. HISCOCK. I did not say that their work had not been interfered with. What I did say, or what I supposed I was saying, was that not in this case, as there never was a case where labor-saving machinery resulted in the reduction of wages that are paid to those who labor.

Mr. BLAIR. If the Senator desires, I will answer his question by saying no.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am very glad to hear it. I say to the Senator, in response to that suggestion of his, that, in my judgment, there is no reason for discontinuing the use of steam printing-presses unless it is the object and purpose to forbid the Government of the United States from using labor-saving machinery. I challenge all this evidence upon that question, and I say that there is no ground on which you can justify it except it be that the Government of the United States should not use labor-saving machinery.

I have reviewed the facts somewhat. The labor performed by the steam-presses is satisfactory to everybody who uses it or is responsible for its being made. Its work is not more subject or liable to being counterfeited. It is 50 per cent. cheaper. Tell me, then, why the presses should not be used?

I will add to my statement that if you pass the bill in the form in which it came to us from the other House, there are not hand-press printers enough in the United States to do the work of the Government and of private parties. That fact stands unchallenged in the record that has been submitted by the committee to the Senate. The effect of it would be practically to make a corner with reference to the men who print upon hand-presses. There is not enough of them in the country to do the work which would devolve upon them in the Engraving and Printing Bureau and in the private offices which are using those presses to-day.

It is true that steam printing-presses have not reached the point of doing that high and excellent work which is required upon fine engravings and upon the faces of bills. I grant that that may be accomplished in the future. It is difficult to fix the limit to what may be accomplished by ingenuity, and skill, and science, and in the mechanical arts.

I emphasize that there is no reason why the use of these steam printing-presses should be discontinued unless it is for the purpose of saying to the Government that you shall not use labor-saving machinery though it gives you as good results and as good work as hand-presses.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator pardon me?

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. I understood the Senator to say just in the preceding sentence that these steam-presses could not do fine work.

Mr. HISCOCK. I said, and I hope I shall not be misunderstood, that the work which they do execute is as excellent as the work which is done by hand-presses. I say that as high order of work can be done of that character by steam-presses as can be done by hand-presses.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator pardon me again?

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. He has just been saying that he will not trust steam-presses with the faces of bills, where exquisite work is required.

Mr. HISCOCK. Does not the Senator from Connecticut understand that for one class of work one method may be required, where there is more of combination, and of higher order, and all that, than of a lower class of engraving? Certainly I should not stand here to educate the Senator from Connecticut upon a question of that kind. What I say in reference to it is, and I repeat it, that as to the work which is done upon the steam-presses it equals, and in my judgment the general average of it is higher, than that done by the hand-presses.

Mr. BLAIR. I understand the Senator to say, if he will permit me, that the steam-press will do as high or a higher order of low work than the hand-press.

Mr. HISCOCK. The Senator can put it in that way if he chooses. He does not misunderstand my argument or position.

Mr. BLAIR. If the Senator will permit me, then, I will see whether I do. I understand him to say that the work on the back of the certificates is a lower order of work than that upon the face, and that this low order of work——

Mr. HISCOCK. I will qualify my statement to the Senator in just one respect. I do not know and I do not state that it is a lower order of work.

Mr. BLAIR. Than that upon the face?

Mr. HISCOCK. No; it is an entirely different kind of work from that on the face.

Mr. BLAIR. And that upon the face can not be done by the steam-presses?

Mr. HISCOCK. It has not been successfully done. What I say is that the class of engraving from which the backs are printed can be as successfully done by the steam-presses as by the other presses.

Mr. McPHERSON. Will the Senator from New York yield to me for a question?

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. McPHERSON. If the printing of the face of the notes can not be successfully done by steam-presses, would it not be an additional safeguard if the backs of the notes were printed by hand-presses as well?

Mr. HISCOCK. I can only answer the Senator in one way in reference to that point. So far as the printing of the backs is concerned the work is acceptable, as I have said, to every officer charged with responsibility for their production. It is satisfactory to the money-taking and money-circulating people of the country. There is no complaint here against the character of the work from any source whatever which is interested in it as a circulating medium.

Mr. McPHERSON. Will the Senator yield again?

Mr. HISCOCK. Oh, yes.

Mr. McPHERSON. I am afraid the Senator has not read the testimony which he himself has ordered to be printed.

Mr. HISCOCK. Oh, yes; I heard it.

Mr. McPHERSON. Very well. I turn to the testimony of Mr. Bell, the present chief of the detective service. He says in answer to a question:

When a bill has been used some time—

Speaking of the printed bills—

I could not say positively that a $5 silver certificate of the 1886 issue is genuine if printed by a steam-press. I can tell them when they are new. But we have a miserable-looking lot of genuine bills; I will tell you that.

Now, I turn back to the testimony of Mr. Brooks, the predecessor of Mr. Bell, who had been a long time the chief of that service, and a man of very extraordinary ability and great success in the management of that department. He proceeds also to say, speaking of counterfeiting, that it has acquired perfection at the present time, it approaches so closely to the genuine in all the details; and that recent counterfeit bills that have come out are almost like the genuine. Mr. Bell speaks of a case in which an expert who had been employed by the Government for some ten or twelve years at Pittsburgh, Pa., sent three of the printed notes to headquarters with the declaration that they were counterfeit. The imperfect character of the notes compelled him, although an expert, to the belief that they were counterfeit notes, and he transmitted them to the chief of the department here. Upon investigation by the chief he discovered that they were genuine, but they were so imperfectly printed, there was such a dimness about them—they were not printed deep enough, I may term it—the result was that the expert was deceived.

Let me ask the Senator from New York if the experts of the Treasury Department are often deceived with respect to these notes, so that it is almost impossible to determine whether they are counterfeit or genuine, how many of these notes may be in the circulation of the country to-day, unknown by anybody, undiscovered, which in the end must necessarily be thrown out, and certainly to the injury of somebody? Hence, from the Senator's own argument, and I have listened with a great deal of interest to it, I think the Senator has not made out his case.

Mr. HISCOCK. The Senator from New Jersey does not understand that I have yielded the floor, I suppose.

Mr. McPHERSON. I will yield the floor again to the Senator if he will please answer a single question.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will yield.

Mr. McPHERSON. If the Senator will answer a single question I will take my seat.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have been listening to the Senator's remarks with great pleasure. They are extremely able.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly, if he desires to make a speech now, if I can have the privilege of resuming the floor when he gets through.

Mr. McPHERSON. I will yield the floor. I admit I am taking too much of the Senator's time; but if the Senator will give me a moment to ask a question to which I desire an answer, he will please not think hard of me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York yields to a question.

Mr. HISCOCK. I yield for a speech, provided I can resume the floor when the Senator from New Jersey has finished.

Mr. McPHERSON. My question is this: The Senator challenges all the statements that have been made to the contrary of his proposition. Will the Senator please tell me upon what ground he challenges them?

Mr. HISCOCK. I challenge them because they are unsupported by any facts. Gentlemen were called who gave opinions, and when the records of their office were brought before the committee they failed to establish the opinions. Gentlemen spoke about the character of this money, and yet with all the investigation that has been had with reference to it, when action by Legislatures has been invoked (I believe the Legislature of New Jersey passed some resolution upon the subject, at least I heard so, but the bankers of New Jersey are satisfied with the work), the men who circulate the money are satisfied with the work. Petitions have been presented here from organizations. Did they investigate it? Did they pass upon these questions as experts? Oh, no! Whenever the question of opinion of experts has been introduced it has all been the other way. Go to the Treasury Department where this money comes for redemption to the Treasurer of the United States, and his testimony is in favor of it; and when you go into the secret service division for testimony in respect to counterfeits you find that there is no case against this character of work.

Mr. President, I desire to add but a little more to what I have said, and I shall appeal for corroboration upon this question to the distinguished Senator who has charge of the bill. The very moment that you remove these presses it is necessary to add to your bill a quarter of a million dollars for additional room in which to do the work of the Government. I have heard a distinguished ex-Secretary of the Treasury say that the present Bureau of Engraving and Printing was built by money that had been saved by this process.

Are we ready to say that all Government printing shall be done by hand-printers? Beer-stamps, in the highest excellence of art, to be used once; postage-stamps—the bill which was introduced did not cover them, I grant, and simply, as it was announced, because there was out a contract for the printing of them—postage-stamps, that are to be used once, in the highest style of art; the stamps upon your cigar-boxes, to be used once; not counterfeited; no record of their ever having been counterfeited that I am aware of, the public satisfied with them, but in the highest style of the art! That is what is asked. That is what the House provision means. It means what I said awhile ago, that the Government of the United States shall not use labor-saving machinery.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, if this were, as the Senator from New York endeavors to make us believe, a simple question of driving out new machines, I should not take the floor for a moment. There is no nation that has so fully accepted the inevitable necessity of inventions as the American nation. We do not hear of great strikes in the United States because of the introduction of a new loom or anything of that description. Nobody thinks of going back to the old way of manufacturing steel rails after he has seen the Bessemer product and process. But I need not argue the question at all. Every day there is filed in the Patent Office some new device for saving labor, and every one is hailed, I may say unanimously, by the people of the United States as an advance in civilization. Even the men who may temporarily lose employment by it must acknowledge that their fellow-men are, in general, benefited.

I do not believe that a steam-press, a machine-press, if I may speak of it in that way, can possibly do work in the highest style of the art, nor does the Senator from New York. He has admitted it over and over again in what he has said. He has said that the work of the Government of this kind does not demand the highest kind of art, such as we wish to put upon the walls of our houses. That is an admission that it is not capable of the highest style of the art.

He says that it is good enough to protect against counterfeiting and be respectable. Well, I have never denied that; but that is an admission that it is far below a respectable style of art, or of the highest style. He says this money is not preserved for ornamentation. There, again, he is admitting that it is not in the highest style, that the steam-press is not capable of the highest style of work. He said it was good enough. That was one of his phrases.

He says it is no more easily counterfeited than hand-work. I think it is, and I will try to show it before I get through. He says steam-presses have not reached that high stage required for the faces of bills. That is another admission. If the steam-press can not do the work on the face of the bill as well as it can do it on the back, it can not do the work on the back as well as the hand-press can do it. That is an inevitable inference.

Before I forget it, I call his attention to another fact. He referred to the previous indorsements of this style of work, and one of them from Secretary Folger. Under the Folger administration it is my impression that the Lee presses were condemned—were thought to be not good enough for the work.

He tells us that there are not men enough in the country to do this work by hand if we dispense with these nineteen steam-presses. But it will take only from about sixty to seventy-five men more—sixty men more, I am told—and they can be found. I am told by men of the trade who know, that there are not less than five hundred or six hundred men who are capable of doing this work and trained to it to be found in Philadelphia and New York who would be glad to get more work to-day.

A law that required the work on Government paper currency to be done in the highest style of art would rule out every one of these presses. Now, the Senator admits that over and over again.

He says the bankers are satisfied with it. Those of them who give it no consideration any further than to count it and to put it out, I presume are satisfied with it. They have not examined the subject, many of them, particularly. I would rather have the judgment of a veteran counterfeit detective than of any bank officer who had not any taste for art or had not specially studied it.

He has a note from a very excellent gentleman, Mr. Coe, of New York, who thinks it is good enough, or something to that effect; but, on the other hand, here is a letter to me from Mr. Bell, who is at the head of the secret service division of the Treasury Department:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 12, 1889.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 11th instant, asking reply to the following questions, namely:

First. Are the Government securities, in your judgment, printed in the highest style of the art; and is it necessary that they should be?

Answer. No, they are not; and I deem it necessary that they should be.

Second. Do the steam-presses print as good impressions as the hand-presses?

Answer. No, they do not.

Third. Do the present issues of silver certificates compare favorably with former issues in wear and execution?

Answer. No, they do not by any means.

Fourth. Are the present issues more easily counterfeited than former issues?

Answer. Yes, in my opinion they are. The former issues were printed in more colors, and in a higher style of art, which could not be so readily photographed; whereas the present issues have less colors and can be easily photographed.

Fifth. Do you hear of any complaint from the public generally, regarding the silver certificates?

Answer. Yes, a great many complaints from the public generally, and the bankers in particular.

Sixth. Since the issue of silver certificates have many counterfeits appeared? If any, how were the counterfeits produced?

Answer. The following counterfeit silver certificates have made their appearance:

One dollar, letter D series 1886; photogravure.
Five dollars, letter D series 1886; photogravure.
Five dollars, letter A series 1886; engraved.
Ten dollars, letter D series 1880; photograph.
Ten dollars, letter, none, series 1880; lithograph-stone plate.
Ten dollars, letter, none, series 1880; roughly chiseled on marble plate.
Twenty dollars, letter B series 1880; photographed and colored by hand.
Twenty dollars, letter C series 1880; engraved.

Respectfully, yours,

JOHN S. BELL, Chief.

Hon. JOSEPH R. HAWLEY,
United States Senate.

Mr. HISCOCK. For what year?

Mr. HAWLEY. Eighteen hundred and eighty.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope the Senator will state the year, for that is quite material. Of necessity they must be counterfeits of certificates issued since 1886, or else the hand-press and steam-press discussion of methods does not enter into it.

Mr. HAWLEY. This question has been since the issue of silver certificates?

Mr. HISCOCK. Since the issue of silver certificates. The printing of the backs by steam-presses has been since 1886.

Mr. HAWLEY. There was printing done on the silver certificates with the steam-press before?

Mr. HISCOCK. No, sir.

Mr. HAWLEY. That was not my information, but I will accept it.

I have a specimen or two here of this work. I will show the reason why as they do the work now at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing they are not protected against counterfeiting as they ought to be. It has been the boast of the American, it has been his boast as a matter of fact, that there was no steel-plate engraving and printing in the world better done than that of our national currency. It was justified. I have here three old legal-tenders, the kind that became famous as greenbacks. They were hand-printed of course in that day. On the back as one impression the greenback has its exquisite engraving under the geometrical lathe. The face goes three times to press: first, for the ordinary black; second, for the green shades and ornamentations; and thirdly, for the red seal, which red seal is printed from a plate cut into an intaglio. Now they are printing this red seal by surface printing; that is to say, after printing the ordinary back it makes a dab of red ink upon the bill, and the other side is pressed upon a plate with trenches cut in it so as to make a deep impression. The ink in that case would appear to be raised and a new impression would feel a little rough.

On the other hand, I have one of the one-dollar certificates. The back was printed by the steam-press. The paper was moistened in order to do it. It then had tremendous pressure upon a very hard smooth plate so that the face was calendered or finished off like your society note-paper almost by this tremendous pressure. It then goes through the hand-press to print the face, but as it is moistened this hardened paper under tremendous pressure does not take the moisture equally in all its places and the impression is not a perfect one. It is made right upon the surface of the paper. With the older and the firmer paper that was spongier, like the paper upon your walls, in fine engraving the ink was thoroughly taken up; it was carefully prepared by hand on the plate. It was thoroughly taken up and became embodied in the body of the paper. This one-dollar silver certificate with the exquisite vignette of Martha Washington upon it is mere surface printing, I may call it. Though a hand-press, it can not do the work so well by reason of the work of the steam-press previously performed upon the back of the note.

I saw an employé of the Government take one of your ordinary rubbers that you have on your desk, the one used to rub out ink, and touch the signature of Rosecrans here a few times, and it has disappeared; it has been wiped out as you would wipe out a speck from glass. Then he touched the background around the face of Martha Washington two or three times in that way, and you can see by examination that that is nearly gone.

That is not all. The old note that I have here had three colors upon the face of it. This is printed only once for the black, and then this surface-printed red seal is put upon it. That surface-printed red seal can be taken off with rubber. The counterfeiter carefully taking off this red seal stamp has nothing to do but to photograph that bill. The old bill with its green tint could not be photographed. Even in that way to-day he rubs the red off, because the red would take black.

There is no special difficulty in counterfeiting silver certificates of any description. The gentlemen who use the steam-presses testified that they were making paper money for Brazil and other governments, and good paper money. At the time they were testifying that, there were appearing in the New York papers accounts of the arrest of various counterfeiters who had been counterfeiting the Brazil money. They printed both back and face, I take it, for the Brazilian Government on the steam-presses.

I have here an old five-dollar bill, a legal tender, that has its three tints carefully printed upon it. Here is a new one that is without any green tint whatever on the face of it, making it comparatively easy to print. Here is a five-dollar silver certificate counterfeit. There is no particular difficulty in counterfeiting it. It has got the red seal. It looks very well indeed to the eye of the casual observer. It is simply a photograph, taken in by some bank somewhere and the letters "counterfeit" cut or burned through it with a stamp.

The difficulty I will explain in a moment in doing the highest style of work with steam-presses. In the old-fashioned way, which must remain in my judgment, the plate-printer rubs his ink, which should be of a better quality than that used by the Government, upon a paper which should be of a better quality than that used by the Government, and rolls the ink upon it. He takes the rough mass of it off with a cloth, and then with the human hand (and there is no pad or cushion machine that will supply the place of the human hand) rubs off the surplus ink until he reaches just the right quantity, of which the machine can not judge after all in the fine lines that have been cut there.

When these notes run through the machine there is a hasty inking of the plate and a hasty rubbing of it off by some sort of machine pad or cloth which it is utterly impossible to adjust with the delicacy in either case that is necessary. The experienced plate-printer does this with great rapidity, and if he is a careful man he does it perfectly in every case. They try in this machine to get the human hand in for a single dab to smooth the plate and supply the deficiency of the machine, but they can not always do it, and can not do it to satisfaction when they do undertake it.

My information is a little different about these matters from that given by the Senator from New York. I understand that the beer stamps and all the internal-revenue stamps are engraved in the highest style of art and printed in the highest style of art, that is to say, by hand; and with the exception of the 8-ounce tobacco and the 2-ounce and some of the 50-cent cigar stamps, which have been engraved on steam-presses, every internal-revenue stamp has the same character of engraving on it as the notes, and in many instances the designs are more excellent. I do not agree that it will answer to put imperfect work in any of that, because to do so is to invite the counterfeiter, and we have not been in the habit of putting in second-class work there.

It is very easy to do this work much more cheaply, if you want that, but every time you cheapen the process, cheapen the excellence of the engraving or the perfection of the printing, you open the door to the counterfeiter. That is simply all there is to be said about it, and the difference in expense is not so extraordinary.

All around the world there are people engaged in publishing prints and fine engravings who do not think for a moment of using a steam press or machine of any kind to do their work. I say no engraving on your walls is of that description. No fine engraving that you see in your books is of that description. This steam-print rough work bears the same relation to real art that the chromo does to the original pictures of Meissonnier or Raphael, and you can not get away from it.

I am not here to question whether there should be sixty men more or less employed by the Government. If the machine could do that work as well as the hand can do it, the art world would be revolutionized, to the great delight of every lover of fine work all over the world; but it can not do it. Every man knows that there are some things where you can not dispense with the exquisite eye of the trained artist workman and the exquisite work of his trained hand, and this is one of them.

What have they given these gentlemen? In the first place, the Government buys the press for $1,250. The claim is that it cost them $1,400 to build it, but it professedly buys the press at a cost of $1,250. Then it gives $500 for the privilege of construction, as they call it, a bounty—a profit on the cost of the press of $500; then the Government gives a dollar on every thousand impressions, whether it be big or little—every thousand perfect impressions—which makes on an average about $900 a year for the use of a $1,250 machine which the Government itself built or paid for having built, and for which it has already given a $500 premium.

That is the way the case stands. I do not think that these accounts of the relative economy of the two presses taken into consideration can balance these extraordinary expenditures. I do not say whether they are unjust or not. That is a question for those who have made the bargain and for the patentee. The patentee can not sell it in every street, and of course if he does get any revenue he should get a considerable revenue. But it goes to the question of economy in the matter. I say we can have all our Government work done, as we always bragged it was done, in the highest style by employing sixty or seventy or eighty, I do not care if it is a hundred men more, at perhaps a cost of $100,000 or $150,000.

My friend from New York has referred to some observations made by various Treasury officers. I have quoted what the best-informed man in the Treasury Department, the head of the secret-service division, has to say. Here is a letter from my dear friend and constituent, Mr. Hyatt, Treasurer of the United States:

> I am informed that the backs of the silver certificates of series of 1886, of the denominations of $1, $2, $5, and $10, and the backs of United States notes of the denominations of $10 and $20, have for some time been printed on presses, etc.

He goes on to say:

> I am unable to discover anything in the engraving or printing of the genuine certificates which makes it easy to counterfeit them.

I have shown that whether it be by reason of steam-presses or hand-presses the new silver notes are many times over more easily counterfeited than the paper money issued a few years ago. That perhaps is independent of the question about steam-presses.

Mr. HISCOCK. I should like to have the Senator from Connecticut say when. He says he has shown that. I should like to have him state how he has shown it in results.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have not the statistics of the counterfeits that are made or of the arrests, but upon that point I did read from the man who knows more about it than any of us, the head of the secret service division.

Mr. HISCOCK. There have been three counterfeits, and it is a question of great doubt, of dispute, since these notes were printed upon steam-presses, whether one of them was printed upon a hand-press or whether it was printed upon a steam-press, and the experts differ upon that question.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have shown it so that if the Senator heard me he ought, as a candid man, to admit that it is more easy to counterfeit the work of the steam-presses.

Mr. HISCOCK. If the Senator will pardon me, I am willing to stand upon the declaration of his esteemed friend, Mr. Hyatt, which he has just read.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Hyatt says he does not see, and I have shown how it can be seen.

Mr. HISCOCK. There is an expert, there is the Treasurer of the United States, the Senator's esteemed friend, and fortified by his opinion I expressed myself as I did. I regarded it as of much higher authority than my own opinion.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not regard it as approaching the testimony of Mr. Bell, who has made the study of counterfeit bills and the study of counterfeiters his life business. Mr. Hyatt was not brought up as an engraver, or artist, or anything of the sort. He is capable of keeping the Treasury books in an honest and faithful way, without doubt, and is an excellent citizen, but he is neither a trained artist nor an expert in bank-note printing. Every man who is practicing photogravure or any of those kindred arts will tell you that as you multiply varying colors that can not be erased without destroying the substance of the paper you to a great extent continue to increase the protection against counterfeiting.

I did not think of talking so long, sir, but I have no sort of question in my own mind about what the Government had better do in the end. I do not want to do anything harsh with these people with whom it has contracted, for they are honorable citizens, but I believe we shall be led by and by to doing our work by hand, as we used to do it.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, with the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] I devoted many days to hearing the testimony upon both sides of this question, and after a patient hearing of all the testimony that was offered and a patient consideration of the question, I fully concur in every statement made by the Senator from New York in his speech of this morning.

In answer to some of the criticisms of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], I want to call his attention to facts that are proved beyond all question and to be found in the record. He says, and truthfully says, that the excellence of plate-printing largely depends upon polishing the plate, but he failed to say that for hand-polish there is more time given to the polishing of the plate with the hand in the steam-press run at its ordinary rate of speed than is given in working the hand-press run at its ordinary rate of speed.

He criticises and complains of the character of the paper and the ink. I beg to tell him that the proof shows that precisely the same paper and precisely the same ink are used in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing by the hand-presses and by the steam-presses, so that the ink and paper being precisely the same the criticism would fail as well upon the work of the one press as that of the other.

Mr. BLAIR. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HARRIS. Oh, certainly you may.

Mr. BLAIR. Does not the Senator lose sight of the admitted fact that nothing at all is done where the exquisite work is required, that is upon the face of the bill, by the steam printing-press, and that the hand-work just spoken of by the Senator from Connecticut is most of it expended upon the face of the bill and not upon the back?

Mr. HARRIS. I beg to assure the Senator from New Hampshire that I do not omit to remember anything that appears in the record, and the Senator from New Hampshire need not trouble himself to remind me of what does appear, for I remember it and know it quite as well as he does.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator will pardon me for saying that if he did not fail to remember it he certainly omitted to state it.

Mr. HARRIS. I will state the case as I understand it, in my own way, and without the aid of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator will not state it without response, however.

Mr. HARRIS. Another question raised by the Senator from Connecticut is, that owing to the pressure of the steam-press the paper is probably injured. The proof conclusively shows that the printer controls the amount of the pressure of the steam-press just as he controls the amount of pressure applied with the hand-press. It is under the control of the printer with both presses, and he gives just the amount of pressure that he deems necessary.

But I do not care to prolong this debate. I desire, however, to give one fact that I deem it quite material that the Senate should understand, which the Senator from New York failed to give.

As to the excellence of the printing by these two methods, there were the backs of a large number of bills printed both by hand and by steam presses exhibited to the experts introduced by the promoters of this House provision, by those who clamor for doing all of this work by hand, and the experts produced on the other side. A large number of bills were taken indiscriminately from the work of the two presses. They were exhibited to the experts with that part of the bill turned down which would indicate what press it was printed upon, and the experts were asked to pick out the best specimens of the art and the worst specimens of the art. In the ratio of three out of four they picked out the steam-press print as the best, and they picked out the hand-press print as the worst. The experts on both sides of this question in a large majority of instances selected the steam-press prints as the better specimen of the art and the hand-press prints as the worst specimen of the art. Does that aid the Senator from New Hampshire in reaching a conclusion as to which method we should adopt or continue?

Nobody has complained that I have ever heard of in respect of this work except about eight or ten hundred plate-printers in the United States. According to the testimony before the committee there are not more than a thousand plate-printers, perhaps not that number, in the United States. They clamor for the abolition of the steam-press; they clamor for a monopoly of all the engraving done by the Government and by private parties as well; and they have brought to their aid labor organizations that clamor also. But as was stated by the Senator from New York, the various Secretaries of the Treasury since the steam-press has been in use, the Treasurer, and every expert whose duty it is to look to and execute this work, have all from their investigation reported in favor of the use of the steam-press upon the backs of these bills and the various other securities and internal-revenue stamps and postage-stamps that the Government needs.

I undertake to say in the light of the testimony, about which I have not the shadow of doubt, that the average work turned out by the steam-press is not only equal to but its average is superior to the average work turned out by the hand-press of the same character; and it clearly appears that it is done at a cost of one-half or less than one-half of what the work done by hand would cost the Government.

In view of these facts the Senator from New York and myself and the other members of the Committee on Finance unanimously agreed that the steam-press ought to be continued in use doing the work that it has been put to, and that perhaps its work should be extended to other things than those to which it has been given heretofore.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, just a single word. The Senator from Tennessee, in his usually acceptable and emphatic way, says that some of the printers mistook in trying to distinguish the hand-press from the steam-press back of the bills. If that is so, I ask him why not print the face of the bill as well by machinery, by the steam-press? He says the committee of the Treasury Department reported in favor of the steam-press. Why not then print the face by the steam-press? He believes the average of work by the steam-press is better than the hand-press work; and yet nobody in the Treasury Department, nor he, nor the Senator from New York, proposes to print the fine work of the face from the steam-press.

Mr. HISCOCK. Now, that certainly is not ingenuous on the part of the Senator.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think it is perfectly so.

Mr. HISCOCK. It certainly is not. It has been explained to him thoroughly that when you take the combination of the plates upon the faces and all that, it is conceded that for those combinations the steam-presses have not yet been improved up to the point of printing those, but that for the combination of colors, figures, etc., which are employed upon the back, up to that point they have gone; and the Senator certainly understands the distinction.

Mr. HAWLEY. The combination of colors is common, and that may be done with either press.

Mr. HISCOCK. The combination of figures and all the different combinations the one press has not gone up to the point of doing.

Mr. HAWLEY. The hand-press does not pretend to print a combination of colors at one time by one impression. The words are hardly out of the mouth of the Senator from Tennessee where he said the average of the work by the steam-press was better than the average by hand.

Mr. HISCOCK. The testimony all concurs that as to the work which is done by the steam-presses, to which they are adapted, bear in mind, and which they do, it is of a higher average character than the other. There is not any dispute about it, practically, so far as you can judge by the testimony of experts. As I said, and as the Senator from Tennessee has stated, take the engraver who was introduced and who went into a long argument as to why they could be more easily counterfeited when printed by steam-presses, the moment the work is presented to him he picks out as the higher work, the best work, three to one the products of the steam-presses.

Mr. HAWLEY. But this work, which the Senator says they are even better adapted to, he treats at the same time as if it were an inferior kind of work. It is not the finer work.

Mr. HISCOCK. The Senator should not say that as to the character of the work. It is not inferior. The engraving is perfect; but it is a different class of work, and he certainly understands the distinction which we make.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes, I do understand it exactly. The Senator does not if he is going to be decided about this. He does not understand it. I can be just as decided as he can. The back of that plate is done in the most exquisite style of art. There is nothing that surpasses it on the face or anywhere else, unless it be the finer touches in the face of some vignette of a beautiful woman. There the artist naturally lingers a little longer, in order that he may make the work perfect. But the exquisite work of the artist on the back of those bills is not surpassed by any printing in the world.

Mr. HISCOCK. To that I agree.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is the plate of his work. Now, that ought to be put upon the paper just as well as the fine work on the face. What the Senator's statement really amounts to is that it is done well enough on the back. I do not admit that.

Mr. BLAIR obtained the floor.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 185) to provide for the admission of the State of South Dakota into the Union, and for the organization of the Territory of North Dakota.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 8557) for the relief of Dr. David Bell; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

ADMISSION OF SOUTH DAKOTA, ETC.

Mr. PLATT. I desire to present a conference report upon the bill for the admission of South Dakota.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report.

Mr. PLATT. I desire to inquire whether it would be in order to move to dispense with the reading of the amendment as agreed to by the conferees?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair supposes that that could be done by unanimous consent only.

Mr. HAWLEY. How long is it?

Mr. PLATT. It is quite a long amendment of twenty-four or twenty-five sections. In fact it is a perfect bill in itself. If the reading can be dispensed with I will make a statement as to the provisions of the bill as agreed upon by the conferees.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We can not dispense with the reading of the report, Mr. President.

Mr. MORGAN. I insist on the reading of the bill. Does the Senator from Vermont insist upon it?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it ought to be read.

Mr. MORGAN. It ought to be read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We ought not to pass any bill without reading it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the conference report will proceed.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the report, which is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 185) to provide for the admission of the State of South Dakota into the Union and for the organization of the Territory of North Dakota, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House of Representatives to said bill, and agree to the same with an amendment, namely: Strike out the said amendment and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"SECTION 1. That the inhabitants of all that part of the area of the United States now constituting the Territories of Dakota, Montana, and Washington, as at present described, may become the States of North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, and Washington, respectively, as hereinafter provided.

"SEC. 2. The area comprising the Territory of Dakota shall, for the purposes of this act, be divided on the line of the seventh standard parallel produced due west to the western boundary of said Territory; and the delegates elected as hereinafter provided to the constitutional convention in districts north of said parallel shall assemble in convention, at the time prescribed in this act, at the city of Bismarck; and the delegates elected in districts south of said parallel shall, at the same time, assemble in convention at the city of Sioux Falls.

"SEC. 3. That all persons who are qualified by the laws of said Territories to vote for representatives to the Legislative Assemblies thereof, are hereby authorized to vote for and choose delegates to form conventions in said proposed States; and the qualifications for delegates to such conventions shall be such as by the laws of said Territories, respectively, persons are required to possess to be eligible to the Legislative Assemblies thereof; and the aforesaid delegates to form said conventions shall be apportioned within the limits of the proposed States, in such districts as may be established as herein provided, in proportion to the population in each of said counties and districts, as near as may be, to be ascertained at the time of making said apportionments by the persons hereinafter authorized to make the same, from the best information obtainable, in each of which districts three delegates shall be elected, but no elector shall vote for more than two persons for delegates to such conventions; that said apportionments shall be made by the governor, the chief-justice, and the secretary of said Territories; and the governors of said Territories shall, by proclamation, order an election of the delegates aforesaid in each of said proposed States, to be held on the Tuesday after the second Monday in May, 1889, which proclamation shall be issued on the 15th day of April, 1889; and such election shall be conducted, the returns made, the result ascertained, and the certificates to persons elected to such convention issued in the same manner as is prescribed by the laws of the said Territories regulating elections therein for Delegates to Congress; and the number of votes cast for delegates in each precinct shall also be returned. The number of delegates to said conventions, respectively, shall be seventy-five; and all persons resident in said proposed States, who are qualified voters of said Territories as herein provided, shall be entitled to vote upon the election of delegates, and under such rules and regulations as said conventions may prescribe, not in conflict with this act, upon the ratification or rejection of the constitutions.

"SEC. 4. That the delegates to the conventions elected as provided in this act shall meet at the seat of government of each of said Territories, except the delegates elected in South Dakota, who shall meet at the city of Sioux Falls, on the 4th day of July, 1889, and, after organization, shall declare, on behalf of the people of said proposed States, that they adopt the Constitution of the United States; whereupon the said conventions shall be, and are hereby, authorized to form constitutions and State governments for said proposed States, respectively. The constitutions shall be Republican in form, and make no distinction in civil or political rights on account of race or color, except as to Indians not taxed, and not be repugnant to the Constitution of the United States and the principles of the Declaration of Independence. And said conventions shall provide, by ordinances irrevocable without the consent of the United States and the people of said States:

"First. That perfect toleration of religious sentiment shall be secured, and that no inhabitant of said States shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her mode of religious worship.

"Second. That the people inhabiting said proposed States do agree and declare that they forever disclaim all right and title to the unappropriated public lands lying within the boundaries thereof, and to all lands lying within said limits owned or held by any Indian or Indian tribes; and that until the title thereto shall have been extinguished by the United States, the same shall be and remain subject to the disposition of the United States, and said Indian lands shall remain under the absolute jurisdiction and control of the Congress of the United States; that the lands belonging to citizens of the United States residing without the said States shall never be taxed at a higher rate than the lands belonging to residents thereof; that no taxes shall be imposed by the States on lands or property therein belonging to or which may hereafter be purchased by the United States or reserved for its use. But nothing herein, or in the ordinances herein provided for, shall preclude the said States from taxing as other lands are taxed any lands owned or held by any Indian who has severed his tribal relations, and has obtained from the United States or from any person a title thereto by patent or other grant, save and except such lands as have been or may be granted to any Indian or Indians under any act of Congress containing a provision exempting the lands thus granted from taxation; but said ordinances shall provide that all such lands shall be exempt from taxation by said States so long and to such extent as such act of Congress may prescribe.

"Third. That the debts and liabilities of said Territories shall be assumed and paid by said States, respectively.

"Fourth. That provision shall be made for the establishment and maintenance of systems of public schools, which shall be open to all the children of said States, and free from sectarian control.

"SEC. 5. That the convention which shall assemble at Bismarck shall form a constitution and State government for a State to be known as North Dakota, and the convention which shall assemble at Sioux Falls shall form a constitution and State government for a State to be known as South Dakota: Provided, That at the election for delegates to the constitutional convention in South Dakota, as hereinbefore provided, each elector may have written or printed on his ballot the words 'For the Sioux Falls constitution,' or the words 'Against the Sioux Falls constitution,' and the votes on this question shall be returned and canvassed in the same manner as for the election provided for in section 3 of this act; and if a majority of all votes cast on this question shall be 'For the Sioux Falls constitution,' it shall be the duty of the convention which may assemble at Sioux Falls, as herein provided, to resubmit to the people of South Dakota, for ratification or rejection at the election hereinafter provided for in this act, the constitution framed at Sioux Falls and adopted November 3, 1885, and also the articles and propositions separately submitted at that election, including the question of locating the temporary seat of government, with such changes only as relate to the name and boundary of the proposed State, to the reapportionment of the judicial and legislative districts, and such amendments as may be necessary in order to comply with the provisions of this act; and if a majority of the votes cast on the ratification or rejection of the constitution shall be for the constitution irrespective of the articles separately submitted, the State of South Dakota shall be admitted as a State in the Union under said constitution as hereinafter provided; but the archives, records, and books of the Territory of Dakota shall remain at Bismarck, the capital of North Dakota, until an agreement in reference thereto is reached by said States. But if at the election for delegates to the constitutional convention in South Dakota a majority of all the votes cast at that election shall be 'Against the Sioux Falls constitution,' then and in that event it shall be the duty of the convention which will assemble at the city of Sioux Falls on the 4th day of July, 1889, to proceed to form a constitution and State government as provided in this act the same as if that question had not been submitted to a vote of the people of South Dakota.

"SEC. 6. It shall be the duty of the constitutional conventions of North Dakota and South Dakota to appoint a joint commission, to be composed of not less than three members of each convention, whose duty it shall be to assemble at Bismarck, the present seat of government of said Territory, and agree upon an equitable division of all property belonging to the Territory of Dakota, the disposition of all public records, and also adjust and agree upon the amount of the debts and liabilities of the Territory, which shall be assumed and paid by each of the proposed States of North Dakota and South Dakota; and the agreement reached respecting the Territorial debts and liabilities shall be incorporated in the respective constitutions, and each of said States shall obligate itself to pay its proportion of such debts and liabilities the same as if they had been created by such States respectively.

"SEC. 7. If the constitutions formed for both North Dakota and South Dakota shall be rejected by the people at the elections for the ratification or rejection of their respective constitutions as provided for in this act, the Territorial government of Dakota shall continue in existence the same as if this act had not been passed. But if the constitution formed for either North Dakota or South Dakota shall be rejected by the people, that part of the Territory so rejecting its proposed constitution shall continue under the Territorial government of the present Territory of Dakota, but shall, after the State adopting its constitution is admitted into the Union, be called by the name of the Territory of North Dakota or South Dakota, as the case may be: Provided, That if either of the proposed States provided for in this act shall reject the constitution which may be submitted for ratification or rejection at the election provided therefor, the governor of the Territory in which such proposed constitution was rejected shall issue his proclamation reconvening the delegates elected to the convention which formed such rejected constitution, fixing the time and place at which said delegates shall assemble; and when so assembled they shall proceed to form another constitution or to amend the rejected constitution, and shall submit such new constitution or amended constitution to the people of the proposed State for ratification or rejection, at such time as said convention may determine; and all the provisions of this act, so far as applicable, shall apply to such convention so reassembled and to the constitution which may be formed, its ratification or rejection, and to the admission of the proposed State.

"SEC. 8. That the constitutional convention which may assemble in South Dakota shall provide by ordinance for resubmitting the Sioux Falls constitution of 1885, after having amended the same as provided in section 5 of this act, to the people of South Dakota for ratification or rejection at an election to be held therein on the first Tuesday in October, 1889; but if said constitutional convention is authorized and required to form a new constitution for South Dakota it shall provide for submitting the same in like manner to the people of South Dakota for ratification or rejection at an election to be held in said proposed State on the said first Tuesday in October. And the constitutional conventions which may assemble in North Dakota, Montana, and Washington shall provide in like manner for submitting the constitutions formed by them to the people of said proposed States, respectively, for ratification or rejection at elections to be held in said proposed States on the said first Tuesday in October. At the elections provided for in this section the qualified voters of said proposed States shall vote directly for or against the proposed constitutions, and for or against any articles or propositions separately submitted. The returns of said elections shall be made to the secretary of each of said Territories, who, with the governor and chief-justice thereof, or any two of them, shall canvass the same; and if a majority of the legal votes cast shall be for the constitution the governor shall certify the result to the President of the United States, together with a statement of the votes cast thereon and upon separate articles or propositions and a copy of said constitution, articles, propositions, and ordinances. And if the constitutions and governments of said proposed States are republican in form, and if all the provisions of this act have been complied with in the formation thereof, it shall be the duty of the President of the United States to issue his proclamation announcing the result of the election in each, and thereupon the proposed States which have adopted constitutions and formed State governments as herein provided shall be deemed admitted by Congress into the Union under and by virtue of this act on an equal footing with the original States from and after the date of said proclamation.

"SEC. 9. That until the next general census, or until otherwise provided by law, said States shall be entitled to one Representative in the House of Representatives of the United States, except South Dakota, which shall be entitled to two; and the Representatives to the Fifty-first Congress, together with the governors and other officers provided for in said constitutions, may be elected on the same day of the election for the ratification or rejection of the constitutions; and until said State officers are elected and qualified under the provisions of each constitution and the States, respectively, are admitted into the Union, the Territorial officers shall continue to discharge the duties of their respective offices in each of said Territories.

"SEC. 10. That upon the admission of each of said States into the Union sections numbered 16 and 36 in every township of said proposed States, and where such sections, or any parts thereof, have been sold or otherwise disposed of by or under the authority of any act of Congress, other lands equivalent thereto, in legal subdivisions of not less than one quarter-section, and as contiguous as may be to the section in lieu of which the same is taken, are hereby granted to said States for the support of common schools, such indemnity lands to be selected within said States in such manner as the Legislature may provide, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections embraced in permanent reservations for national purposes shall not, at any time, be subject to the grants nor to the indemnity provisions of this act, nor shall any lands embraced in Indian, military, or other reservations of any character be subject to the grants or to the indemnity provisions of this act until the reservation shall have been extinguished and such lands be restored to, and become a part of, the public domain.

"SEC. 11. That all lands herein granted for educational purposes shall be disposed of only at public sale, and at a price not less than $10 per acre, the proceeds to constitute a permanent school fund, the interest of which only shall be expended in the support of said schools. But said lands may, under such regulations as the Legislatures shall prescribe, be leased for periods of not more than five years, in quantities not exceeding 1 section to any one person or company; and such land shall not be subject to pre-emption, homestead entry, or any other entry under the land laws of the United States, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, but shall be reserved for school purposes only.

"SEC. 12. That upon the admission of each of said States into the Union, in accordance with the provisions of this act, fifty sections of the unappropriated public lands within said States, to be selected and located in legal subdivisions, as provided in section 10 of this act, shall be, and are hereby, granted to said States for the purpose of erecting public buildings at the capital of said States for legislative, executive, and judicial purposes.

"SEC. 13. That 5 per cent. of the proceeds of the sales of public lands lying within said States which shall be sold by the United States subsequent to the admission of said States into the Union, after deducting all the expenses incident to the same, shall be paid to the said States, to be used as a permanent fund, the interest of which only shall be expended for the support of the common schools within said States, respectively.

"SEC. 14. That the lands granted to the Territories of Dakota and Montana by the act of February 18, 1881, entitled 'An act to grant lands to Dakota, Montana, Arizona, Idaho, and Wyoming for university purposes,' are hereby vested in the States of South Dakota, North Dakota, and Montana, respectively, if such States are admitted into the Union, as provided in this act, to the extent of the full quantity of seventy-two sections to each of said States, and any portion of said lands that may not have been selected by either of said Territories of Dakota or Montana may be selected by the respective States aforesaid; but said act of February 18, 1881, shall be so amended as to provide that none of said lands shall be sold for less than $10 per acre, and the proceeds shall constitute a permanent fund to be safely invested and held by said States severally, and the income thereof to be used exclusively for university purposes. And such quantity of the lands authorized by the fourth section of the act of July 17, 1854, to be reserved for university purposes in the Territory of Washington, as, together with the lands confirmed to the vendees of the Territory by the act of March 14, 1864, will make the full quantity of seventy-two entire sections, are hereby granted in like manner to the State of Washington for the purposes of a university in said State. None of the lands granted in this section shall be sold at less than $10 per acre; but said lands may be leased in the same manner as provided in section 11 of this act. The schools, colleges, and universities provided for in this act shall forever remain under the exclusive control of the said States, respectively, and no part of the proceeds arising from the sale or disposal of any lands herein granted for educational purposes shall be used for the support of any sectarian or denominational school, college, or university. The section of land granted by the act of June 16, 1880, to the Territory of Dakota, for an asylum for the insane shall, upon the admission of said State of South Dakota into the Union, become the property of said State.

"SEC. 15. That so much of the lands belonging to the United States as have been acquired and set apart for the purpose mentioned in 'An act appropriating money for the erection of a penitentiary in the Territory of Dakota,' approved March 2, 1881, together with the buildings thereon, be, and the same is hereby, granted, together with any unexpended balances of the moneys appropriated therefor by said act, to said State of South Dakota, for the purposes therein designated; and the States of North Dakota and Washington shall, respectively, have like grants for the same purpose, and subject to like terms and conditions as provided in said act of March 2, 1881, for the Territory of Dakota. The penitentiary at Deer Lodge City, Mont., and all lands connected therewith and set apart and reserved therefor, are hereby granted to the State of Montana.

"SEC. 16. That 90,000 acres of land, to be selected and located as provided in section 10 of this act, are hereby granted to each of said States, except to the State of South Dakota, to which 120,000 acres are granted, for the use and support of agricultural colleges in said States, as provided in the acts of Congress making donations of lands for such purpose.

"SEC. 17. That in lieu of the grant of land for purposes of internal improvement made to new States by the eighth section of the act of September 4, 1841, which act is hereby repealed as to the States provided for by this act, and in lieu of any claim or demand by the said States, or either of them, under the act of September 28, 1850, and section 2479 of the Revised Statutes, making a grant of swamp and overflowed lands to certain States, which grant it is hereby declared is not extended to the States provided for in this act, and in lieu of any grant of saline lands to said States the following grants of land are hereby made, to wit:

"To the State of South Dakota: For the school of mines, 40,000 acres; for the reform school, 40,000 acres; for the deaf and dumb asylum, 40,000 acres; for the agricultural college, 40,000 acres; for the university, 40,000 acres; for State normal schools, 80,000 acres; for public buildings at the capital of said State, 50,000 acres; and for such other educational and charitable purposes as the Legislature of said State may determine, 170,000 acres; in all, 500,000 acres.

"To the State of North Dakota a like quantity of land as is in this section granted to the State of South Dakota, and to be for like purposes, and in like proportion as far as practicable.

"To the State of Montana: For the establishment and maintenance of a school of mines, 100,000 acres; for State normal schools, 100,000 acres; for agricultural colleges, in addition to the grant hereinbefore made for that purpose, 50,000 acres; for the establishment of a State reform school, 50,000 acres; for the establishment of a deaf and dumb asylum, 50,000 acres; for public buildings at the capital of the State, in addition to the grant hereinbefore made for that purpose, 150,000 acres.

"To the State of Washington: For the establishment and maintenance of a scientific school, 100,000 acres; for State normal schools, 100,000 acres; for public buildings at the State capital, in addition to the grant hereinbefore made for that purpose, 100,000 acres; for State charitable, educational, penal, and reformatory institutions, 200,000 acres.

"That the States provided for in this act shall not be entitled to any further or other grants of land for any purpose than as expressly provided in this act. And the lands granted by this section shall be held, appropriated, and disposed of exclusively for the purposes herein mentioned, in such manner as the Legislatures of the respective States may severally provide.

"SEC. 18. That all mineral lands shall be exempted from the grants made by this act. But if sections 16 and 36, or any subdivision or portion of any smallest subdivision thereof, in any township shall be found by the Department of the Interior to be mineral lands, said States are hereby authorized and empowered to select, in legal subdivisions, an equal quantity of other unappropriated lands in said States, in lieu thereof, for the use and the benefit of the common schools of said States.

"SEC. 19. That all lands granted in quantity or as indemnity by this act shall be selected, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, from the surveyed, unreserved, and unappropriated public lands of the United States within the limits of the respective States entitled thereto. And there shall be deducted from the number of acres of land donated by this act for specific objects to such States the number of acres in each heretofore donated by Congress to said Territories for similar objects.

"SEC. 20. That the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to each of said Territories for defraying the expenses of the said conventions, except to Dakota, for which the sum of $40,000 is so appropriated, $20,000 each for South Dakota and North Dakota, and for the payment of the members thereof, under the same rules and regulations and at the same rates as are now provided by law for the payment of the Territorial Legislatures. Any money hereby appropriated not necessary for such purpose shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States.

"SEC. 21. That each of said States, when admitted as aforesaid, shall constitute one judicial district, the names thereof to be the same as the names of the States, respectively; and the circuit and district courts therefor shall be held at the capital of such State for the time being, and each of said districts shall, for judicial purposes, until otherwise provided, be attached to the eighth judicial circuit, except Washington and Montana, which shall be attached to the ninth judicial circuit. There shall be appointed for each of said districts one district judge, one United States attorney, and one United States marshal. The judge of each of said districts shall receive a yearly salary of $3,500, payable in four equal installments, on the 1st days of January, April, July, and October of each year, and shall reside in the district. There shall be appointed clerks of said courts in each district, who shall keep their offices at the capital of said State. The regular terms of said courts shall be held in each district, at the place aforesaid, on the first Monday in April and the first Monday in November of each year, and only one grand jury and one petit jury shall be summoned in both said circuit and district courts. The circuit and district courts for each of said districts, and the judges there, respectively, shall possess the same powers and jurisdiction and perform the same duties required to be performed by the other circuit and district courts and judges of the United States, and shall be governed by the same laws and regulations. The marshal, district attorney, and clerks of the circuit and district courts of each of said districts, and all other officers and persons performing duties in the administration of justice therein, shall severally possess the powers and perform the duties lawfully possessed and required to be performed by similar officers in other districts of the United States; and shall, for the services they may perform, receive the fees and compensation allowed by law to other similar officers and persons performing similar duties in the State of Nebraska.

"SEC. 22. That all cases of appeal or writ of error heretofore prosecuted and now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States upon any record from the supreme court of either of the Territories mentioned in this act, or that may hereafter lawfully be prosecuted upon any record from either of said courts, may be heard and determined by said Supreme Court of the United States. And the mandate of execution or of further proceedings shall be directed by the Supreme Court of the United States to the circuit or district court hereby established within the State succeeding the Territory from which such record is or may be pending, or to the supreme court of such State, as the nature of the case may require: Provided, That the mandate of execution or of further proceedings shall, in cases arising in the Territory of Dakota, be directed by the Supreme Court of the United States to the circuit or district court of the district of South Dakota, or to the supreme court of the State of South Dakota, or to the circuit or district court of the district of North Dakota, or to the supreme court of the State of North Dakota, or to the supreme court of the Territory of North Dakota, as the nature of the case may require. And each of the circuit, district, and State courts herein named shall, respectively, be the successor of the supreme court of the Territory as to all such cases arising within the limits embraced within the jurisdiction of such courts, respectively, with full power to proceed with the same, and award mesne or final process therein; and that from all judgments and decrees of the supreme court of either of the Territories mentioned in this act, in any case arising within the limits of any of the proposed States prior to admission, the parties to such judgment shall have the same right to prosecute appeals and writs of error to the Supreme Court of the United States as they shall have had by law prior to the admission of said State into the Union.

"SEC. 23. That in respect to all cases, proceedings, and matters now pending in the supreme or district courts of either of the Territories mentioned in this act at the time of the admission into the Union of either of the States mentioned in this act, and arising within the limits of any such State, whereof the circuit or district courts by this act established might have had jurisdiction under the laws of the United States had such courts existed at the time of the commencement of such cases, the said circuit and district courts, respectively, shall be the successors of said supreme and district courts of said Territory; and in respect to all other cases, proceedings, and matters pending in the supreme or district courts of any of the Territories mentioned in this act at the time of the admission of such Territory into the Union, arising within the limits of said proposed State, the courts established by such State shall, respectively, be the successors of said supreme and district Territorial courts; and all the files, records, indictments, and proceedings relating to any such cases shall be transferred to such circuit, district, and State courts, respectively, and the same shall be proceeded with therein in due course of law; but no writ, action, indictment, cause, or proceeding now pending, or that prior to the admission of any of the States mentioned in this act shall be pending, in any Territorial court in any of the Territories mentioned in this act, shall abate by the admission of any such State into the Union, but the same shall be transferred and proceeded with in the proper United States circuit, district, or State court, as the case may be: Provided, however, That in all civil actions, causes, and proceedings, in which the United States is not a party, transfers shall not be made to the circuit and district courts of the United States except upon written request of one of the parties of such action or proceeding filed in the proper court; and in the absence of such request such cases shall be proceeded with in the proper State courts.

"SEC. 24. That the constitutional convention may, by ordinance, provide for the election of officers for full State governments, including members of the Legislatures and Representatives in the Fifty-first Congress; but said State governments shall remain in abeyance until the States shall be admitted into the Union, respectively, as provided in this act. In case the constitution of any of said proposed States shall be ratified by the people, but not otherwise, the Legislature thereof may assemble, organize, and elect two Senators of the United States; and the governor and secretary of state of such proposed State shall certify the election of the Senators and Representatives in the manner required by law; and when such State is admitted into the Union, the Senators and Representatives shall be entitled to be admitted to seats in Congress, and to all the rights and privileges of Senators and Representatives of other States in the Congress of the United States; and the officers of the State governments formed in pursuance of said constitutions, as provided by the constitutional conventions, shall proceed to exercise all the functions of such State officers; and all laws in force made by said Territories at the time of their admission into the Union shall be in force in said States, except as modified or changed by this act or by the constitutions of the States, respectively.

"SEC. 25. That all acts or parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this act, whether passed by the Legislatures of said Territories or by Congress, are hereby repealed."

And that the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the title of said bill, and agrees to the same so amended as to read as follows:

"An act to provide for the division of Dakota into two States and to enable the people of North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, and Washington to form constitutions and State governments and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, and to make donations of public lands to such States."

And that the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House striking out the preamble of said bill, and agree to the same.

Mr. PLATT. I move that the Senate concur in the report of the committee of conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection to the present consideration of the report, the question is on concurring in it.

Mr. DAWES. I desire, before the vote is taken, to make an inquiry of the Senator from Connecticut as to the scope of a single paragraph in the bill, which I will read, on the fourth page:

But nothing herein, or in the ordinances herein provided for, shall preclude the said States from taxing as other lands are taxed any lands owned or held by any Indian who has severed his tribal relations, and has obtained from the United States or from any person a title thereto by patent or other grant, save and except such lands as have been or may be granted to any Indian or Indians under any act of Congress containing a provision exempting the lands thus granted from taxation.

The inquiry I desire to make is whether it would be possible under that paragraph to tax the lands held by Indians in severalty. I will read to the Senator the title by which an Indian holds under the severalty act his land. Section 5 of the act approved February 8, 1887, provides—

That upon the approval of the allotments provided for in this act by the Secretary of the Interior, he shall cause patents to issue therefor in the name of the allottees, which patents shall be of the legal effect, and declare that the United States does and will hold the land thus allotted, for the period of twenty-five years, in trust for the sole use and benefit of the Indian to whom such allotment shall have been made, or, in case of his decease, of his heirs according to the laws of the State or Territory where such land is located, and that at the expiration of said period the United States will convey the same by patent to said Indian, or his heirs as aforesaid, in fee, discharged of said trust and free of all charge or incumbrance whatsoever.

I desire to add that this statute does not expressly exempt the land from taxation, but goes upon the theory that the fee to the land is in the United States, and that therefore from that fact it can not be taxed. But the language of this bill is, that any land owned or held by any Indian who has severed his tribal relation and has a patent may be taxed. These Indians had severed their tribal relation, and in one sense hold the lands. They have the use of them; they have a patent from the United States; but the patent declares that the United States will hold the land, and at the end of twenty-five years convey it in fee.

My inquiry of the Senator is whether it was the intention of the conferees, or whether in his opinion it would be possible under this language, for the States to tax this land held in severalty?

Mr. PLATT. It was not the intention of the conferees that the States should be permitted to tax the lands held in severalty by the Indians during the time the United States agrees to hold said lands in trust for their benefit, nor do I believe that any such construction of the proposed act could be had as to give it that effect.

The severalty act does use the word "patent." It says the United States shall give a patent to the Indians, but it speaks of a final patent in fee to be given at the end of twenty-five years, and it declares that the United States shall hold those lands for the Indians in trust. This language is, "that nothing herein, etc., shall preclude the States from taxing as other lands are taxed any lands owned or held by any Indian who has severed his tribal relations and has obtained from the United States or from any person a title thereto by patent or other grant." The severalty act provides, as I understand it, that the United States shall hold the land and the title to the land. So unless the Indian holds the lands and has a patent which gives him title to the lands there is nothing here which would authorize their taxation.

I will say one thing more about it. This was not entirely according to the ideas of the Senate conferees, but we have had a good deal of disagreement, as is usual in such cases, and a pretty serious disagreement. This section comes from the other House, and the managers at the conference on the part of the Senate felt as if it were better to take it than to stand out against the House conferees.

Mr. DAWES. I agree with the Senator in the proper construction to be put upon this language, and I desired to have upon the record the opinion of the conferees, lest some one might say that lands owned or held by any such Indian might apply to an Indian who occupied the land and held it in that sense, although the legal holding is in the United States under the severalty act. I have no desire to add anything further after the expression of opinion by the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, it is well known to the Senate that in the Territory of Washington, by the law of that Territory, women having the same qualifications as male voters and citizens and office-holders were eligible to all the political functions of the State as voters, jurors, legislators, and as the holders of executive office. That policy had been, according to the testimony of many prominent citizens of that Territory, eminently successful. The late chief-justice of the Territory, one of the ablest men on the Pacific coast, a fine lawyer and magistrate, had in a most considerate and careful communication, made to the public about two years ago, given his emphatic testimony as to the satisfaction which all classes of persons felt in that condition of things there under this policy.

When the Democratic administration came in President Cleveland proceeded to replace the Republican judges with judges of his own political faith, in some cases, I think in all cases but one, removing the incumbent, and in one case allowing the incumbent to serve out his term, when he was replaced with a Democratic successor, in accordance with the policy which this Administration has followed and in accordance with the policy which, I think, all its predecessors had followed, of having judges of their own political faith in the Territories.

The court so constituted made a most remarkable decision, and to the amazement of the people of that Territory held that the Territorial law which established the right of women to vote and to hold office was in violation of the organic act under which the Territory was organized. I believe the ground was that while the organic law permitted the Territorial Legislature to decide what persons should vote women were not persons in the legislative sense.

Mr. MITCHELL. That they were not citizens.

Mr. HOAR. That they were not citizens.

Mr. MITCHELL. The organic act provided that the Territorial Legislature might provide what persons should exercise the right of suffrage, but provided that they should be citizens, and the court held that that term did not include women.

Mr. HOAR. That is substantially the same. It was a mere device.

Mr. PLATT. Upon that point I might say the court held that the meaning of the word "citizens" was limited by the words "white male inhabitants," which appeared in the beginning of the section.

Mr. HOAR. I do not desire at this time to utter any words of condemnation of that decision. It is a very rare case indeed when criticism in political bodies of judicial decisions is either wise or justifiable. I prefer to treat that decision as having been the honest opinion of able and competent magistrates, and I will say nothing which is inconsistent with that view. Indeed I ought to say that I have not given the subject study enough to warrant me even in coming to any conclusion in my own mind which is inconsistent with that view. But all I have to say is that the decision, whether right or wrong, was a surprise to the people of the Territory, who without any considerable remonstrance had pursued quietly and successfully this policy for several years.

It seemed fair and just that in submitting to the people of Washington Territory the question whether the constitution which shall now be framed shall be adopted, and in the election of delegates to frame that constitution persons who have previously enjoyed the right of suffrage should be entitled to vote, and that persons who had previously been eligible to office should be eligible as members and officers of that constitutional convention. I had proposed whenever a bill for the organization of Washington Territory came up this winter in the Senate to move an amendment to that effect. I felt and now feel quite confident that if that question came up a majority of this body, whether themselves favoring the policy which permits women to vote or not, would certainly favor the policy of allowing the people of a Territory to determine for themselves the qualification of voters in that matter.

But the question has never presented itself to the Senate in a way which made that motion practicable. Indeed, I do not think there ever has been a time when it would have been in order strictly, unless on the mere question of non-concurrence, which was adopted here without any debate or discussion. I did not undertake to interfere with that proceeding and precipitate a debate on this subject, which might have resulted in the defeat of this measure altogether and in keeping out these several States for an indefinite period. I, therefore, did all that could be done under the circumstances that I could think of. I obtained the signatures of twenty-two Senators to this application, addressed to the Senate conferees:

SENATE CHAMBER, February 5, 1889.

GENTLEMEN: It is well known to you that the people of Washington Territory had voluntarily adopted woman suffrage, and that it had been in force in that Territory to the great satisfaction of the people for a number of years, when it was abolished in consequence of an extraordinary decision of the Democratic supreme court.

We think that in justice the women of that Territory should be permitted to vote on its constitution, and in electing delegates to the convention which shall frame it.

We hope you will be able to secure in conference a provision that all persons, or classes of persons, who have enjoyed the actual exercise of the right of suffrage under any act of a Territorial Legislature shall be permitted to vote in the election of members of a constitutional convention and on the adoption of a constitution by the people, notwithstanding any decision of the courts as to the validity of such act.

To Senators PLATT and CULLOM.

This paper was signed by twenty-two Senators. The two Republican members of the conference on the part of the Senate—the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Illinois—had themselves voted for a constitutional amendment providing for and securing woman suffrage throughout the United States. This document, of course, was not presented to them for signature, as they were members of the conference committee, but with them the signers of the document make two-thirds of the Republican members on this side of the Chamber.

I supposed that would secure the insertion of such a provision in any conference report which should be made, unless it should turn out on inquiry that the insisting upon it further would prejudice the agreement under which four States, and not one alone, are to come in, and thereby expose those Territories to waiting for assuming their proper constitutional place in the Union for an indefinite period, which I presume no person who signed this paper desired. I certainly myself did not.

I supposed that if the conferees on the part of the Senate found that it would be impossible to secure this provision, they would still think it was very important that the Territories should be admitted, and would therefore report to the Senate a plan for their admission even without it. I desire to inquire of my friend from Connecticut what has been the fate of that proposition in the conference?

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, very many things which the conferees on the part of the Senate would have desired to secure in the agreement which the conferees should reach had to be given up in the interest of obtaining a bill which should accomplish the great work of introducing into the sisterhood of States four new members. This is not the only matter which the Senate conferees did desire to have incorporated in the bill; but it is a bill which we think will accomplish the result desired; that under it four States will be added to the Union.

With regard to the particular question involved, a uniform rule is adopted for all the Territories, prescribing who may vote for delegates to the constitutional conventions. There is considerable difference in the qualifications of voters in the several Territories, and this language is used:

SEC. 3. That all persons who are qualified by the laws of said Territories to vote for representatives to the Legislative Assemblies thereof are hereby authorized to vote for and choose delegates to form conventions in said proposed States.

That allows in each Territory those persons to vote for delegates to the constitutional convention who now under the laws of the Territory are permitted to vote. To have inserted what the Senator from Massachusetts desired to have inserted would have made a different rule for Washington Territory than that prescribed for the other Territories; that is to say, it would have provided that certain persons—citizens, I admit—who under the decision of the supreme court of Washington Territory are not now entitled to vote for representatives to the Legislative Assembly should be permitted to vote for delegates. It is true, as the Senator has stated, that for several years women have exercised, in virtue of a Territorial law, the right of voting in the Territory of Washington.

It is also true that recently the supreme court of Washington Territory has decided that the law which was passed by the Territorial Legislature was not valid because it did not comply with the provisions of the organic act of the Territory. That decision, as I understand, has been appealed from and is now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States, and I hope will be advanced and decided at an early day by the Supreme Court of the United States, and I may express the opinion, for one, that I shall be very glad if the Supreme Court of the United States finds that that judgment can be reversed.

The majority of the Senate conferees presented this matter to the conference. They insisted upon it, I think, as far as it was wise or judicious to insist upon it. It was not acceded to by the conferees on the part of the other House or by a majority of them, so that it left a distinct difference and disagreement between the Senate conferees and the conferees of the House of Representatives, the Senate conferees desiring and insisting, by a majority, that it should be put in, and the House conferees insisting and desiring, by a majority, that it should not be put in, but that the same rule should apply to each Territory, and that is that only the persons qualified now to vote for members of the Legislative Assembly should be permitted to take part in voting for the delegates to be elected to the constitutional convention and to vote upon the constitution, and we did not think it was worth while to carry our insistance and disagreement to such a point as to endanger this great measure by doing so.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, for many years the women in all of these four Territories which it is now proposed to admit as States have been anxious to secure the right of suffrage. This is true to a great extent of the women in both the Dakotas, somewhat in Montana, and in the Territory of Washington they have been in the actual exercise of this great right as long as have the men in that Territory, until their recent disfranchisement by a decision of an inferior court. Since this disfranchisement in the Territory of Washington——

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator is mistaken in the statement that the women have voted as long as the men.

Mr. BLAIR. How long have they voted?

Mr. MITCHELL. For some years, but not as long as the men.

Mr. BUTLER. I will inform the Senator that they have voted in two elections; the elections of 1884 and 1886.

Mr. BLAIR. Very likely I am incorrect as to the length of the time they have voted; but since the enactment of the Territorial law giving them the right. It has now been held by this court that the law is invalid as being in contravention of the organic act, as I understand the ground of the decision. If that be so, if that be the ground on which the law of the Territory is held to be invalid, it certainly does not follow that in this enabling act we might not confer upon women the right of suffrage; and I do not think we excuse ourselves for depriving them of a really vested right, as I believe it to be, a natural right, a right which they have exercised, and the deprivation of which they must deeply and keenly feel. I say we do not justify ourselves at all in the admission of these States for our failure to extend to them the privilege they have hitherto exercised by quoting the decision of a court which can not prevent our giving them right to vote beyond dispute by this enabling act.

Since that decision was announced there has been a great deal of feeling exhibited on the part of the women of the Territory of Washington. Numerous letters and memorials remonstrating have been forwarded to members of Congress, and many have been received by myself, and it will be a most bitter disappointment to one-half the population of that Territory and to a great many citizens in the others that this omnibus enabling act is passed without making provision for the extension of the right of suffrage to women in this great initiatory act of their statehood; and for one, if I felt that it was the duty of an individual to obtrude himself against the phalanx of the vast majority without reference to party distinction, I would certainly oppose the adoption of this conference report and the passage of this bill.

I look upon the matter that is involved as one of the most serious which can attract the attention of American legislators. I believe the right of suffrage belongs to women as much as it does to men. I believe that the distinction of sex with reference to the exercise of any of the rights or privileges or immunities of citizenship is no distinction. The suffrage is no physical act. The suffrage is a mental act. It is the decision of the mind, guided by conscience, intelligence, and the moral sense, uniting to decide upon the issues which concern the weal and welfare of woman as well as of man. Upon the decision of such issues woman has the same right to be heard as man. She has life, she has liberty, she has property involved as much as has man, and in a republican form of government such as we pretend ours to be it is simply an insult to that half of the creation, which is as intelligent as we are ourselves, to deprive them of the exercise of rights for which any of us in our own persons would die.

Mr. DAWES. If the case appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States should be advanced, and that decision be reversed, is not the Senator aware that then the women of the Territory of Washington under the bill would be entitled to vote?

Mr. BLAIR. I will answer the Senator, and answer him now, though I think it was quite an incongruous interruption at that particular point.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator will allow me to apologize for the intrusion, I will do so, and I will refrain from interrupting him again.

Mr. BLAIR. I shall be obliged to the Senator if he will do so. I accept the apology, together with such emendations and additions as the Senator feels proper to make, but I would not exact it to the full extent to which he has gone.

Mr. DAWES. I asked the Senator a question in good faith, and desiring to attain the same end that the Senator desires to attain I was inquiring of him whether it could not be attained in that way; but the Senator seems offended, and I regret exceedingly that I have offended him.

Mr. BLAIR. I am glad to receive the expression of the Senator's good will. He regrets having offended me, and I assure him he has not offended me. I simply embraced the opportunity to assure him that, in my judgment, as a matter of taste and propriety, his interruption was at an exceedingly inopportune moment in my remarks, but I also at the same moment assured him that I would proceed to answer his question then in good faith, and I will do so now.

The Senator inquires whether if the Supreme Court of the United States should reverse the decision of the supreme court of the Territory of Washington, then women might not be permitted to vote in the Territory of Washington under this bill. I presume such is the language of the bill. I understood the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] to say that it was intended to produce that effect. But the Senator knows very well, I suppose—if he does not I will assure him that it is my opinion—that this case will not be advanced on the docket of the Supreme Court of the United States, and if it were advanced on the docket of the Supreme Court of the United States I do not believe it would be heard and decided in season to avail the women of that Territory; and were it so, and were the language of this enabling act sufficient to influence the officials who may control its administration so far as that Territory is concerned to give woman the right of expressing her opinion upon this great act of the beginning of statehood there, I do not believe that, as a practical matter, within the time that question will be settled, they will ever have the opportunity of exercising their right.

But if that were so as far as Washington is concerned, I am speaking for them all, not the Territory of Washington alone, but Montana and both the Dakotas, for throughout all this great belt of country which is our rampart on the Northwest, woman is as anxious to vote all along the line as she is in Washington. She is more keenly alive to the deprivation of her rights there perhaps, because she has once exercised them, and we all know how it would be in the case of the colored man of the South. An act which could not be consummated without bloody revolution to deprive the citizens of color of the right they have already exercised, and because they have exercised it and not because it is a natural right, for they went without the exercise of it as a natural right for centuries.

But now that it is given to them no power exists which can take it from them without blood. And had woman her right, had she force at her command and organization behind her, you would find revolution in the Northwest ere she would surrender this right of suffrage after having once exercised it.

Mr. PAYNE. The women are deprived of their right of suffrage in Utah.

Mr. BLAIR. But in Utah the people are substantially under martial law. They are under the heel of the Government, and there they must remain until they have modified some of their institutions.

Mr. President, I suppose it may seem to the Senate and may seem to the country as though this was a trifling matter, but it appears to me to be the admission of but half the population of this great Territory into the Union. To woman it is no extension of right or of privilege or of power. To man it is the extension of an invaluable privilege, and it is of importance to these States as States. But some time there must be a precedent made for the extension of this great right to the half of creation which does not now exercise it, and particularly, as I believe, in governments republican in form the principle must be carried to its full extent, or with increasing intelligence and moral sense that government which fails to do it will be condemned because not republican in form, will be revolutionized and subverted.

It does not follow because women are not capable of action in the field, because they are not a fighting force, that there are not, if you please, invisible and almighty battalions on their side. Justice is with them. Life, liberty, property, and the pursuit of happiness are of as much consequence to them as to us. They have the same right of decision upon what pertains to the settlement of their great privileges and immunities as have we ourselves. We do withhold their right.

Mr. President, as I said before, here is this long yet important strip of territory which in my own mind I had consecrated for years to the exercise of this great franchise, and these Territories are to be admitted as States and woman is to be deprived of her sacred right. We talk of what she may do after the States are in the Union. I understood the Senator to express the opinion that these States once in the Union and the sentiment for suffrage strong, it would be extended to woman by the action of the men in the States; but the real secret and the true reason why woman is deprived of the right of suffrage is because it is the secret of power.

It is of little consequence to woman or to man, save only as it is the opportunity to exercise power over one's own destiny and over the destiny of the society of which one is a component part. Men refuse to women this right because and principally because it is a division of power. When these States are in the Union it will be only with the utmost reluctance that man will divide and extend to the other half of creation one-half of that which he now possesses alone, and you will find that women living in a State in the Union are at a great disadvantage with reference to the attainment of their privileges from what they would be if they should remain in a territorial condition until they could reach the opportunity to exercise their right upon the question of the admission of their States.

There is only one other Territory, and that is Wyoming, where women can vote. What may happen to deprive them of the privilege they exercise there when Wyoming comes to be admitted to the Union we do not know. But it is a significant and discouraging fact, to me at least, that Washington especially, where the exercise of the right has been so long enjoyed and is so highly prized, is to come into the Union and women are to be excluded from their membership as citizens and as voters in that northern queen of the occidental States.

Now, Mr. President, not to occupy too long the time of the Senate, I will call attention to one other feature in this report which I am very glad to commend. I find on page 5, paragraph 4, this provision:

> Fourth. That provision shall be made for the establishment and maintenance of systems of public schools, which shall be open to all the children of said States, and free from sectarian control.

There, sir, is a feature of redeeming, of saving grace, and of the very greatest importance, as it seems to me. It is the substance of a constitutional amendment now pending before this body designed to secure the same in substance to the people of all the States, and those already in the Union as well as to those which may hereafter be admitted. That amendment I consider the most important measure now pending in the United States in any legislative body or before the great forum of the people. We have made some advance in the hearings upon that amendment before the Committee on Education and Labor and we shall make still more, and I take this opportunity to express my gratification that this leading feature is recognized and is to be adopted in the fundamental law of these States. This makes a precedent, compliance with which will require the extension of the provisions of this amendment to all the States in the Union.

Nor, Mr. President, is this a matter upon which there is but slight public interest. All over the country our people are learning that a great question has arisen. It is this: Which shall be the survivor, the common school or the parochial, the denominational school in this country? That is the really leading issue of the immediate future so far as the politics of this country are concerned.

I have in my hand the expression of sentiment of many of the leading citizens of one of the great cities of this country, which, in this connection, I will read to the Senate. It is a memorial addressed to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, in behalf of the citizens of Philadelphia, and it showeth:

To the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

This memorial, on behalf of citizens of Philadelphia, showeth: Two grave dangers threaten at this hour the American system of common schools, the atheistic tendency in education and the strenuous demand for a division of the school funds in the interest of sectarian or denominational schools. Through the former tendency the reading of the Christian Scriptures and the offering of prayer have been forbidden in the schools of some of our principal cities, while one at least has gone so far as to throw out of her schools every text-book containing any reference to God. This attempt to exclude all religious ideas from the instruction given in the public shools we hold to be both unphilosophical and inimical to the public good, because it neglects the moral faculties, which are the most important faculties of man, and the right exercise of which is most important to the State; and because it does not correspond to the character of the institutions for which the common school is designed to prepare the citizens of this Republic.

Mr. PAYNE. What is the paper from which the Senator is reading?

Mr BLAIR. It is the memorial of citizens of Philadelphia.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the Senator state in what States the practices referred to are said to prevail?

Mr. BLAIR. It is alluding to many of the prominent cities in different States, quite a number, some fifteen or twenty cities in different parts of the country where this has been done, as I am informed.

On the other hand, to accept the proposal for a division of the school funds would be for the State to destroy the whole school system which we have built up with so much care and at such vast expense; to renounce all responsible or effective control of the work of education, and to become a mere tax-gatherer for the sects. The one great argument by which this proposal is sustained is that Christian parents can not accept for their children an education which, while ostensibly neutral, is virtually hostile to religion. The adoption of the secular theory of education, therefore, so far from reconciling those who advocate the division of the funds, only stimulates them to fresh efforts, and supplies them with fresh arguments against the public schools. These two adverse tendencies, therefore, assist each other, and between them there is danger that our school system may perish or be seriously crippled at the very time when it is most urgently needed; for, more than any other single institution, it may be regarded as the digestive organ of the body-politic through which we assimilate to the national character the foreign elements which every year brings in increasing volume to our shores.

Against both these dangers we shall provide most effectively by simply keeping our school system on the foundations where it was placed by our fathers. We believe that the time has come when constitutional safeguards ought to be erected in the nation's fundamental law around this most precious institution. We have, therefore, observed with pleasure the introduction of a joint resolution now pending before one of your honorable bodies (Senate Res. 86) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States which, while it recognizes the Christian character and purpose of our system of public education, forbids the appropriation of public money to any school or institution in which the peculiar doctrines or ceremonials of any religious sect or denomination are practiced or taught; and we earnestly pray that you will speedily submit this or some similar amendment to the Legislatures of the several States for their approval.

In this connection we are reminded that General Grant, when President, recommended to Congress the passage of an amendment to the national Constitution "prohibiting the granting of any school funds or school taxes, or any part thereof, either by legislative, municipal, or other authority, for the benefit or in aid, directly or indirectly, of any religious sect or denomination." The Republican national convention, at Cincinnati, June 15, 1876, recommended "an amendment to the Constitution of the United States forbidding the application of any public funds or property for the benefit of any schools or institutions under sectarian control."

The Democratic national platform, adopted in the same year at St. Louis, declared for the maintenance of the public schools "without prejudice or preference for any class, sect, or creed, and without largesses from the Treasury to any." A joint resolution to this effect, introduced into the House of Representatives by Hon. James G. Blaine, was adopted in that body by an almost unanimous vote. Amended in the Senate by the addition of a proviso that it should not be construed against the reading of the Bible in the schools, it was adopted there by a vote of 28 to 16, or a little less than the requisite two-thirds. The danger is now more manifest, the need is more urgent than then. The lapse of a dozen years has strengthened every argument which was then employed in support of this measure.

At a largely attended public meeting, the call for which was signed by a large number of the leading citizens of Philadelphia, the undersigned were appointed a committee to act for their fellow-citizens in this matter. In support, therefore, of the desired action we lay before you this memorial, and beg leave also to submit the resolutions adopted at the aforesaid meeting, which are as follows:

Resolved, That this nation, in its origin and history, is Christian. Our colonial compacts of government and charters, our State constitutions and statutes, our common law, our days of fasting and thanksgiving, our State and national institutions and usages generally, have given our political being a marked and distinctive Christian character.

Resolved, That the type of Christianity which has characterized our State and national life is that which secures to our people an open Bible, the right of private judgment, freedom of speech and of the press, and the entire independence of our Government against all foreign domination, whether ecclesiastical or civil. The sovereign people and their government are not amenable to spiritual pontiffs or civil potentates, but to God and His law.

Resolved, That our common schools, as one of the most important institutions of our country, should correspond to the Christian origin, history, and character of the Republic itself. Our schools should teach the history of our country and the character of our institutions; our laws, and the reasons for them; the prerogatives and responsibilities of the sovereign people and their government, and the loyality due, under God, to the authority of our own rulers. The Bible ought not only to be read, but taught, in all the schools. The public schools must prove a failure if they do not train our rising generation to be honest, virtuous, and loyal citizens. Such training, as the ordinance for the Territory of the Northwest and Washington's Farewell Address assure us, can be found only in the principles of religion.

Resolved, That while our schools are and should be Christian, no preference or advantage should be given to any one sect or denomination in connection with the public schools. Above all, no sect can justly or fairly claim any portion of the public money for the support of its own sectarian schools.

Resolved, That against the demand made by a portion of our Roman Catholic fellow-citizens for a division of the school fund there is this additional and invincible argument: That the teaching of that church concerning the supremacy of the Roman Pontiff as the infallible vicegerent of Christ over governments and nations as well as individuals, in all matters of faith and morals, is directly subversive of the principles of liberty on which the Republic has been founded; and to endow or support from the public Treasury schools in which this doctrine is taught would be to provide means for the subversion of our free institutions.

Resolved, That in both these respects our school system should be kept on the foundations on which it was placed by our fathers. We seek no change, and we will withstand all attempts to revolutionize, in either of these features, our system of public education.

Resolved, That we approve of the general features of the constitutional amendment now pending in the Senate of the United States, "respecting establishments of religion and free public schools," in that, while it recognizes the Christian character and purpose of our system of education, it forbids the appropriation of public money to any school in which the peculiar tenets or ceremonials of any religious sect or denomination are practiced or taught.

Resolved, That a committee of nine be appointed by this meeting to co-operate with the National Reform Association in its further efforts in behalf of this or any similar measure which may be directed to the same ends, and that this committtee shall have power to add to its numbers.

Then follow the signatures of a large number of the leading citizens of the city of Philadelphia. The constitutional amendment referred to is in these words:

Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States respecting establishments of religion and free public schools.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of the House concurring therein), That the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States be, and hereby is, proposed to the States, to become valid when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the States as provided in the Constitution:

ARTICLE —.

SECTION 1. No State shall ever make or maintain any law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof.

SEC. 2. Each State in this Union shall establish and maintain a system of free public schools adequate for the education of all the children living therein, between the ages of six and sixteen years, inclusive, in the common branches of knowledge, and in virtue, morality, and the principles of the Christian religion. But no money raised by taxation imposed by law or any money or other property or credit belonging to any municipal organization, or to any State, or to the United States, shall ever be appropriated, applied, or given to the use of purposes of any school, institution, corporation, or person, whereby instruction or training shall be given in the doctrines, tenets, belief, ceremonials, or observances peculiar to any sect, denomination, organization, or society, being, or claiming to be, religious in its character, nor shall such peculiar doctrines, tenets, belief, ceremonials, or observances, be taught or inculcated in the free public schools.

SEC. 3. To the end that each State, the United States, and all the people thereof, may have and preserve governments republican in form and in substance, the United States shall guaranty to every State, and to the people of every State and of the United States, the support and maintenance of such a system of free public schools as is herein provided.

SEC. 4. That Congress shall enforce this article by legislation when necessary.

Mr. President, the conference committee have embodied in this great enabling act, so defective with reference to one-half of the population living within the Territory concerned; so defective, I had almost said, in the light of the times in which we live; so wickedly defective in that regard, the committee have embodied in this great bill a provision substantially the same, the very essence of the provision in the constitutional amendment which I have just read, and this feature I most highly commend and I shall look to it in the struggles of the future, if I participate in them, as the great precedent for the general adoption of the substance of the constitutional amendment which has been proposed, is now pending before us, and which I have just read to the Senate.

I am not one of those who think these States should have been admitted at this time under these circumstances; I gladly defer to the judgment of those who, in so much greater numbers, are individually quite my peers upon a question of this kind. But I should have preferred that we should have taken a little more time, that we should have given to these separate Territories a little more of individual consideration, and that in this great act we should have done much more of justice and should have placed these coming States upon a foundation of enduring prosperity and of stable institutions, republican in form, working justice to everybody, regardless of sex. I should, I say, have preferred this could I have had my own judgment complied with, and I should defeat this bill for six months or a year if we could achieve these grand results. But, sir, the majority rules, and I bow to the majority, specifying the reasons why I should have been glad that while doing so much of justice that we might have done more.

I will no longer claim the attention of the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I shall not occupy the time of the Senate more than a moment, as I am very anxious that we shall have a vote upon this report before we adjourn. I shall not go into a discussion of the merits of the question that has been debated by the Senator who has just taken his seat or by the Senator from Massachusetts. It is sufficient to say that the subject of the admission of these Territories into the Union, or most of them, has been before the Congress of the United States for many years. There has been much discussion with reference to the question. Finally the Senate bill was amended by the House and the whole subject got into a conference committee of the two Houses. The conferees of the two Houses disagreed at the first meeting and afterwards they were again appointed, and we have finally come to a conclusion and made our report.

I have felt, as one of the conferees, that I could not afford by my action, on account of the differences between the two Houses, to take away from these Territories their opportunity for statehood. The people of these four Territories number about 1,000,000, and, as is suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], it has been, I think, notorious to the country and to both Houses of Congress that if the conferees had agreed to the proposition advocated by the Senators from Massachusetts and New Hampshire the report of the conferees would not have been concurred in by either branch of Congress. So every consideration, it seems to me, looked to the duty on my part of agreeing to the conference report as presented here before the Senate and which has been ratified by the House to-day.

Mr. President, it is a pretty serious matter to take a step that will result in the deprivation of so many people from being members of our great Union; and I desire to say furthermore that the admission of four States into this Union is a great event, such a one as has never occurred in this country before in reference to the admission of States into the Union. I believe it has occurred that perhaps two States have been taken in at one time, but it has never occurred in the history of the country that the Congress of the United States has provided for the admission of four great commonwealths into the Union at once.

These Territories, by common consent, I think, of the members of both Houses of Congress as well as the country, are possessed of all the elements that justify their admission into the Union in population, resources, civilization, and all that makes them worthy of statehood.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator from Illinois permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CULLOM. Yes, sir.

Mr. VEST. I see by this conference report—and I believe the Senator is one of the conferees—that the Territory of New Mexico is stricken out of the list of Territories to come into the Union. I also see from the RECORD that the Senator from Illinois, when a member of the other House in 1876, voted for the admission of that Territory with a much smaller population.

Mr. CULLOM. What year was that?

Mr. VEST. Eighteen hundred and seventy-six.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator is mistaken, because the Senator from Illinois was not there then.

Mr. VEST. In 1874, I should have said.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Illinois was not there then; so that is a mistaken report. The Senator from Illinois went out of the House of Representatives on the 4th of March, 1871, and has no recollection of ever having voted upon the question of the admission of New Mexico as a State.

Mr. VEST. So far as the Senator's individual record is concerned he can state it for himself. I had the vote before, but I spoke from memory when I stated that the Senator voted for it. I know several distinguished Senators on the other side did vote for that bill. The Senator from Massachusetts to my right [Mr. DAWES] voted for it; the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] voted for it; and the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] voted for it, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. HOAR. To which Senator from Massachusetts does the Senator from Missouri refer?

Mr. VEST. I think both the Senators from Massachusetts, according to my recollection, voted for it. I can send for the record of the vote.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, I desire to say if he is to write the chronicles of our recent political history he will have to study them much more carefully. I made a very earnest and zealous speech against the admission of New Mexico in the House of Representatives.

Mr. VEST. So far as writing chronicles is concerned, I have no ambition in that regard, nor have I ever had time to go back into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, except for a specific purpose. My life has been rather too busy to devote myself to hunting up ancient debates of either House of Congress. I speak from memory, for some one removed the paper containing the statement of the vote from my table.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if he does not think, before he undertakes to guess about my record for consistency, that it would be becoming in him to go back?

Mr. VEST. I am not guessing. I stated what I believed to be a fact. I am informed now by one of my colleagues that it was possibly the other Senator from Illinois who voted for that bill.

Mr. CULLOM. That is probable.

Mr. VEST. Yes, it was the other Senator from Illinois. I mistook the Senator.

Now, Mr. President, I should like to ask the conferees why it is that when fourteen years ago the admission of New Mexico was determined upon, the Republicans holding both branches of Congress, by a vote in the House of 160 to 54, and on February 24, 1874, the Senate being Republican, the vote was 32 for the admission of New Mexico to 11 against it, and on March 10, 1876, when the Senate was still Republican, a bill for the admission of New Mexico also passed the Senate by a large majority?

I call attention to the vote in the House on May 21, 1874, 160 in the affirmative for the admission of New Mexico and only 54 against it. At that time New Mexico had not one-half of the population that it has to-day, and that population was composed in about the same relative proportions of whites and Mexicans.

In the RECORD which I hold in my hand I see in the House of Representatives that the great objection to New Mexico is that the population to-day is largely Mexican.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. VEST. I ask for information why it is that, with this state of facts, the conference report strikes out New Mexico, with a population to-day, according to the report of the governor of that Territory, of 175,000, twenty-odd thousand more than the ratio for a member of the House of Representatives? I should like to know the reasons for that thing.

Mr. CULLOM. I shall not go into a discussion of the merits of that question.

Mr. VEST. That is what we want to know.

Mr. CULLOM. Suffice it to say that, so far as former votes in either House of Congress are concerned, I do not think they ought to be counted in our deliberations on the question of the admission of States to-day.

I desire to say further that the Senator from Missouri, as well as every other Senator, knows that there is a very great difference in the social conditions and in the general situation of the Territory of New Mexico and of the other Territories that are included in this bill. Whatever the population of New Mexico may be, whether it be 150,000 or 175,000, the Senator knows that a large share of the population of that Territory are what we call Mexicans, Spaniards, and that a very small portion of the people of New Mexico to-day speak the English language at all.

There are not over fifteen or twenty thousand people in that Territory, as I am informed by citizens of the Territory, who speak the English language or who are not Mexicans, as they are termed in contradistinction to Americans or to people of foreign birth.

But I will not discuss that subject further. I do not desire to open up a general discussion of the question, because I think it very important that we shall pass this bill to-night.

I simply rose to say that it seemed to me that the importance of the agreement to this conference report taking in these four Territories, which everybody admits are not in any particular in a condition to be questioned as to their right to statehood, whether it be in point of population, or in advancement in civilization, or in the development of their Territories in any way, is such that as one of the conferees I did not feel that I should be justified in standing out and refusing to consent to the propositions that were made and thereby postpone the admission of these Territories for another year or perhaps two years.

So that, so far as the question which has been suggested by the Senators from New Hampshire and from Massachusetts is concerned, it is sufficient to say that there was a difference between the conferees of the two Houses upon the question, and that I did not feel, for one, that that difference ought to prevent an agreement and prevent the admission of these Territories as States into the Union. Therefore, so far as I was concerned, I signed the report of the conference committee, and I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, as a member of the conference on the part of the Senate which has made this report now before the Senate, I think it proper to state my position in regard to it.

I was actuated very much by the motives which have just been alleged by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], and I think it due to frankness to state that I signed the report with a great deal of reluctance; not that I do not believe that the four Territories embraced in this bill have all the qualifications necessary for statehood, for I believe they are all qualified in population, in intelligence, in resources, and in every other respect; but there are some provisions of this bill which do not meet the approbation of my judgment, one especially, which will be found in the eighth section, to the effect that upon the report of the vote upon the constitutions framed by these constitutional conventions authorized by this enabling act being certified to the President of the United States, accompanied by a copy of the constitutions adopted by that vote, which shall in his judgment be republican in form, he shall thereupon issue his proclamation, and the States shall then be regarded as States in the Union by this act of Congress.

I have always held, and I hold now, that the regular constitutional method for the admission of States is, in the first place, to secure an enabling act from Congress authorizing the population of the Territory proposed to be made into a State to vote on the question of a constitution, and having voted upon that question, before they shall be admitted the constitution so adopted should be submitted to Congress for its approval. That has been my position, and it is now. I think it would have been very much better if that could be done in this instance; but, like the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Connecticut, I did not feel justified in obstructing, if I could do so, the passage of this bill, involving such vast interests to so many people of this country, and I therefore yielded that point with the distinct understanding that I do not admit, so far as I am concerned, that it shall be regarded as a precedent. I therefore should like it to be understood that all of the concessions made to secure the passage of this bill were not made by our friends on the other side of this Chamber. I think that there was a spirit of concession on both sides in the interest of the passage of a bill which would admit these four Territories as States of the Union.

I differed with my friend from Illinois about New Mexico. I opposed the elimination of that part of the bill from it. I believe that New Mexico is to-day qualified to become a State in the American Union. She has the population, she has the resources and all of the elements, in my judgment, necessary to become a State in the American Union.

Mr. MORGAN. What was the objection to it?

Mr. BUTLER. The objection has just been stated by the Senator from Illinois, that a very large portion of the population of New Mexico were not of the Caucasian race, that a large majority of them were Mexicans and Indians, that in very many of the schools of New Mexico the English language was not taught, etc.

Mr. CULLOM. There are very few of them where it is taught.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Illinois says very few. We had not very definite information upon that point, but I think from the best information I could get there is a population of 175,000 in that Territory, and, as I said awhile ago, they have all the necessary elements and qualifications to become a State, but, still hoping that justice would be done that Territory within a very short time, I gave that up, and, as I say, reluctantly signed this conference report. I did so in obedience to that feeling which has been indicated, that this question ought to be settled; that these people are entitled to be admitted into the Union upon terms of equality with the other States of the Union; and therefore, as I say, I made the concessions which I have indicated.

In regard to the question of woman suffrage, it is due to my colleagues of the conference committee to say for them that that question was presented earnestly by them for the consideration of the conference and the proposition was rejected. For my part, I had no trouble in putting my veto upon it, preferring to leave that question just where it has been placed by the courts of the Territory of Washington, from whose decision I understand an appeal has been taken to the Supreme Court of the United States. I believe those people are just as competent to settle that question as the Senate or the Congress of the United States, and I prefer to leave it there. We provided that the qualifications for voters as existing in those Territories should apply to those voting on the constitution to be adopted.

I repeat that that provision of the bill which proposes practically to admit these Territories upon the proclamation of the President of the United States does not meet my approval.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I have received no other answer to the question I put to these conferees except that the social conditions in New Mexico are different from those in the other Territories mentioned in this report.

Mr. PLATT. Did I understand the Senator from Missouri to put the question to me?

Mr. VEST. I have not the slightest objection to the Senator answering it.

Mr. PLATT. My position about New Mexico is this: There was a very great difference of opinion on that subject among the members of the Senate and among the members of the House of Representatives; there was no difference of opinion as to whether these four Territories ought to come in as States, and to mix the question of New Mexico with it was very likely to imperil the admission of the other Territories at this Congress. That was my position on New Mexico, and the position of others.

Mr. VEST. That is hardly a fair answer to the question which I propounded, nor is it a good answer, because it goes without saying that, with almost a solid vote on this side of the Chamber in favor of the admission of New Mexico, if a sufficient number of Republicans, or even a very small number, could be found to favor the admission, the fate of the bill would not have been endangered at all.

The only answer we get which amounts to an answer at all is that the social conditions in New Mexico are such as to prevent or as should have prevented the admission of that Territory as a State. In 1874 the conditions which are now paraded here as a reason for excluding New Mexico were much more strong upon that side of the question than to-day. There was a larger Mexican population, because it is a notorious fact to every Western man at all acquainted with the Territory of New Mexico that hundreds of peons, as they were called—the lower order of Mexicans—have gone back into old Mexico, frightened by the advance of Anglo-Saxon civilization, and because they desired a homogeneity of language, institutions, religion, and race, which they found amongst their own people.

In 1874 there were more Mexicans there than to-day and less white people. Along the line of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé road, where I went over the old Mexican trail when a boy, to-day towns are springing up which rival in enterprise and wealth the towns in the Western States—such as Albuquerque, Socorro; and old Santa Fé, that used to be a collection of adobe houses, to-day is a thriving mart and a commercial center for that vast area of country, with the white population steadily increasing, and American customs, habits, and ideas have all advanced, while the effete and worn-out civilization of the Indians and the Aztecs and the Spaniards has gone backward and receded. And yet, with that old condition of things, the Republican party voted, in 1874, 160 to 54 in favor of letting in this Territory with half the population it has to-day, and the Senate voted in the same year 32 to 11, three to one in both instances, and afterwards by a large majority in 1876 voted the same way.

Let us be perfectly frank with each other. Why shall we keep out New Mexico? Why do you keep it out? Because in 1874 and in 1876 New Mexico was represented not only by a Republican Delegate, but by one of the most active Republican partisans that has ever been known in the history of this country, Hon. Stephen B. Elkins. That was the condition of things in 1874 and 1876, and to-day New Mexico is represented in the other House of Congress by a Democrat, and although the Legislative Assembly of New Mexico is Republican to-day, the Republican party here and in the other House of Congress are afraid to risk the vote of the people.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. VEST. Of course.

Mr. CULLOM. I want to say that, so far as I am concerned, the question of the political or partisan status of the people of New Mexico is a matter of no consideration in the decision of the question whether the Territory shall be admitted as a State or not.

So far as that Territory is concerned, while the Delegate happens to be a Democrat, as I understand, although I do not know him personally, yet the truth is that the Legislature of the Territory is at least two-thirds Republican.

Mr. VEST. I stated that.

Mr. CULLOM. I want to say further that I have, so far as my action is concerned, been influenced by statements from Democrats and Republicans of that Territory that the people of the Territory as a body are not entitled, on account of the condition of affairs there, to admission as a State into this Union.

I tried to avoid saying very much about the subject awhile ago, because I wanted to have the conference report disposed of, but evidence has been furnished to me to the effect that there are very few schools in that Territory where the English language is taught, and men who practice law there have told me that while they have perhaps been attorneys in a thousand lawsuits they have never tried one without the necessity of using interpreters, because the officers of the courts, as well as the witnesses in many instances, could not speak the English language.

So I might go on and give the reasons why I have not felt that it was incumbent upon me at this time to incumber this bill with the question of the admission of New Mexico. When the time comes perhaps the people of that Territory will be able to show a different situation, and I shall be as willing and as anxious as the Senator from Missouri or anybody else to admit New Mexico when they show conditions that seem to demand it.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, so far as the courts in New Mexico are concerned they are administered in Santa Fé and in Socorro just as regularly and in accordance with the forms of law, just as much as in any portion of the United States. They have a Mexican population there and they had when the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo was made between the United States and Mexico, in which the same rights were guarantied to the people occupying that soil as to the American citizens that might go there after the consummation of that transfer. About this there can be no sort of question.

Now, we are confronted with a race question here again, that these people are Mexicans, and therefore they ought not to be permitted to become citizens of the United States in a State of the Union.

Mr. President, when the negroes of the South—former slaves—who had been mere chattels under a system that prevailed in those States for years, were made citizens of the United States and given the right to vote, we heard nothing then of this sensibility on the race question which confronts us in this argument. In the Northwestern States there are thousands of Scandinavians who can hardly read or write or speak the English language, and yet they become citizens of the United States, entitled to the same privileges with those of us who were born upon the soil. In Dakota there are thousands of them, and I have no doubt they are a hardy, a thrifty, and an intelligent population.

No, Mr. President, let us understand this question. If we are to admit these four Territories as States we should admit New Mexico, and in common decency and fairness, speaking here without disguise as members of different political parties, we should stand the hazard of the die hereafter in the votes to be had in those Territories.

For one I shall vote against this report and against this bill, and I shall do it upon the ground that New Mexico has not been included in this report, and I am neither afraid nor ashamed to say that I will not consent to give what I believe an unjust and inequitable advantage to the party opposed to that of which I am a member upon any such flimsy pretext as that a Territory that fourteen years ago, with a smaller population and a larger proportion of Mexicans in it, was then fit for admission into the Union and to-day, with all those reasons decreased, it shall not be admitted at all.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President——

Mr. PLATT. I desire very much to have action upon this bill to-night, and I rise for the purpose of asking if we can not take the vote at this time.

Mr. BUTLER. Well, Mr. President, I am as anxious as the Senator from Connecticut is. I simply wanted to state that, in acting upon these measures for the admission of States into the Union, if I know myself, I have not been actuated by political considerations. In other words, I could not object to the admission of a Territory as a State because rumor stated that the people of that Territory or a majority of them differ with me in political opinion.

I think, sir, that the subject is too grave and serious and important to be governed by such considerations. All of us more or less are, I take it, sensible to such considerations, but, as I stated, I have not permitted that question to influence my judgment at all, if from no other reason than the very paramount one of the vicissitudes of politics in this country; and now that the great dividing question of slavery has, as I believe and hope, been put behind us, I think that those vicissitudes and changes will be more frequent in the future than in the past, so that where a State or a community may be Republican to-day or Democratic to-day it may be the reverse to-morrow or the next year.

In regard to New Mexico, I do not care now to go into the discussion of the reasons which in my judgment entitle her to admission into the Union. I stated awhile ago briefly that I believe she ought to be admitted into the Union. I believe that she ought to be in this bill, and I so insisted until I apprehended that further insistence might jeopardize the passage of the bill for the admission of these four Territories as States. Then I yielded. When the proper time comes and the proper occasion I trust I shall be found on the side of those who favor the admission of New Mexico at as early a date as possible, and I hope the Congress of the United States will at an early day extend to the people of that Territory the same right that it now extends to the people of North and South Dakota and Montana and Washington.

Mr. HARRIS. I rise for the purpose of making a motion that——

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to submit a very few remarks.

Mr. HARRIS. I will yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I shall vote for the conference report, and in doing so I desire to make a statement which will explain my reason for that vote.

I feel aggrieved that the Territory of New Mexico has not been included in this bill. My impression is, my conviction is, that it has been excluded, contrary to express treaty stipulations in the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, because of the present political aspect of the people of that Territory, and I think that is demonstrated, because I can not conceive that the committee who have had this subject in charge should have been forgetful of the ninth article of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo and the protocol which followed it and which gave a more emphatic explanation to it. I will read that ninth article:

> The Mexicans who, in the territories aforesaid, shall not preserve the character of citizens of the Mexican Republic, conformably with what is stipulated in the preceding article, shall be incorporated into the Union of the United States, and be admitted at the proper time (to be judged of by the Congress of the United States) to the enjoyment of all the rights of citizens of the United States, according to the principles of the Constitution; and in the mean time shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty and property, and secured in the free exercise of their religion without restriction.

There is a provision in favor of the Mexicans occupying that Territory, not in favor of the white people or the black people, but a declaration in our treaty, made at the time we acquired the Territory, that those people were entitled to be admitted into the American Union as a State, with a Mexican population.

I have not heard it stated here, nor do I expect to hear it stated, that those Mexicans are in any worse condition for admission into the Union now than they were at the time that the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo was ratified. I do not hear it stated, and I do not expect to hear it stated, or to hear the attempt made to make the statement, that in two years to come or five years to come or ten years to come the condition of the Mexican population will be so far bettered by contact with our ideas and system of civilization and our language as that they will then be entitled to admission into the Union.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] has shown a decided vote on the part of both Houses of Congress some years ago, in which they declared by majorities approximating two-thirds of each House that the Mexicans were then entitled to admission into the American Union—that is, that their social condition, their political condition, their advancement in intelligence and in the arts of civilization, were at that time sufficient to justify and require the execution of this provision of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo.

Now, the Mexican citizens of the United States, made such by remaining in this Territory after the adoption of that article, have a just cause of grievance against the Congress of the United States.

When they claim to come in and have the numbers equivalent to those in other Territories, and the facilities of commercial operations and of agricultural development equal to those, they have a just and reasonable cause of grievance against this Government; which cause of grievance is concentrated in the fact that we in excluding them violate a positive agreement made with them by treaty when they came into this country. They had the option under this treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo in articles preceding the one I have just read—Article VIII and other articles—to remain in the United States, assuming citizenship here, or to return to Mexico. They chose to remain in the United States in that part of the territory that we acquired, and they remained under the guaranty of this article which I have just read.

The Mexican Government finding that we had made a suppression of a part of Article IX as it was originally prepared, agreed with us upon a protocol, which was an explanation of that, in which it is said:

> First. The American Government by suppressing the ninth article of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo and substituting the third article of the treaty of Louisiana, did not intend to diminish in any way what was agreed upon by the aforesaid Article IX in favor of the inhabitants of the territories ceded by Mexico.

There was a solemn and positive reiteration of the engagement that we had made originally with Mexico, into which engagement we had interpolated with their consent the third article of the treaty of cession of Louisiana, an article under which the State of Louisiana had the right to be admitted into the Union and was admitted into the Union.

Now, Mr. President, we hear it stated to-day in terms not exactly open and full and free, but still unmistakable, that the reason why New Mexico was not included in this bill was the condition of her population. It is said that they do not have American schools there and that the English language is not taught in their schools. These are the objections, and all that I have heard against the incorporation of the Mexicans, who are mentioned in this treaty as being entitled to statehood, in this bill admitting new States into the American Union.

That presents sharply and without any possibility of misunderstanding the proposition that the Mexicans are excluded from this bill because they are Mexicans; and yet here is the guaranty in the ninth article of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, which says they shall come into the Union because they are Mexicans. Being Mexicans, and our country having acquired this area of territory with that population, we expressly stipulated with them as Mexicans, first, that they shall have the right of citizenship; next, that they shall be admitted as Mexicans into the American Union. I do think, sir, this is pressing the race question to a very singular extent, that we shall not only exclude them because they are Mexicans, but we shall do so in the face of the fact that we agreed when the treaty was made acquiring this territory that they should come in, being Mexicans and having been treated with in that very character and capacity.

I look hopelessly forward to the time when the Territory of New Mexico can come in, unless some Senator or some other person can point out a means by which we are to drive the Mexican population out of that Territory. They are there by our consent and agreement; they are there with these fixed treaty rights; they are there under the solemn pledge of the United States Government that they shall have statehood, and yet we are to allow this Territory to remain out of the Union, with quite enough population to make a State, until some future period of time when Congress shall give its consent or shall come to the belief that these people have so far reformed in their blood and race and in their language as that they can be admitted safely into the American Union.

If there had been an equal number of negroes in the Territory of New Mexico to displace that number of Mexicans, could we resist their coming in as an American State? Would we raise the race question upon negroes if they were there? Not by any means. We raise race questions on Chinese and race questions on Mexicans, but we never raise race questions on the negroes.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask that Senator if the question, shall negro majorities rule, is not a race question raised on the negro?

Mr. MORGAN. I did not hear the question.

Mr. HOAR. I asked that Senator if the question, shall negro majorities rule, be not a race question raised upon the negro?

Mr. MORGAN. Well, that may be. It happens to be, however, a question not raised by the Republicans. The Republicans raise race questions on Mexicans and race questions on Chinese, and it is not exactly logical perhaps not to raise a race question on the negroes. They differ from us quite as much as the Chinese. Why do you raise race questions here in this Senate upon this bill, and why do you violate your treaty to do it, the solemn compact of your Government made with Mexicans, and then turn around and twit me with the question whether I would exclude negroes on race grounds?

It is easy enough to be charitable to one's own infirmities; it is easy enough to warm to your own sins and your own shortcomings. Thank God, there is still a scrutiny in the eye of impartial mankind to weigh the conduct and sentiments of men, not by what they think of themselves, but by what they are thought of in the light of justice and truth. If these Mexicans had had the misfortune to be Republicans they would have been in this bill, and this treaty would have stood up then for their admission into the American Union as a solemn guaranty which would have been obeyed on the other side of this Chamber. But happening to be Democrats, as the negroes are supposed and believed to be Republicans, the distinction of race disappears in one case and is made prominent and bold and powerful in the other, and that race distinction is made so prominent and so bold and so distinct that we violate our public pledges in this treaty in order to keep them out of the Union.

I stated that I should vote for this bill. I admit that injustice has been practiced in it. The situation is one of extreme injustice and one that I dislike very seriously indeed, but I conceive it to be my duty to vote for the admission of any Territory into the Union without reference to race, politics, or any other question concerned in it, when the lawful citizenship of that Territory is adequate to representation in the other House of Congress and when the development of that Territory has established the fact that the State, when admitted into the Union, can take care of itself, that its population is not likely to dwindle as some States of this Union have dwindled that we have admitted here, but is likely to be progressive and increasing. When such a State comes for admission into the American Union I will vote for it whenever it presents a constitution in conformity with the Constitution of the United States, that represents truly the right of local self-government in the organic law.

I am not to be prohibited from voting to admit a State in the Union because other Senators can find pretexts upon which to exclude a population that is entitled to come and have a Senator sit upon this floor. What they choose to do in keeping a State out is no argument for me in respect to my vote for the admission of a State. I vote for these four other Territories to come in as States because I am satisfied that each one of them is properly prepared in population and civil development for statehood. I should vote most cheerfully to execute the compact between ourselves and Mexico and these Mexican people and admit the Territory of New Mexico, but, under the doctrines which have been stated here to-day and the pretexts which have been resorted to to keep this Territory out of the Union, I do not foresee the day when New Mexico will become a State of the American Union.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. PLATT. May I appeal to the Senator to withdraw that motion?

Mr. HARRIS. If we can come to a vote without further debate I will withdraw the motion for that purpose.

Mr. PLATT. Let the vote be taken now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question on concurring in the report of the committee of conference?

Mr. BROWN. I wish to say a single word before the vote is taken. I will not take two minutes.

This is an omnibus bill to admit four Republican States into the Union. The Territory of New Mexico, which would certainly make a Democratic State if admitted, is excluded, I think, for political considerations. I shall therefore vote against the report, because I think it is unfair and unjust.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will not call for the yeas and nays; but I desire to state that I will vote against the adoption of the conference report and the passage of this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the report.

The report was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. 2511) to provide for the disposal of certain public lands of the United States under the provisions of the homestead laws only, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HOLMAN, Mr. PAYSON, and Mr. MCRAE the managers of the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 139) to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by act of Congress approved August 5, 1861; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

LORD SACKVILLE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report of the Secretary of State, of this day's date, with accompanying correspondence touching the case of Lord Sackville.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 20, 1889.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of War of this date submitting an estimate for an appropriation of $500 for furnishing and maintaining the lodge at the Washington monument; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment:

A bill (H. R. 2875) for the relief of Mrs. Louisa H. Hasell; and

A bill (H. R. 3765) for the relief of James Devine.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11007) for the relief of the Catholic Church at Macon City, Mo., reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5426) for the relief of St. Joseph Commercial College, of St. Joseph, Mo., reported it with an amendment.

ADDITIONAL BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. VEST introduced a bill (S. 3983) to enable the inhabitants of the town of Juneau, Alaska, to obtain title to the lots improved by them in said town; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

AMENDMENT TO DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. EVARTS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PROPOSED EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ALLISON. Pending that, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. HARRIS. On which motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the motion to adjourn the Senator from Tennessee asks that the yeas and nays may be entered on the Journal.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator desires for any special purpose an executive session at this hour I will not insist on my motion.

Mr. HARRIS. My purpose is purely general and not special.

Mr. ALLISON. Well, then, I must insist on my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks upon the question of adjournment that the yeas and nays may be entered on the Journal.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COLQUITT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], or I should vote "nay."

Mr. SAWYER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

Mr. TELLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON], but I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], and I vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. SPOONER (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired generally with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL]. He is absent from the Chamber and I inadvertently voted. I ask leave to withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin withdraws his vote.

Mr. BUTLER (after having voted in the negative). I am generally paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON], and generally vote with him on this proposition and generally in the affirmative. I think perhaps I had better withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina withdraws his vote.

Mr. CULLOM (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He is not recorded.

Mr. CULLOM. Then I suppose I ought to withdraw my vote, as I am paired with him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois withdraws his vote.

Mr. HARRIS. I am requested to announce that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] is paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON].

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] is paired with my colleague [Mr. BOWEN].

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Aldrich,	Davis,	Hawley,	Morrill,
Allison,	Dolph,	Hearst,	Platt,
Blair,	Evarts,	Hoar,	Stewart,

Cullom,	Jones of Nevada,	Sabin,	Wilson of Md.
Dawes,	Kenna,	Saulsbury,
Edmunds,	McPherson,	Sawyer,

So the motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 21, 1889, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 20, 1889.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CORRECTION.

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Speaker, I rise to have a correction made in the RECORD and to make a brief statement in connection therewith. In the RECORD of Saturday last, containing the report of Friday's proceedings, I am recorded as having voted to instruct the committee of conference on the bill in relation to the admission of the Territories. The facts are that at that time I was absent from the city with leave, at my home in Georgia, and of course could not have voted. Had I been present I would have voted against that instruction and against all the other propositions instructing that committee. I was paired with the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN] on all political questions, and I desire to state in his behalf that while he voted he did so inadvertently, not regarding the proposition voted upon as of a political character. Had he so regarded it he certainly would not have voted.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made. The Chair will also cause the Journal to be examined, and, if there be no objection, any error found there will be corrected.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CRISP. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will please withhold that until the Chair lays before the House certain bills, in compliance with the rule.

Mr. CASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the unfinished conference report that was under discussion yesterday.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to call it up at this time?

Mr. CASWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOOKER. I hope the gentleman from Wisconsin will withhold his motion so as to allow the Chair to lay the Senate bills before the House.

Mr. REED. No; let us have it now.

Mr. CASWELL. I can not yield.

Mr. HOOKER. The gentleman had better allow that to be done.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Wisconsin to withhold his motion until I can make a report, which will occupy hardly any time.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I call up the contested-election case of Sullivan vs. Felton.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON DIRECT-TAX BILL.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. Under the rules of the House, the conference report, the Chair thinks, has precedence over all other business.

Mr. CRISP. Is it privileged over a contested-election case?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is under the rules. While the question of the right of a member to his seat is a question of the highest privilege under the Constitution, yet the Constitution itself provides that the House may make rules for the government of its own proceedings, and the House has made rules under which a conference report is in order at all times except while the Journal is being read, while the yeas and nays are being taken, or while the House is dividing. This, the Chair thinks, gives it a higher privilege, and the only way to avoid it is to raise the question of consideration.

Mr. CRISP. Then I raise the question of consideration. I am willing to give way for the necessary appropriation bills, but for nothing else.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask the gentleman from Wisconsin to allow reports to be presented.

The SPEAKER. That request has already been made and the gentleman has declined to do so. The question is, will the House now proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the bill known as the direct-tax bill?

Mr. CASWELL. Upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 135, nays 93, not voting 94; as follows:

So the House determined to consider the conference report.

Mr. CANNON (after the Clerk had concluded the second roll-call). Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the House when his name was called?

Mr. CANNON. I was absent on a conference committee until after my name was called on the second roll-call.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that under the practice the gentleman can not vote. He can state how he would have voted.

Mr. CANNON. I will submit to the Chair, if the Chair will allow me—

The SPEAKER. The House will come to order. The Chair desires to hear what the gentleman from Illinois has to say.

Mr. CANNON. As the letter of the rule has very properly been relaxed so as to permit a member to vote after the conclusion of the roll-call if he was in the Hall when his name was called, is it not equally proper that the literal terms of the rule should be relaxed so as to permit a member to vote who was absent on a conference committee, practically by order of the House, attending to the business of the House?

Mr. HOOKER. I can not hear what the gentleman says.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has appealed to gentlemen on the floor to preserve order so that the gentleman from Illinois may be heard.

Mr. CANNON. I will state my point again by way of inquiry of the Chair. As the rule has been so far relaxed as to permit a member to vote after the conclusion of the roll-call, provided he was in the Hall when his name was called, should not the rule with equal propriety be further relaxed so as to permit a member to vote who, when his name was called, was absent attending to his duty as a member of a conference committee, practically by order of the House? In this case is there not equal reason for a relaxation of the terms of the rule?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not really see that there is any difference between the two cases. According to the letter of the rule no member can vote, nor can the Speaker entertain a request for unanimous consent that the member be allowed to vote, after the completion of the second roll-call; but inasmuch as there is at all times more or less noise on the floor and it frequently happens that a gentleman fails to hear his name called or the Clerk fails to hear his response, it was thought to be manifestly unjust that a member should be deprived of his vote under such circumstances. Now, if the House sees proper to permit a still further relaxation of the terms of the rule and decides that a member absent on a conference committee can vote after the conclusion of the second roll-call, of course——

Mr. HOOKER. Then we shall have members voting who were absent on any account, so that we might as well do away with the rule altogether.

Mr. CANNON. Not at all; the cases do not run together.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the gentleman's vote on this roll-call is not necessary as affecting the result; and inasmuch as it might lead to a very great inconvenience if there should be a still further relaxation of the rule, the Chair thinks the gentleman had better content himself with stating how he would have voted.

Several MEMBERS (to Mr. CANNON). How would you vote?

Mr. CANNON. I do not care about that; I am ready to vote. [Laughter.]

Mr. MASON. I desire to ask that my colleague from Illinois, Mr. PAYSON, be excused on account of sickness.

There being no objection, Mr. PAYSON was excused.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW] asks to be excused on account of important business, and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. NEWTON] on account of sickness. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and these gentlemen are excused.

Mr. GAINES. I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall when his name was called?

Mr. GAINES. I was not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not entertain the gentleman's request.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS] be excused indefinitely, on account of sickness.

There being no objection, Mr. MCCOMAS was excused.

Mr. TAULBEE. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. WHEELER. I object.

The Clerk recapitulated the names.

The following members were announced as paired until further notice:

Mr. GREENMAN with Mr. NUTTING.

Mr. ERMENTROUT with Mr. BUNNELL.

Mr. BIGGS with Mr. MORROW.

Mr. BURNETT with Mr. GOFF.

Mr. FORD with Mr. GUENTHER.

Mr. BARRY with Mr. YOST.

Mr. PHELAN with Mr. BUTLER.

Mr. WHITTHORNE with Mr. LYMAN.

Mr. MCSHANE with Mr. LAIRD.

Mr. SNYDER with Mr. BOWEN.

Mr. NEAL with Mr. HOUK.

Mr. COLLINS with Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts.

Mr. GROSVENOR with Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. While I am paired generally with my colleague from Ohio [Mr. CAMPBELL], I desire to state that if he were present I understand he would vote on this question as I do; and therefore I have voted "ay."

For this day:

Mr. BRYCE with Mr. KETCHAM.

Mr. STAHLNECKER with Mr. BAKER, of New York.

Mr. LEE with Mr. DALZELL.

Mr. HERBERT with Mr. HARMER.

Mr. WILKINS with Mr. MCCOMAS.

Mr. NEWTON with Mr. BELDEN.

On this vote:

Mr. SOWDEN with Mr. WADE.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, with Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois.

Mr. FORNEY with Mr. FITCH.

Mr. RANDALL with Mr. WILLIAMS.

Mr. BLAND (having voted in the negative) changed his vote immediately before the announcement of the result from "no" to "ay." The vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. BLAND. I move to reconsider the vote just taken.

Mr. KELLEY. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, I understand the objection will be withdrawn to the request I made a moment ago to submit this report, and I now ask unanimous consent——

Mr. DIBBLE. Regular order.

Mr. TAULBEE. This is simply a report to be submitted for printing; it will lead to no discussion.

Mr. CASWELL. I understand that this is simply to make an order to print the report, and individually I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. But the regular order has been demanded by the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. DIBBLE. Is it in order to move to reconsider a motion on reconsideration?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so.

The question is on the motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 90, noes 20.

Mr. BLAND. No quorum.

Mr. CASWELL. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 160, nays 76, not voting 86; as follows:

So the motion to reconsider was laid upon the table.

On motion of Mr. CASWELL, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to record my vote on this question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not entertain the request of the gentleman if he was not immediately in the Hall when his name was called.

Mr. ENLOE. I was temporarily absent.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. RANDALL with Mr. WILLIAMS, on this vote.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. CASWELL. I now demand the previous question on the adoption of the report, as I presume there is no disposition to debate it.

Mr. OATES. I think the gentleman had better not demand the previous question at this time.

Mr. CASWELL. Very well, I am perfectly content if the gentleman desires to be heard. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. OATES. I will take the floor in my own right if the Chair will recognize me and the gentleman does not wish to occupy it at present.

Mr. CASWELL. I reserve my time, and as the gentleman from Alabama desires to be recognized in his own right I presume he will be permitted to occupy the floor for an hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. OATES. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEWART].

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I am not presumptuous enough to believe that the mind of any member of this House can be changed to vote against this measure by anything I may say at this time, and I would not feel inclined to trespass upon the attention of the House at all had I not discovered this morning that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] had published in the RECORD a speech made upon this bill when it was under consideration in the House at a previous day. I had claimed the attention of the House at that time, and had submitted some remarks upon the constitutional question involved in the bill, to which the gentleman from Ohio replied. He then sought to attribute to me and charge against the section of the country that I have the honor in part to represent views which neither I nor they entertained, and do not now entertain; and I hardly can conceive of anything more unfair in honorable debate than for one member to attribute to his adversary a feigned issue and then reply to it.

Mr. ROGERS. In a written speech.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. Now, Mr. Speaker, this speech has been withheld from publication until yesterday. I have no comment to make upon that, as the gentleman seems to have printed three speeches on yesterday, as if not being satisfied with firing with a double-barrel he was firing in platoons. I desire only to say that when I addressed the House before on this question I did not, by word or sentiment or sentence, endeavor, in the slightest degree, to produce any irritation between the sections. I now protest most solemnly against the issue the gentleman has sought to raise and charge against me, for I here declare that I know it to be a truth that the South favors fraternity of feeling, desires more good feeling and less acrimony. But I want to say to the gentleman, that when he arraigns me with so much seeming emphasis, never again while I have the honor, as he says, to represent a part of the Southern country should I raise it, or raise the sectional issue, I reply I did not raise and do not desire to raise it; but I want to warn him, standing here to-day and desiring fraternity of feeling, that he may understand the South is here to observe all constitutional requirements, to obey the law, and, if need be, to defend the flag.

I want to say, and I say it with measured words, that under the threat made by the gentleman the South is not here, thank God, to make apologies. I hope that the gentleman may realize that his threat is impotent, and feel that we are here to observe our oaths of office, and that he can not warn us to keep silent, nor can he warn us to observe rules that he may dictate. We will be answerable alone to our God and our consciences and the oaths we have taken, although he may feel that he can raise his arm and say to members on this floor that their conduct is dishonorable, and that they seek to raise an issue that once unhappily divided this country. Now, I say as a Southern man I do not desire it; I did not raise it; and when the gentleman says, "I will warn the gentleman from Georgia never again to introduce while he has the honor to be a member of Congress upon this floor this question," I did not introduce it, nor am I to be deterred from what I believe is right through word or sentence or warning from the gentleman from Ohio. And I again protest, influenced by a proper feeling and sentiment of fraternity, that brotherly love, good-will, and united effort may measure our conduct hereafter. Still I protest, and tell the gentleman that these warnings will not frighten members upon this floor. I want him to understand that we are not here under a threat, as suppliants on our knees, thank God; nor can the gentleman become the accuser, the court, and jury to try us. All we have done in the past has gone into history, and we have the consciousness of knowing that we can leave our conduct to the unbiased judgment of mankind, notwithstanding the threat of the gentleman that we are never to raise any question of this kind. I simply desire to emphasize and in measured words to say here that I protest against it. But let the gentleman learn that neither by entreaty nor by threat can he bring that section to which he points rather with the finger of scorn as suppliants upon their knees. We have no apologies to make, but leave our conduct to the unbiased judgment of a grateful people.

Mr. OATES. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. I object to this bill, first, because I believe we have no legitimate authority under a proper construction of the Constitution to pass it. But waiving that point, Mr. Speaker, there are many other reasons why I consider it an obnoxious bill, notwithstanding the fact that the State I have the honor in part to represent will be a beneficiary to over $600,000 of this money; yet, sir, I am not unmindful of the fact that in order to refund again this tax the people of my Commonwealth will be called upon under the present onerous system of tariff taxation, not only to pay the $600,000 back to the Federal Government, but four or five times that amount into the pockets of tariff monopolists. Whatever may be said, Mr. Speaker, in regard to the mode of collecting this tax, it was at least a tax upon the wealth of the country, and paid upon property and in proportion to wealth.

Without going into a discussion of the question as to whether a direct tax would be a more just tax than a tariff tax, even, laid for revenue purposes only, yet sir, when it is conceded in our present condition that we will not be permitted to have tariff taxation for revenue purposes, or revenue purposes only, and when funds derived from private parties and private corporations and monopolists of this country have been used unstintedly for the purpose of preventing honest taxation for revenue and revenue only, when in the coming Congress, as well as in the Senate of this Congress, Mr. Speaker, we are bound down by a rule of taxation that gives $5 for private purposes and private aggrandizement where one goes into the Federal Treasury; inasmuch as this bill is intended to distribute and squander the money in the Treasury, in order to lay the foundation for the necessity for continuing this onerous, dishonest system, I want to enter my protest, not only against the principle of the bill under the Constitution, but the policy that has dictated it in both Houses of Congress.

Mr. Speaker, we have a bonded debt of over $700,000,000, and I would prefer this money to be appropriated in the extinguishment of that debt instead of reappropriating it to the States in order to make the necessity for higher tariff or higher taxation in order to bring it back into the Federal Treasury again. I do not know in the history of our country when a proposition was ever made for the distribution of the surplus in the Treasury when we had a national debt on which it could be paid with advantage.

The time is fast approaching, Mr. Speaker, when the 4½ per cent. bonds will be due, and even at the rate of purchase to-day of the 4½ and 4 per cent. bonds it would be better financial policy in the Government to pay off these bonds than to distribute this money among the States; for sooner or later, in order to pay this public debt, this tax must be re-collected. This bill distributes over $17,000,000, of which Missouri gets only about $600,000. Of this sum of $17,000,000 we get nothing compared to the burden that will be imposed upon us by a protective tariff in order to get the money back into the Treasury again, as we will be compelled to do. The bill is a fraud upon the people of my State. In the short space of five minutes I have not the time to go into all these questions, and I have simply sought this occasion to present in an imperfect manner my objections to the passage of this bill.

Mr. OATES. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CASWELL. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not desire to consume any of the valuable time of this Congress in replying to an attack, or a criticism, or a review, or whatever the language of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEWART] may necessarily carry or by fair construction imply. In the remarks which I had the honor to make on a former occasion I answered as well as I could, in a friendly spirit, in parliamentary language and conciliatory language what I understood to be the drift of the gentleman's argument. I confess that I had not read that argument, and I confess that there is extreme peril in attempting to catch the drift of an argument sometimes, even though you do hear it and do read it. If I misinterpreted the argument of the gentleman from Georgia, why, it is enough to say that I stated in my remarks that if he did not mean what I understood him to mean then my criticism did not apply.

As to the alleged "offensive language" I have this to say: On that occasion I used these words:

I warn the gentleman from Georgia never again to introduce it—meaning what I understood to be an appeal to the sectional view of the question made in the language which I understood the gentleman to have used, in which he had spoken of "desolated homes," "desolated houses," and "desolated farms" in the South. I suggested to him, in a spirit of meekness and conciliation, that it was not wise for his side of the question to introduce that as an argument here. My warning was not in the form of a threat, and the gentleman from Georgia knew it then and he knows it now. There is no threat involved in the use of language of a strictly parliamentary character appealing to the other side not to use or not to introduce an argument by which the speaker thinks his side will not be influenced.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly, sir.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia I was in the Senate when the gentleman delivered his speech and did not know of it until my attention was called to it; but I wish to ask him whether he was not notified, while he was delivering his speech, by a friend on his left at the time, that my speech was there in print before him.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I suppose that is true, sir, and I suppose I ought to have stopped in the midst of my speech and sat down and read the speech of the gentleman from Georgia; but really I did not understand that its importance was of such magnitude that I was called upon to do that, and I humbly apologize to him for not having read his speech either then or on any subsequent occasion.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. I am very much obliged to you.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I did not hear what the gentleman said across the aisle, but I understand from others that it was to the effect that I had tried to threaten him. Why, there is nothing in my language to justify any such suggestion.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. I desire to correct the gentleman as to that. I suppose he does not wish to misrepresent me. I said that notwithstanding this seeming threat I wanted it understood that the South meant fraternity of feeling and good-will to all.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the gentleman can use any stronger or better language in favor of harmony and good feeling than I used in the speech which he criticises, he will have to improve in the use of the English language, in my judgment. This is what I said on that occasion:

Mr. Chairman, underlying this proposition is the great fact that the passage of this bill, its enactment into law, the payment of this money under it would put the people of this country just where equity would say they ought to stand, except the account on the side of the States that had paid the money and who received no interest upon it; and secondly, the grand results that have accrued to the country, and which we share in common with the people of the whole country.

It is a step toward a complete and just reunion of the hearts of the people of the country; not a reunion forced by law nor controlled by legislative enactment, but controlled and promoted by the wish and purpose of both sides of the country to do equal and exact justice toward each other. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that I am not open to a lecture upon the subject of conciliation by the gentleman from Georgia. He can use no stronger language than I used there to convey the idea that I was contending against the introduction of a sectional issue into this discussion; and now, having thus disclaimed all purpose of using any language that could be construed as a threat towards the gentleman from Georgia or anybody else, I expect the gentleman to say that upon that point at least he is entirely satisfied with my position. I have never introduced sectionalism into any debate in this House. I have never, under any circumstances, in the discussion of a question of this character, which I set out by saying was purely a question of dollars and cents and ought not to be discussed from a sectional standpoint—I have never attempted to array sectional feeling upon this side of the House against the other side and I never will, and the gentleman from Georgia, by the use of heated language, can never drive me from a position which I have deliberately taken and which I will persistently adhere to. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I declined to sign this conference report for reasons which, if not already apparent to every member of this House, I hope to make so in the brief time that I shall occupy the floor. In the first place, it will be seen that the $850,000 which was put upon the bill by an amendment in this House for compensation to people in certain districts of South Carolina for property sold by the tax-commissioners, having been non-concurred in by the Senate, this report further amends that provision by reducing one-half the valuation placed upon the lots in the town of Beaufort by the United States assessor, and also the valuation of the improved lands, thereby reducing the amount or the compensation about $400,000; and an appropriation is recommended by the conferees of $500,000, "or so much thereof as may be necessary," for the payment of these claims, and to which the only objection is as to the sufficiency of the allowance, but if the South Carolina delegation are satisfied with this amendment, I am.

There is also another amendment proposed by the conferees which is a new feature in this bill, the provision that in all cases where lands in the States were sold in the process of the collection of this tax and bought by the United States and resold for a profit over and above the tax, penalties, interest, and costs, the United States shall refund or pay over to those whose property was thus sold all that they sold for over and above the assessment. I do not understand that the conferees had or that any one here has accurate information as to the amount that this provision will cover.

There is a case in one State where, as stated by one of the conferees, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], there was a considerable quantity of land sold in one or two counties; but the amount that will be taken out of the Treasury to meet this provision is not stated, as I understand, in the conference report, and I have no information as to what it will amount to.

Now, so far as the report of the conferees is concerned, I do not know that there are any very serious objections to it, if this bill is to pass. The real ground upon which I refused to sign the report is my steady and unvarying opposition to this bill from its very inception up to the present time. Some gentlemen may think it is not quite in order to refer to or discuss the merits of the bill on this conference report, which is an attempt to reconcile the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the various amendments. But, sir, it is pertinent to discuss the merits of the bill here, because if this report were rejected it would work the defeat of the bill. But as I have heretofore made known my views and have submitted arguments in opposition to this bill, I will now consume only so much time as I may deem necessary to meet some points made in argument in the Senate yesterday, which I do not desire to go unchallenged.

The senior Senator from my own State, as appears from the RECORD of this morning, took the position that this bill would be unconstitutional, as was asserted by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], unless this was a debt——

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I make the point of order that it is not in order, but is a breach of parliamentary decorum, for the gentleman to refer to and discuss what took place in the Senate yesterday.

Mr. OATES. I have a right to discuss anything that I find in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, in respectful terms, as I propose to do.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I insist on my point of order.

Mr. OATES. This is a constitutional question, and I presume I have a right to refer to the argument which any gentleman either in this House or in the Senate has submitted upon the question, when I do so in a perfectly respectful manner, as I propose to do. The relations existing between me and the Senator referred to [Mr. MORGAN] are of the friendliest character, and I am sure he would not make the slightest objection to what I intend to say.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SPRINGER). The Clerk will read an extract from Jefferson's Manual.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is a breach of order in debate to notice what has been said on the same subject in the other House or the particular votes or majorities on it there, because the opinion of each House should be left to its own independency, not to be influenced by the proceedings of the other; and the quoting them might beget reflections leading to a misunderstanding between the two Houses.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] will proceed in order.

Mr. OATES. I do not think the Senator referred to will be under any special obligations to the gentleman from Ohio for his guardianship. I find it asserted by the advocates of this measure that its constitutionality is sustainable upon the ground that the money proposed by this bill to be paid is a debt against the United States. How can it be a debt? It is asserted that because it has been the practice of the Congress of the United States to assume and pay debts incurred by the States for the public defense—in the Indian wars and in the Revolutionary war, before we had any Constitution—that therefore this is to be regarded as a debt incurred by the States for the common defense, and hence Congress has the constitutional power to appropriate money for its payment.

Why, sir, it is the province and the duty of the Government of the United States to lay and collect taxes for the common defense; and wherever a State has expended money in the maintenance of its militia or otherwise for the common defense, that is an expenditure of money for the common defense, and it is an expenditure which ought to be borne by the United States under our Constitution. To-day there are pending in Congress claims unadjusted in behalf of several States of this Union for expenditures that they made in the early days of the late war. No one has taken the position, and I presume no one would hold, that Congress has not the right and that it is not the duty of Congress, if these expenditures were properly made, to assume and pay them. There is an implied promise to do so. It belongs to the United States to provide for the common defense, and such expenditures are not obligations upon any State, and when a State makes such expenditures they are in the discharge of duty which rests primarily on the United States. That is a very different proposition from this. This direct tax is not State expenditure. By a law of Congress a tax was lawfully and constitutionally laid; and when collected and paid into the Treasury, every dollar of it belonged to the United States, as much as money that was collected by any other system of taxation. The assumption and reimbursement of States for proper expenditures for the common defense bears no analogy whatever to the case in hand.

Mr. DIBBLE. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. OATES. Yes, sir; a question.

Mr. DIBBLE. Suppose we should pass a law repealing internal-revenue taxation. In such repealing enactments there has always been a provision for the repayment or rebate of the tax on property on hand in unbroken packages at the time the tax is released. Is such a provision in a law for the repeal of internal-revenue taxation constitutional?

Mr. OATES. That is not at all analogous to this case. If the Government of the United States has collected taxes from the citizen and then deprives him of the right for the exercise of which the tax was paid, it can, as a matter of course, and it ought to, refund the money when the privilege is denied him to continue that business. It would be robbery not to do it. That is not at all analogous to this case.

Why, sir, how can this be held to contain any of the elements of a contract or obligation? It has been held by the Supreme Court in this very volume (121 U. S. Reports) that where a tax is improperly laid in the exercise of a constitutional power, however oppressively or unequally that tax may operate, it is not, when taken from the citizen in that manner, recoverable by him in any court. It is just as in the case of money paid voluntarily under any other circumstances or in any case where money voluntarily paid can not be recovered back. If the individual resists he can make a question and it goes to the courts for adjudication. Not so here.

Now, in this case, can any citizen, on the ground that this direct-tax law is but partially executed or that of inequality of burden imposed by it, or on the ground that a part of this tax was not collected, institute a suit for and recover the part which he paid? I presume that no one who has any regard for his reputation as a lawyer will assert that. Suppose Congress simply passed an act giving to the Court of Claims jurisdiction without declaring any right, can any one who paid any part of the tax go into the court, institute a suit, and recover back the tax because some of it which was assessed against the property and citizens of some of the States was not collected? I presume that no lawyer will assert such a proposition. Suppose the United States circuit courts were invested with the jurisdiction in the exercise of their equity power to try such a claim upon the broadest and most comprehensive principles of equity, is there a judge in the United States who would so stultify himself as to grant relief to such a suitor? If so, he should be impeached for making such a disgraceful decision.

The fact that some of the States have not paid the assessment made against their citizens is harped upon, and the argument presented that the 5 per cent. fund and other funds coming to some of the States has been retained as set-offs; and one amendment, which is concurred in—the first, I believe, to the bill—provides for the refunding of any money retained by way of set-off. That in effect has nothing whatever to operate upon. There was a retention in several cases, and the exhibit attached to the report of the Committee on the Judiciary from the Treasury Department shows, for instance, the sum of $18,500 of money going to Alabama, which is retained and credited upon her assessment. Now, I mention that, Mr. Speaker, to illustrate how that matter stands in respect to other States. A suit was instituted and decided, the case of Louisiana vs. The United States, and on which was also determined the case of the claims of Alabama and Mississippi, that the Government of the United States had no right and the Treasury Department could not retain any money due those States and credit it against the direct-tax assessment because those States never assumed it and as States did not owe it.

There are none of the elements of mutuality which would justify a set-off, and therefore the exhibit attached to the report of the majority of the Judiciary Committee from the Treasury Department is not a correct exhibit of the standing of the accounts against the States in that Department. Why, sir, in the first session of this Congress an appropriation was made upon the deficiency bill or the sundry civil, I forget which, and the money appropriated and paid to several States where the 2 and 3 per cent. fund had been retained; and these sums are shown in this exhibit as having been set off, which is not the true state of them.

The only other point I care to notice is this: It is insisted that this bill is a most equitable measure, and that it ought to pass by way of an "evening up" of the burdens of the late war in the matter of taxes assessed and collected. Why, sir, should this particular matter be thus adjusted? Why take $17,000,000 out of the Treasury and return it to the States, not to the people, but to the States or the people who paid it, because two and a half millions of the twenty millions assessment never has been collected? That is an important matter, say the advocates of this bill, which justifies its enactment. Why, sir, if you go into the business of equalizing burdens, why not ascertain and refund the amount paid by the citizens of the loyal States during the period of the war for the maintenance of the Union—all the expenses of the war, in the shape of internal-revenue, income, and all other taxes, none of which were paid by the people of the States then in rebellion, so called?

There is just as much equity in that as in this, and over against this I set the tax of sixty-eight millions on raw cotton, which was collected after the war closed, and as every one knows was paid nearly in toto by the people of the Southern States. Yet no one, as I understand, of the advocates of this bill favored an amendment which I offered when it was under consideration here to return the cotton tax, although there is a question as to the constitutional power of the Government to lay and collect it. Every one knows that it was brought before the Supreme Court of the United States, and eight judges sitting upon the bench were equally divided in opinion as to whether it was a constitutional tax or not. Yet no part of it is to be returned to the people who paid it, and this bill is to be passed because those same people from whom that cotton tax was collected failed to pay two and a half millions of the $20,000,000 assessment, and it is insisted that equity requires that the seventeen and a half millions carried by this bill shall be taken from the Treasury, about one-third of which has been or will be collected from the people of the Southern States, and paid to the Northern States whose people paid it twenty-six years ago.

Why, sir, this is unprecedented in the whole history of our legislation. There is not a case on all fours with this. Nowhere is there a precedent to take money out of the Treasury of the United States to return a tax legally laid and collected—this, too, having been disposed of, used for a legitimate purpose, namely the maintenance of the war more than twenty-five years ago. It is a dangerous precedent. It is a declaration, sir, that there is no limit to the power of Congress in the matter of the appropriations of public money. It could not be placed anywhere else; and I am surprised that gentlemen who have spoken out and declared themselves in opposition to the Blair educational bill, because of the want of constitutional power to appropriate the seventy-nine millions proposed by that measure, should advocate this, and maintain that there is a constitutional power in Congress to pass it.

Why, sir, there is no consistency in such a course. The fact is, these two propositions are identical in respect to power. There is no warrant in the Constitution for either, and of the two the Blair bill is the least objectionable. The passage of this bill will establish a precedent for unlimited appropriations. And it is one, too, which will return to plague future Congresses for all time. I have no disposition, Mr. Speaker, to consume the time of the House unnecessarily. I have stated the grounds of my opposition to this bill on two occasions before. There is nothing before the House, there is nothing in the conference report to improve it or to commend it to the judgment of any one except, perhaps, a few gentlemen in localities where their constituencies may be benefited in the way of money. If the bill is to pass, the appropriations for that purpose, I maintain, ought to be carried in the bill and ought to be adopted as reported. I would be glad to defeat this bill in toto, and have done all I could to that end.

I now yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] such of the time remaining to me as he desires to occupy.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, the objection to this bill is of so grave a character that though I expressed myself fully when the bill was up before, I can not refrain from saying a word now upon the question of the power of the Congress of the United States to pass such a bill. The taxing power of the Government, Mr. Speaker, is one which ought always to be exercised clearly within the limits of constitutional power granted to the Congress of the United States to impose taxes, and any bill or measure which proposes to go outside of the grant of power to the Federal Congress to levy a tax is a dangerous precedent to set in this country.

When the first Government was formed after the war of the Revolution, denominated the Government of the Confederation, the question of giving to the Federal Government the power to levy taxes was resisted in that convention, and it was absolutely denied on the first forming of the Government adopted after the Revolutionary war. That war itself was fought because of unjust taxation attempted to be imposed by the mother country upon the colonies; and that convention, fresh from the conflict of the Revolution, in maintaining the doctrine that there should not be taxation without representation, were reluctant to grant to the Federal Government the power to levy taxes at all, and in that constitution first adopted absolutely refused to concede to the Federal Government the power of taxation at all, but reserved it to the respective States to raise the requisite quota for the maintenance of the Government. Experience demonstrated in a short time that that method of raising taxation for the Federal Government was inadequate and could not be relied upon.

That led to the adoption of legislation in the Congress of the United States to create a commission to assemble at Annapolis, in the State of Maryland, to amend the old Articles of Confederation; and when that convention met, with Alexander Hamilton as one of its members, as one of its leading members, they applied to Congress to concede the power to frame a new constitution. Under that new constitution, in the convention of 1787, power was for the first time conceded to the Congress of the United States to levy taxes at all of any character whatever, and it was adopted with great gravity in that convention. Finally it was adopted, as it was supposed, with a limit upon the power of taxation. If the Constitution contains any limit upon the power of taxation whatever, it is expressed in the emphatic language of the judge of the Supreme Court—Chief-Justice Marshall—in delivering the opinion in the case of McCulloch vs. The State of Maryland, the leading case on this subject of the power of taxation, and in the language of the judge, "it may be used to destroy." Now, what was the language of the Constitution adopted under which this power was conceded to the Government? It is expressed, sir, in the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution of the country, and that provides that —

> The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, imposts, and excises.

For what purpose? Reading again from it:

> To pay the debts, and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States. But all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.

But the power there to levy a tax, either direct or indirect, is limited, Mr. Speaker, by the very terms of the instrument itself; it is limited to what? Limited to—

> Lay taxes to pay the debts and to provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.

This is the limit. Is this bill to pay a debt of the United States? I deny it. Is it to provide for the general welfare of the United States? I deny it. Is it to provide for the common defense of the United States? I deny it. What is it, then? It is a bill outside of the power granted to Congress to levy taxes. It proposes now, a quarter of a century after the direct tax was laid and in great part collected, to take the money out of the Treasury and pay it back to the States or to the people who paid it.

Now, under the operation of that law of 1861 or 1862 what was done? Under a provision in the act the States were allowed to assume the payment, being allowed 15 per cent. for the collection. Under that provision of the law all the States, as I understand it, in the Union availed themselves of this privilege to assume the debt and pay to themselves the 15 per cent. for the collection, except the States of Tennessee, Delaware, and Mississippi. In my own State there was a considerable proportion of this money collected. It is to go now, under the provisions of this bill, to the parties who paid this money in the first instance, and if they can not be found it goes back to the State government and not to the individual who paid it. What power is there under the Federal Constitution to levy a tax for that purpose? It does not exist. It goes to the individuals if they can be found; but, sir, they will not be found.

In the State of Mississippi they could not be found; in the State of Tennesssee I venture to assert they could not be found, nor in the other States that I have named. It will then be to take seventeen and a half million of dollars from the public Treasury and pay the money to States who paid it twenty-five years ago under a law conceded by all to be within the power of Congress to enact and to have been a constitutional law. If you pass this bill to "equalize taxation," as it is termed, and pay back to the States who paid this tax this seventeen and a half million dollars upon the ground that you are going to "equalize" the taxes imposed to carry on the war, then why can not the gentleman having this bill in charge introduce to-morrow a bill to pay back to the States who paid it the largest and the most formidable tax that was imposed by the war, the income tax, which also was not collected except in the loyal States?

If you can pass this bill there is nothing to prevent the gentleman having this bill in charge to introduce a bill, commending itself to the wisdom and the conscience and the judgment of the members of this House as much as this bill does, to repay to the loyal States every dollar of that income tax. And if you may do that, where is the limit? Where can you stop? At what point will you say that the power to equalize taxation ceases? And must not the result be to absolutely deplete the Treasury of the United States? Sir, I say that we ought to pause before we pass a bill of this sort and look for the power in the Constitution. It is not a bill to pay the public debt; it is not a bill to provide for the common defense; it is not a bill to provide for the common welfare. It is boldly and nakedly a proposition to put your hands into the Treasury and pay out this money, holding it in trust for a certain length of time.

If the power exists to do this in one case it exists to do it in all cases. And if such a power exists, then the power of taxation becomes unlimited, the power of the Federal Congress to appropriate money out of the common Treasury is without limit, and the limit imposed by the Constitution is done away with. That is simply the effect and the object of this law, and to do what this bill proposes is to act in violation of the restrictions which the framers of the Constitution laid upon the legislative power of the Government to impose taxation. I undertake to assert, Mr. Speaker, that if this was a proposition to impose a tax upon the people of all the States—and I address this remark especially to my friends of the Chamber who are in favor of this bill—if this was a proposition to levy a tax directly to pay back this money, there would not be a baker's dozen of men on either side of this House who would have the courage to vote for it.

But, Mr. Speaker, it is a bill which finds its origin and the cause of its being presented here simply in the fact that there is a surplus in the Treasury of the United States. If there is, that surplus consists of money which has been paid by the people in the form of taxes imposed by the Government, and the iniquity of this measure loses none of its enormity by reason of the fact that there is money in the Treasury out of which this payment may be made. As I have already said, if this were a bald, naked proposition to levy a tax to pay this money now it would shock the common sense, it would shock the common honesty of every man in Congress to be asked to vote for such a measure. [Applause.]

When the enormity of this bill is pointed out, by asking why you do not begin your "equalization" by refunding the $68,000,000 collected under the odious and unjust cotton tax, it is said by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL], making this conference report, that if it can be shown that the cotton tax differs in any way from the tax on tobacco he might support it.

Why, Mr. Speaker, the difference is so obvious that it scarcely need be stated. Cotton, from which the great bulk of the clothing of the world is made, is one of the prime necessaries of life, as much so as wheat or corn or grain of any kind, which are "the staff of life," while tobacco is no such necessity of life.

Again, Mr. Speaker, the tax on tobacco was imposed to raise money in a great emergency, and has probably been unwisely and needlessly continued when that emergency ceased to exist; while the tax on cotton had for its object when originally imposed the punishment of the agricultural section in which it is raised, and its continuance after the war under still more punitive enactments can find no excuse, much less sanction of the Constitution, or the exercise of the taxing power under the limited grant in that instrument.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, what time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has ten minutes remaining.

Mr. OATES. I reserve that time.

Mr. CASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to detain the House in the discussion of this report. I wish, however, to submit a few remarks in reply to the gentleman who has just spoken, after which a short time will be consumed upon the same side of the question, and then we shall be ready to vote. I want to disabuse the minds of the members and correct the statement which has often been repeated upon this floor, that this bill will carry $17,500,000. Such is not the case. Gentlemen arrive at that amount by including the 15 per cent. commissions which were allowed the States for the assumption and payment of this tax, but this bill does not propose to pay to the States nearly $2,250,000 which were credited by way of commissions, but simply the amount collected, which will aggregate $15,725,000 and no more.

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman let me interrupt him just there?

Mr. CASWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. OATES. Does not the language of the first section of the bill provide that the Secretary shall credit and pay to each of the States and Territories an amount equal to all collections?

Mr. CASWELL. To all collections.

Mr. OATES. Wait a moment. Now the 15 per cent. clause was a part of the machinery which Congress saw proper to adopt to secure the collection of this tax. That was to be deducted from the amount, was it not?

Mr. CASWELL. It was a mere discount.

Mr. OATES. It was not an additional assessment?

Mr. CASWELL. It was a mere rebate or discount.

Mr. OATES. Whenever the State, through its machinery, would undertake the collection?

Mr. CASWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. OATES. Well, was not that a collection?

Mr. CASWELL. I do not understand it so.

Mr. OATES. For instance, if $2,000,000 was the assessment against Pennsylvania, and that State collected the $2,000,000 and was allowed to retain 15 per cent. out of the amount as compensation for the work, that 15 per cent. would be a collection, would it not?

Mr. CASWELL. Not a collection within the meaning of the bill.

Mr. OATES. I maintain that it would be. You go on to say "by set-off or otherwise"——

Mr. CASWELL. But an abatement allowed to a State which would assume and pay the money is in no sense a collection within the meaning of the bill.

Mr. BLAND. How, then, is the State reimbursed for the cost of collection?

Mr. CASWELL. It is very true that the State does not receive any compensation or reimbursement for the collection——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CASWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. This deduction of 15 per cent. was allowed to the States that paid the tax in cash. The tax was a direct tax levied upon the citizens of the States, not upon the States; it was apportioned among the States according to population. Now, how would it have been constitutional for the Government to have allowed a rebate of 15 per cent. to a State if that was not the fee which the Government allowed to its agent for collection, for under the Constitution the tax must be uniform? Was it not, then, the fact that the Government made the State its collector if the State chose to occupy that position, and gave it as its fee 15 per cent. of the amount collected? Therefore does not that come technically within the language of this bill when it provides that the Government shall pay back to the States the amount collected?

Mr. CASWELL. In reply to the gentleman from Kentucky I will say the effect of the provision referred to in the direct-tax law was merely to say to the States of the Union, "If you will assume the payment of this tax and pay this money into the Treasury, you may do it with a reduction of 15 per cent." In other words, for every $85,000 of money that they paid into the Treasury they were to be credited with $100,000.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Now, if I do not interrupt the gentleman from Wisconsin——

Mr. CASWELL. Not at all.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. He will allow me to ask, does he not confuse two ideas that are essentially different under our Constitution—the State and the citizens of a State? The direct tax is levied upon citizens. Now, the Government could not say to the State, "If you will pay this tax, which is not levied upon you as a State but upon your citizens, we will give you a rebate," unless it made the State the agent to collect the tax from the citizens.

Mr. CASWELL. I understand the law proceeded upon the theory that each State is supposed to have an interest in its citizens or subjects; and while this tax was levied upon the people of the several States, Congress said to the States, looking to the interests of their people, "If you will save us the machinery and expense of collecting this tax, and will pay the money out of your own treasury into the Treasury of the United States, you shall have an abatement upon the tax for the benefit of your people; you shall pay only $85,000 for every $100,000 levied."

Mr. HOOKER. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. CASWELL. Certainly.

Mr. HOOKER. Did not the tax-payer in each State where this tax was collected pay the tax to the State, and did not the State out of the entire tax thus paid by its citizens reserve the 15 per cent.?

Mr. O'FERRALL rose.

Mr. CASWELL. One question at a time, if you please.

Mr. O'FERRALL. I wish to say that such was not the case in the State of Virginia.

Mr. CASWELL. I do not understand that the people of the several States paid this money into the State treasury; I do understand that some of the States, through their own legislative authority, assumed this tax and paid it out of the common treasury in large sums, while other sums which were due from the General Government to these several States were offset upon that tax.

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin allow me to interrupt him a moment on this particular point?

Mr. CASWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. OATES. The statement of accounts by the Treasury Department shows as the balance of indebtedness due the United States $2,553,991.86. Now, this is all that is due of the $20,000,000 assessment. Has not the whole of the balance of the $20,000,000 been collected?

Mr. CASWELL. All the balance of the $20,000,000 has been collected or allowed to the State by way of rebate.

Mr. OATES. Ah! but "rebate" is not in the law. Here is a statement of the account from the Treasury Department which shows a little over two and a half million dollars uncollected of the $20,000,000.

Mr. CASWELL. No matter; that same account shows how much was credited to the States by way of commissions. All these credits were mere rebates, and in no sense were they ever collected.

Mr. OATES. Now, let me finish my question. This bill directs that the Secretary of the Treasury credit each State and Territory of the United States and the District of Columbia a sum equal to all collections, by set-off or otherwise, made by the States, Territories, or the District of Columbia. Now, here is a statement of the Treasury account, showing, in round figures, that two and a half million dollars is still due, leaving seventeen and a half million dollars which have been collected. There is no such language as "rebate" employed in the act.

Mr. CASWELL. This language in regard to collections does not in any sense include commissions and rebates that were allowed and credited to the States.

Several gentlemen rose.

Mr. CASWELL. I must decline further interruptions because they are consuming too much time.

Mr. SPINOLA. I do not desire to consume the gentleman's time, but I trust he will allow me one question.

Mr. CASWELL. I regret I have not the time to yield.

Mr. SPINOLA. I wish to ask this question, because the explanation which may be given in reply may influence my vote.

Mr. CASWELL. Very well, I yield; but this must be the last time.

Mr. SPINOLA. I would like to ascertain whether there is now in this bill a provision that the money when paid to the State shall be paid into the treasury of the State directly.

Mr. CASWELL. Yes, sir; I understand it is to be paid to the treasurer of the State or to the governor.

Mr. SPINOLA. And no portion of this money is to be given to agents or assumed agents of the States who are hanging about the Capitol here?

Mr. CASWELL. Not at all; that can not occur. The money is to be paid to the governors of the several States.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Will the gentleman allow me one word?

Mr. CASWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. O'FERRALL. I wish to say simply this, as I understand this bill, where the money was paid by a State upon assessments made by the State itself, it is to go into the treasury of the State for the benefit of the State as a whole——

Mr. CASWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. O'FERRALL. But where the money was collected from individuals, as was the case in the State of Virginia, it is to go into the hands of the governor of the State to be paid over to those individuals, if living, or to their personal representatives.

Mr. CASWELL. Yes, sir; it is to be paid to the State to be held in trust for the rightful owners.

Mr. HOOKER. For a certain period?

Mr. CASWELL. Yes, sir; the statute of limitations will operate upon it in six years.

I desire now to make one or two remarks in reference to the constitutional argument of my friend from Alabama [Mr. OATES] and my distinguished friend from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER]. I always respect a constitutional argument; but we must concede that over the subject of taxation Congress is vested with full power.

Mr. OATES. To do what?

Mr. CASWELL. To levy taxes in such manner as Congress may see fit.

Mr. OATES. Oh, no——

Mr. CASWELL. Now, the gentleman must excuse me for not yielding further.

Mr. OATES. But when you undertake to quote the Constitution you should be correct.

Mr. CASWELL. Well, the gentleman has had his say, and I do not think he is right. I want only a few moments, and it is very likely I shall not be right, but I only want to state my views as I entertain them. I repeat, Congress has full power to lay taxes upon the people of the country. Now my friend concedes that this tax was legally levied. If he did not concede it, the very decision of the Supreme Court which he holds in his hand settles the doctrine that it was a legal tax. That shows that Congress had jurisdiction over the subject; and if it has jurisdiction and can lay taxes has it not power to refund taxes? If a tax is partly collected and it seems impossible to collect the balance, can Co gress not return the tax paid to such parties as have paid it?

Mr. OATES. No. There is the Constitution; show me the power.

Mr. CASWELL. The gentleman says that Congress has no such power. Congress has jurisdiction over the subject-matter. If it can rebate a part of the tax, if it can suspend the collection of a part or the whole of the tax, if it can allow redemption of taxes, when it is discovered that the money is not needed, may it not return it to the sources from which it came? Has not Congress, in other words, full power over the whole subject? I can see no other legitimate conclusion that follows from the power conferred upon Congress.

But, Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of gentlemen of the South to this one state of things: The very decision which my friend from Alabama refers to lays down the doctrine that this is a legal tax against the people of the States. The Supreme Court says it will not suggest how the tax may be collected, intimating that it may be collected, that it is a subsisting legal tax against the people of Alabama or the people of the State of Mississippi, and that machinery may be inaugurated by which that tax can be enforced. We may even do it before this Congress adjourns.

Mr. OATES. How?

Mr. CASWELL. Why, we may provide commissioners to go down and make the levy as in former years.

Mr. OATES. I would like to see them undertake it.

Mr. CASWELL. Does the gentleman deny that we have the authority? The gentleman says he would like to see them undertake it. Does he propose to resist by force?

Mr. OATES. Not at all.

Mr. CASWELL. Of course not; I am satisfied of that. If the Supreme Court holds that it is a legal tax upon the people of the State, will the gentleman say that there can not be the necessary machinery set in motion by the same body that levied the tax to enforce its collection? Is it not in our power to originate and pass a bill that the uncollected part of this tax shall be enforced against the people of any of the States which have not paid it? Most certainly we can. And who upon this floor does not desire to relieve you from that condition of affairs?

Mr. ROGERS. But your desire now seems to be to relieve the Treasury.

Mr. CASWELL. Well, you claim that there is a great body of surplus in the Treasury. You gentlemen claim that this surplus has been accumulating and is accumulating, and you do not know what to do with it. Is this not a good way to do an act of justice—pay back the money collected and forgive the balance while we are paving the way for peace? Why not close up this whole account and spread the mantle of peace over the entire country? Why not help us when the olive branch is held out to blot out these liabilities which the Supreme Court hold to be constitutional, and which are a subsisting obligation against the people of your States?

Mr. ROGERS. But we do not want to pay $17,000,000 for one olive branch. It is paying too dear for the whistle.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The charity that the gentleman from Wisconsin wants us to accept is that charity which pays all the money over to the Northern people and cancels an alleged obligation against the Southern States.

Mr. CASWELL. But is it not a charity also to relieve a man of a liability which is hanging over him? It is a worse condition to be in debt when you have not the money to pay than to be obliged to pay money when you have it; and it is more of a charity often to relieve a man who can not pay such an obligation than to refund money which he has paid and perhaps does not need.

Mr. HOOKER. Why not give us the $68,000,000 of cotton tax?

Mr. CASWELL. That is another question. Perhaps when the gentleman introduces a bill, and can convince me there is a difference between the cotton tax and the tax levied on tobacco in the North, I may help him correct the inequality. I reserve the balance of my time. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, there are a few matters to which I wish to refer briefly. The gentleman from Wisconsin says that the clause of the Constitution which gives Congress the right to lay and collect taxes gives authority over the whole question of taxation to "remit and refund," as well as "to lay and collect." I go by the letter of the Constitution. It reads, "Congress shall have power to lay and collect." There is no such language as "remit or refund."

Now, with reference to the amount which this bill carries. There was an assessment on the States and Territories of the United States of $20,000,000. The books of the Treasury Department show that in round numbers two and a half millions of that assessment are uncollected, and that all the remainder of the assessment has been collected; that is to say, seventeen and a half million dollars have been collected, and there are yet due or uncollected about two and a half million dollars. That is a plain proposition.

The fact that the law laying this tax gave to the States 15 per cent. or the collection for making it, or employing their machinery to collect, did not diminish the gross assessment. The 15-per-cent. agreement is called in the act "assuming," and it was a part of the collection to be made. The language employed by my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL], "rebating," is not to be found in the law nor in the account kept in the Treasury Department. It follows necessarily from the language employed in this bill, "all collections made by set-off or otherwise," that the 15 per cent. retained was a part of the collection. It does not make any difference what the United States did with the money that was collected, nor whether it ever came into the Treasury. That is not the language of the bill. It does not say "all money that was collected and paid into the Treasury," but "all collections by set-off and otherwise made from the States and Territories is appropriated by this bill." This, however, is only a question as to the amount which the bill carries. Two and a quarter millions which were supposed to have been retained, and which I suppose were retained for collecting, by the terms of this bill are to be appropriated out of the Treasury for the benefit of those States and Territories, making the whole amount which this bill appropriates about $17,500,000.

It is another objection and an unjust feature of it. It has been said that the States that assumed the payment of the assessments against their people became liable therefor and the United States got the benefit of the 15 per cent., and hence it was collected. Suppose a State assumed the debt and did not pay, could the United States enforce it against that State? No. It could enforce it against the lands owned by the citizens, just as in the first instance, if the State had not assumed it. There are no set-offs credited against any States which assumed it of which they have any right to complain.

I do not care, Mr. Speaker, to consume any more time, and if no gentleman on this side desires to say anything, I shall ask a vote. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. CASWELL. I demand the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The question was put upon agreeing to the conference report; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. OATES. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 168, nays 87, not voting 67; as follows:

So the conference report was adopted.

Mr. CASWELL. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names of members voting be dispensed with.

Mr. SCOTT. I object.

The Clerk recapitulated the names.

Mr. BIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with my colleague from California [Mr. MORROW], but if he were here he would vote "yea," and consequently I have voted "yea."

The following additional pairs for the rest of the day were announced:

Mr. STONE, of Missouri, with Mr. WILLIAMS.

Mr. LEE with Mr. PAYSON.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida, with Mr. PETERS.

Mr. CRAIN with Mr. DAVENPORT.

Mr. CARLTON with Mr. WICKHAM. If Mr. WICKHAM were voting he would vote for the conference report on the tax bill.

Mr. GRANGER and Mr. RUSSELL, of Connecticut, were announced as paired until further notice.

Mr. PETERS was granted leave of absence on account of sickness.

Mr. TAULBEE and Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois, were announced as paired on the conference report on the direct-tax bill. Mr. TAULBEE would vote for the bill and Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois, against it.

Mr. ENLOE and Mr. BUTTERWORTH were announced as paired on this vote.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I am paired until Saturday with my colleague, Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, but it is within my knowledge that if he were present he would probably vote for this bill, and therefore I have voted.

Mr. CASWELL. I move to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADMISSION OF DAKOTA AND OTHER NEW STATES.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I beg to submit a conference report.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill of the Senate (S. 185) to provide for the admission of South Dakota into the Union and for the organization of the Territory of North Dakota, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to said bill and agree to the same with an amendment, namely: Strike out all of said amendment and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"SECTION 1. That the inhabitants of all that part of the area of the United States now constituting the Territories of Dakota, Montana, and Washington, as at present described, may become the States of North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, and Washington, respectively, as hereinafter provided.

"SEC. 2. The area comprising the Territory of Dakota shall, for the purposes of this act, be divided on the line of the seventh standard parallel produced due west to the western boundary of said Territory; and the delegates elected as hereinafter provided to the constitutional convention in districts north of said parallel shall assemble in convention, at the time prescribed in this act, at the city of Bismarck; and the delegates elected in districts south of said parallel shall, at the same time, assemble in convention at the city of Sioux Falls.

"SEC. 3. That all persons who are qualified by the laws of said Territories to vote for representatives to the Legislative Assemblies thereof, are hereby authorized to vote for and choose delegates to form conventions in said proposed States; and the qualifications for delegates to such conventions shall be such as by the laws of said Territories respectively persons are required to possess to be eligible to the Legislative Assemblies thereof; and the aforesaid delegates to form said conventions shall be apportioned within the limits of the proposed States in such districts as may he established as herein provided, in proportion to the population in each of said counties and districts, as near as may be, to be ascertained at the time of making said apportionments by the persons hereinafter authorized to make the same, from the best information obtainable, in each of which districts three delegates shall be elected, but no elector shall vote for more than two persons for delegates to such conventions; that said appointments shall be made by the governor, the chief-justice, and the secretary of said Territories; and the governors of said Territories shall, by proclamation, order an election of the delegates aforesaid in each of said proposed States, to be held on the Tuesday after the second Monday in May, 1889, which proclamation shall be issued on the 15th day of April, 1889; and such election shall be conducted, the returns made, the result ascertained, and the certificates to persons elected to such convention issued in the same manner as is prescribed by the laws of the said Territories regulating elections therein for Delegates to Congress; and the number of votes cast for delegates in each precinct shall also be returned. The number of delegates to said conventions respectively shall be seventy-five; and all persons resident in said proposed States, who are qualified voters of said Territories as herein provided, shall be entitled to vote upon the election of delegates, and under such rules and regulations as said conventions may prescribe not in conflict with this act, upon the ratification or rejection of the constitutions.

"SEC. 4. That the delegates to the conventions elected as provided in this act shall meet at the seat of government of each of said Territories, except the delegates elected in South Dakota, who shall meet at the city of Sioux Falls, on the 4th day of July, 1889, and, after organization, shall declare on behalf of the people of said proposed States that they adopt the Constitution of the United States; whereupon the said conventions shall be, and are hereby, authorized to form constitutions and State governments for said proposed States, respectively. The constitutions shall be republican in form, and make no distinction in civil or political rights on account of race or color, except as to Indians not taxed, and not be repugnant to the Constitution of the United States and the principles of the Declaration of Independence. And said conventions shall provide, by ordinances irrevocable without the consent of the United States and the people of said States:

"First. That perfect toleration of religious sentiment shall be secured, and that no inhabitant of said States shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her mode of religious worship.

"Second. That the people inhabiting said proposed States do agree and declare that they forever disclaim all right and title to the unappropriated public lands lying within the boundaries thereof, and to all lands lying within said limits owned or held by any Indian or Indian tribes; and that until the title thereto shall have been extinguished by the United States, the same shall be and remain subject to the disposition of the United States, and said Indian lands shall remain under the absolute jurisdiction and control of the Congress of the United States; that the lands belonging to citizens of the United States residing without the said States shall never be taxed at a higher rate than the lands belonging to residents thereof; that no taxes shall be imposed by the States on lands or property therein belonging to or which may hereafter be purchased by the United States or reserved for its use. But nothing herein, or in the ordinances herein provided for, shall preclude the said States from taxing as other lands are taxed any lands owned or held by any Indian who has severed his tribal relations, and has obtained from the United States or from any person a title thereto by patent or other grant, save and except such lands as have been or may be granted to any Indian or Indians under any act of Congress containing a provision exempting the lands thus granted from taxation; but said ordinances shall provide that all such lands shall be exempt from taxation by said States so long and to such an extent as such act of Congress may prescribe.

"Third. That the debts and liabilities of said Territories shall be assumed and paid by said States, respectively.

"Fourth. That provision shall be made for the establishment and maintenance of systems of public schools, which shall be open to all the children of said States, and free from sectarian control.

"SEC. 5. That the convention which shall assemble at Bismarck shall form a constitution and State government for a State to be known as North Dakota, and the convention which shall assemble at Sioux Falls shall form a constitution and State government for a State to be known as South Dakota: Provided, That at the election for delegates to the constitutional convention in South Dakota, as hereinbefore provided, each elector may have written or printed on his ballot the words 'For the Sioux Falls constitution,' or the words 'Against the Sioux Falls constitution,' and the votes on this question shall be returned and canvassed in the same manner as for the election provided for in section 3 of this act; and if a majority of all votes cast on this question shall be 'For the Sioux Falls constitution' it shall be the duty of the convention which may assemble at Sioux Falls, as herein provided, to resubmit to the people of South Dakota, for ratification or rejection at the election hereinafter provided for in this act, the constitution framed at Sioux Falls and adopted November 3, 1885, and also the articles and propositions separately submitted at that election, including the question of locating the temporary seat of government, with such changes only as relate to the name and boundary of the proposed State, to the reapportionment of the judicial and legislative districts, and such amendments as may be necessary in order to comply with the provisions of this act; and if a majority of the votes cast on the ratification or rejection of the constitution shall be for the constitution irrespective of the articles separately submitted, the State of South Dakota shall be admitted as a State in the Union under said constitution as hereinafter provided; but the archives, records, and books of the Territory of Dakota shall remain at Bismarck, the capital of North Dakota, until an agreement in reference thereto is reached by said States. But if at the election for delegates to the constitutional convention in South Dakota a majority of all the votes cast at that election shall be 'Against the Sioux Falls constitution,' then and in that event it shall be the duty of the convention which will assemble at the city of Sioux Falls on the 4th day of July, 1889, to proceed to form a constitution and State government as provided in this act the same as if that question had not been submitted to a vote of the people of South Dakota.

"SEC. 6. It shall be the duty of the constitutional conventions of North Dakota and South Dakota to appoint a joint commission, to be composed of not less than three members of each convention, whose duty it shall be to assemble at Bismarck, the present seat of government of said Territory, and agree upon an equitable division of all property belonging to the Territory of Dakota, the disposition of all public records, and also adjust and agree upon the amount of the debts and liabilities of the Territory, which shall be assumed and paid by each of the proposed States of North Dakota and South Dakota; and the agreement reached respecting the Territorial debts and liabilities shall be incorporated in the respective constitutions, and each of said States shall obligate itself to pay its proportion of such debts and liabilities the same as if they had been created by such States respectively.

"SEC. 7. If the constitutions formed for both North Dakota and South Dakota shall be rejected by the people at the elections for the ratification or rejection of their respective constitutions as provided for in this act, the Territorial government of Dakota shall continue in existence the same as if this act had not been passed. But if the constitution formed for either North Dakota or South Dakota shall be rejected by the people, that part of the Territory so rejecting its proposed constitution shall continue under the Territorial government of the present Territory of Dakota, but shall, after the State adopting its constitution is admitted into the Union, be called by the name of the Territory of North Dakota or South Dakota, as the case may be: Provided, That if either of the proposed States provided for in this act shall reject the constitution which may be submitted for ratification or rejection at the election provided therefor, the governor of the Territory in which such proposed constitution was rejected shall issue his proclamation reconvening the delegates elected to the convention which formed such rejected constitution, fixing the time and place at which said delegates shall assemble; and when so assembled they shall proceed to form another constitution or to amend the rejected constitution, and shall submit such new constitution or amended constitution to the people of the proposed State for ratification or rejection, at such time as said convention may determine; and all the provisions of this act, so far as applicable, shall apply to such convention so reassembled and to the constitution which may be formed, its ratification or rejection, and to the admission of the proposed State.

"SEC. 8. That the constitutional convention which may assemble in South Dakota shall provide by ordinance for resubmitting the Sioux Falls constitution of 1885, after having amended the same as provided in section 5 of this act, to the people of South Dakota for ratification or rejection at an election to be held therein on the first Tuesday in October, 1889; but if said constitutional convention is authorized and required to form a new constitution for South Dakota it shall provide for submitting the same in like manner to the people of South Dakota for ratification or rejection at an election to be held in said proposed State on the said first Tuesday in October. And the constitutional conventions which may assemble in North Dakota, Montana, and Washington shall provide in like manner for submitting the constitutions formed by them to the people of said proposed States, respectively, for ratification or rejection at elections to be held in said proposed States on the first Tuesday in October. At the elections provided for in this section the qualified voters of said proposed States shall vote directly for or against the proposed constitutions, and for or against any articles or propositions separately submitted. The returns of said elections shall be made to the secretary of each of said Territories, who, with the governor and chief-justice thereof, or any two of them, shall canvass the same; and if a majority of the legal votes cast shall be for the constitution the governor shall certify the result to the President of the United States, together with a statement of the votes cast thereon and upon separate articles or propositions, and a copy of said constitution, articles, propositions, and ordinances. And if the constitutions and governments of said proposed States are republican in form, and if all the provisions of this act have been complied with in the formation thereof, it shall be the duty of the President of the United States to issue his proclamation announcing the result of the election in each, and thereupon the proposed States which have adopted constitutions and formed State governments as herein provided shall be deemed admitted by Congress into the Union under and by virtue of this act on an equal footing with the original States from and after the date of said proclamation.

"SEC. 9. That until the next general census, or until otherwise provided by law, said States shall be entitled to one Representative in the House of Representatives of the United States, except South Dakota, which shall be entitled to two; and the Representatives to the Fifty-first Congress, together with the governors and other officers provided for in said constitutions, may be elected on the same day of the election for the ratification or rejection of the constitutions; and until said State officers are elected and qualified under the provisions of each constitution and the States, respectively, are admitted into the Union, the Territorial officers shall continue to discharge the duties of their respective offices in each of said Territories.

"SEC. 10. That upon the admission of each of said States into the Union sections numbered 16 and 36 in every township of said proposed States, and where such sections, or any parts thereof, have been sold or otherwise disposed of by or under the authority of any act of Congress, other lands equivalent thereto, in legal subdivisions of not less than one-quarter section, and as contiguous as may be to the section in lieu of which the same is taken, are hereby granted to said States for the support of common schools, such indemnity lands to be selected within said States in such manner as the Legislature may provide, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections embraced in permanent reservations for national purposes shall not, at any time, be subject to the grants nor to the indemnity provisions of this act, nor shall any lands embraced in Indian, military, or other reservations of any character, be subject to the grants or to the indemnity provisions of this act until the reservation shall have been extinguished and such lands be restored to, and become a part of, the public domain.

"SEC. 11. That all lands herein granted for educational purposes shall be disposed of only at public sale, and at a price not less than $10 per acre, the proceeds to constitute a permanent school fund, the interest of which only shall be expended in the support of said schools. But said lands may, under such regulations as the Legislatures shall prescribe, be leased for periods of not more than five years, in quantities not exceeding 1 section to any one person or company; and such land shall not be subject to pre-emption, homestead entry, or any other entry under the land laws of the United States, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, but shall be reserved for school purposes only.

"SEC. 12. That upon the admission of each of said States into the Union, in accordance with the provisions of this act, fifty sections of the unappropriated public lands within said States, to be selected and located in legal subdivisions as provided in section 10 of this act, shall be, and are hereby, granted to said States for the purpose of erecting public buildings at the capital of said States for legislative, executive, and judicial purposes.

"SEC. 13. That 5 per cent. of the proceeds of the sales of public lands lying within said States which shall be sold by the United States subsequent to the admission of said States into the Union, after deducting all the expenses incident to the same, shall be paid to the said States, to be used as a permanent fund, the interest of which only shall be expended for the support of the common schools within said State, respectively.

"SEC. 14. That the lands granted to the Territories of Dakota and Montana by the act of February 18, 1881, entitled 'An act to grant lands to Dakota, Montana, Arizona, Idaho, and Wyoming for university purposes,' are hereby vested in the States of South Dakota, North Dakota, and Montana, respectively, if such States are admitted into the Union, as provided in this act, to the extent of the full quantity of seventy-two sections to each of said States, and any portion of said lands that may not have been selected by either of said Territories of Dakota or Montana may be selected by the respective States aforesaid; but said act of February 18, 1881, shall be so amended as to provide that none of said lands shall be sold for less than $10 per acre, and the proceeds shall constitute a permanent fund to be safely invested and held by said States severally, and the income thereof be used exclusively for university purposes. And such quantity of the lands authorized by the fourth section of the act of July 17, 1854, to be reserved for university purposes in the Territory of Washington, as, together with the lands confirmed to the vendees of the Territory by the act of March 14, 1864, will make the full quantity of seventy-two entire sections, are hereby granted in like manner to the State of Washington for the purposes of a university in said State. None of the lands granted in this section shall be sold at less than $10 per acre; but said lands may be leased in the same manner as provided in section 11 of this act. The schools, colleges, and universities provided for in this act shall forever remain under the exclusive control of the said States, respectively, and no part of the proceeds arising from the sale or disposal of any lands herein granted for educational purposes shall be used for the support of any sectarian or denominational school, college, or university. The section of land granted by the act of June 16, 1880, to the Territory of Dakota, for an asylum for the insane shall, upon the admission of said State of South Dakota into the Union, become the property of said State.

"SEC. 15. That so much of the lands belonging to the United States as have been acquired and set apart for the purpose mentioned in 'An act appropriating money for the erection of a penitentiary in the Territory of Dakota,' approved March 2, 1881, together with the buildings thereon, be, and the same is hereby, granted, together with any unexpended balances of the moneys appropriated therefor by said act, to said State of South Dakota, for the purposes therein designated; and the States of North Dakota and Washington shall, respectively, have like grants for the same purpose, and subject to like terms and conditions as provided in said act of March 2, 1881, for the Territory of Dakota. The penitentiary at Deer Lodge City, Mont., and all lands connected therewith and set apart and reserved therefor, are hereby granted to the State of Montana.

"SEC. 16. That 90,000 acres of land, to be selected and located as provided in section 10 of this act, are hereby granted to each of said States, except to the State of South Dakota, to which 120,000 acres are granted, for the use and support of agricultural colleges in said States, as provided in the acts of Congress making donations of lands for such purpose.

"SEC. 17. That in lieu of the grant of land for purposes of internal improvement made to new States by the eighth section of the act of September 4, 1841, which act is hereby repealed as to the States provided for by this act, and in lieu of any claim or demand by the said States, or either of them, under the act of September 28, 1850, and section 2479 of the Revised Statutes, making a grant of swamp and overflowed lands to certain States, which grant it is hereby declared is not extended to the States provided for in this act, and in lieu of any grant of saline lands to said States, the following grants of land are hereby made, to wit:

"To the State of South Dakota: For the school of mines, 40,000 acres; for the reform school, 40,000 acres; for the deaf and dumb asylum, 40,000 acres; for the agricultural college, 40,000 acres; for the university, 40,000 acres; for State normal schools, 80,000 acres; for public buildings at the capital of said State, 50,000 acres; and for such other educational and charitable purposes as the Legislature of said State may determine, 170,000 acres; in all, 500,000 acres.

"To the State of North Dakota a like quantity of land as is in this section granted to the State of South Dakota, and to be for like purposes, and in like proportion as far as practicable.

"To the State of Montana: For the establishment and maintenance of a school of mines, 100,000 acres; for State normal schools, 100,000 acres; for agricultural colleges, in addition to the grant hereinbefore made for that purpose, 50,000 acres; for the establishment of a State reform school, 50,000 acres; for the establishment of a deaf and dumb asylum, 50,000 acres; for public buildings at the capital of the State, in addition to the grant hereinbefore made for that purpose, 150,000 acres.

"To the State of Washington: For the establishment and maintenance of a scientific school, 100,000 acres; for State normal schools, 100,000 acres; for public buildings at the State capital, in addition to the grant hereinbefore made for that purpose, 100,000 acres; for State charitable, educational, penal and reformatory institutions, 200,000 acres.

"That the States provided for in this act shall not be entitled to any further or other grants of land for any purpose than as expressly provided in this act. And the lands granted by this section shall be held, appropriated, and disposed of exclusively for the purposes herein mentioned, in such manner as the Legislatures of the respective States may severally provide.

"SEC. 18. That all mineral lands shall be exempted from the grants made by this act. But if sections 16 and 36, or any subdivision or portion of any smallest subdivision thereof in any township shall be found by the Department of the Interior to be mineral lands, said States are hereby authorized and empowered to select, in legal subdivisions, an equal quantity of other unappropriated lands in said States, in lieu thereof, for the use and the benefit of the common schools of said States.

"SEC. 19. That all lands granted in quantity or as indemnity by this act shall be selected, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, from the surveyed, unreserved, and unappropriated public lands of the United States within the limits of the respective States entitled thereto. And there shall be deducted from the number of acres of land donated by this act for specific objects to said States the number of acres in each heretofore donated by Congress to said Territories for similar objects.

"SEC. 20. That the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to each of said Territories for defraying the expenses of the said conventions, except to Dakota, for which the sum of $40,000 is so appropriated, $20,000 each for South Dakota and North Dakota, and for the payment of the members thereof, under the same rules and regulations and at the same rates as are now provided by law for the payment of the Territorial Legislatures. Any money hereby appropriated not necessary for such purpose shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States.

"SEC. 21. That each of said States, when admitted as aforesaid, shall constitute one judicial district, the names thereof to be the same as the names of the States, respectively; and the circuit and district courts therefor shall be held at the capital of such State for the time-being, and each of said districts shall, for judicial purposes, until otherwise provided, be attached to the eighth judicial circuit, except Washington and Montana, which shall be attached to the ninth judicial circuit. There shall be appointed for each of said districts one district judge, one United States attorney, and one United States marshal. The judge of each of said districts shall receive a yearly salary of $3,500, payable in four equal installments, on the 1st days of January, April, July, and October of each year, and shall reside in the district. There shall be appointed clerks of said courts in each district, who shall keep their offices at the capital of said State. The regular terms of said courts shall be held in each district, at the place aforesaid, on the first Monday in April, and the first Monday in November of each year, and only one grand jury and one petit jury shall be summoned in both said circuit and district courts. The circuit and district courts for each of said districts, and the judges thereof, respectively, shall possess the same powers and jurisdiction, and peform the same duties required to be performed by the other circuit and district courts and judges of the United States, and shall be governed by the same laws and regulations. The marshal, district attorney, and clerks of the circuit and district courts of each of said districts, and all other officers and persons performing duties in the administration of justice therein, shall severally possess the powers and perform the duties lawfully possessed and required to be performed by similar officers in other districts of the United States; and shall, for the services they may perform, receive the fees and compensation allowed by law to other similar officers and persons performing similar duties in the State of Nebraska.

"SEC. 22. That all cases of appeal or writ of error heretofore prosecuted and now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States upon any record from the supreme court of either of the Territories mentioned in this act, or that may hereafter lawfully be prosecuted upon any record from either of said courts, may be heard and determined by said Supreme Court of the United States. And the mandate of execution or of further proceedings shall be directed by the Supreme Court of the United States to the circuit or district court hereby established within the State succeeding the Territory from which such record is or may be pending, or to the supreme court of such State, as the nature of the case may require: Provided, That the mandate of execution or of further proceedings shall, in cases arising in the Territory of Dakota, be directed by the Supreme Court of the United States to the circuit or district court of the district of South Dakota, or to the supreme court of the State of South Dakota, or to the circuit or district court of the district of North Dakota, or to the supreme court of the State of North Dakota, or to the supreme court of the Territory of North Dakota, as the nature of the case may require. And each of the circuit, district, and State courts, herein named, shall, respectively, be the successor of the supreme court of the Territory, as to all such cases arising within the limits embraced within the jurisdiction of such courts, respectively, with full power to proceed with the same, and award mesne or final process therein; and that from all judgments and decrees of the supreme court of either of the Territories mentioned in this act, in any case arising within the limits of any of the proposed States prior to admission, the parties to such judgment shall have the same right to prosecute appeals and writs of error to the Supreme Court of the United States as they shall have had by law prior to the admission of said State into the Union.

"SEC. 23. That in respect to all cases, proceedings, and matters now pending in the supreme or district courts of either of the Territories mentioned in this act at the time of the admission into the Union of either of the States mentioned in this act, and arising within the limits of any such State, whereof the circuit or district courts by this act established might have had jurisdiction under the laws of the United States had such courts existed at the time of the commencement of such cases, the said circuit and district courts, respectively, shall be the successors of said supreme and district courts of said Territory; and in respect to all other cases, proceedings, and matters pending in the supreme or district courts of any of the Territories mentioned in this act at the time of the admission of such Territory into the Union, arising within the limits of said proposed State, the courts established by such State shall, respectively, be the successors of said supreme and district Territorial courts; and all the files, records, indictments, and proceedings relating to any such cases shall be transferred to such circuit, district, and State courts, respectively, and the same shall be proceeded with therein in due course of law; but no writ, action, indictment, cause, or proceeding now pending, or that prior to the admission of any of the States mentioned in this act shall be pending in any Territorial court in any of the Territories mentioned in this act, shall abate by the admission of any such State into the Union, but the same shall be transferred and proceeded with in the proper United States circuit, district, or State court, as the case may be: Provided, however, That in all civil actions, causes, and proceedings, in which the United States is not a party, transfers shall not be made to the circuit and district courts of the United States except upon written request of one of the parties to such action or proceeding filed in the proper court; and in the absence of such request, such cases shall be proceeded with in the proper State courts.

"SEC. 24. That the constitutional conventions may, by ordinance, provide for the election of officers for full State governments, including members of the Legislatures and Representatives in the Fifty-first Congress; but said State governments shall remain in abeyance until the States shall be admitted into the Union, respectively, as provided in this act. In case the constitution of any of said proposed States shall be ratified by the people, but not otherwise, the Legislature thereof may assemble, organize, and elect two Senators of the United States; and the governor and secretary of state of such proposed State shall certify the election of the Senators and Representatives in the manner required by law; and when such State is admitted into the Union the Senators and Representatives shall be entitled to be admitted to seats in Congress, and to all the rights and privileges of Senators and Representatives of other States in the Congress of the United States; and the officers of the State governments formed in pursuance of said constitutions, as provided by the constitutional conventions, shall proceed to exercise all the functions of such State officers; and all laws in force made by said Territories, at the time of their admission into the Union, shall be in force in said States, except as modified or changed by this act or by the constitutions of the States, respectively.

"SEC. 25. That all acts or parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this act, whether passed by the Legislatures of said Territories or by Congress, are hereby repealed."

And that the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the title of said bill and agrees to the same so amended as to read as follows:

"An act to provide for the division of Dakota into two States and to enable the people of North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, and Washington to form constitutions and State governments, and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, and to make donations of public lands to such States."

And that the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House striking out the preamble of said bill, and agree to the same.

WM. M. SPRINGER,
CHAS. S. BAKER,
Managers on the part of the House.

O. H. PLATT,
S. M. CULLOM,
M. C. BUTLER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. SPRINGER (after the introductory portion of the report had been read). I ask unanimous consent that the statement of the House conferees be now read, and after that I think the House will not desire the reading of the full text of the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The report seems to embody the entire bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. It does.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. The statement of the House conferees referred to by my colleague from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] embraces a concise statement of the substance of the entire bill, and I think its reading will prove satisfactory to the House. After it has been read, if any gentleman desires, then the bill can be read in full.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from New York ask unanimous consent that for the present the reading of the amendment be dispensed with, and that the statement made by the managers of the conference on the part of the House be first read, with the right to have the report read in full thereafter if desired. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House submit the following statement of the effect the amendment proposed will have upon the measure:

The amendment which the House in the first instance adopted to the Senate bill 185 provided for submitting to the people of Dakota the question of dividing the Territory so as to form two States, and required a majority of all votes cast in each proposed State to authorize division. If divided in this manner the States of North Dakota and South Dakota would be formed. If not, the State of Dakota would be formed, and provision was made for admission in either event. The Territories of Montana, Washington, and New Mexico were also authorized to form constitutions and State governments and to be admitted into the Union as States. The constitutions so formed were to be submitted to Congress for approval before admission, except in the case of South Dakota and Montana, which were to be brought in on certain contingencies through proclamation of the President.

The committee of conference having failed in the first instance to agree, reported the disagreement to the two Houses, and on the 15th instant the House of Representatives adopted the following resolution, instructing the managers on the part of the House as set forth therein:

"Resolved, That the House instructs the managers of the further conference on the part of the House to recede from the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 185) to provide for the admission of the State of South Dakota into the Union and for the organization of the Territory of North Dakota in the following respects:

"1. That the Territory of New Mexico and the proposed new State thereof may be excluded from the bill.

"2. That the bill may be so amended in conference as to provide for the admission of South Dakota by proclamation of the President under the Sioux Falls constitution, to be resubmitted to the people of South Dakota, with provisions for a new election of State and Federal officers and without a new vote on the question of division.

"3. Further providing that the proposed States of North Dakota, Montana, and Washington shall be admitted on the same basis, i. e., all of them under proclamations by the President.

"Further, that such matters as relate to the election of delegates and the apportionment of the districts from which members of the convention are to be elected, the date of holding conventions and the date of resubmission of the South Dakota constitution, and the location of the temporary seat of government in South Dakota, and such other matters as are not included in the instructions above recited, be referred to the committee of conference for their discretion."

The managers on the part of the House have complied with these instructions and have also agreed to recommend that certain amendments insisted upon by the Senate conferees in reference to matters set forth in the latter part of the third paragraph of the foregoing resolution be agreed to. The bill as now agreed upon provides for the division of Dakota into two States without further vote on that question, and authorizes the people of North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, and Washington to form constitutions and State governments. The Territory of New Mexico has been excluded from the bill.

The election of delegates to the constitutional conventions in each of said proposed States is to be held on the Tuesday after the second Monday in May, 1889, and the proclamation calling this election shall be issued by the governor of each Territory on the 15th day of April prior thereto.

In the proposed State of South Dakota, at the election for delegates to the constitutional convention, the electors may vote for or against "the Sioux Falls constitution," and if a majority shall vote in favor of that constitution the delegates when assembled in convention are required to amend that constitution in reference to the boundary and name, to the reapportionment of the judicial and legislative districts, and in such other manner as is required by this act, and to resubmit the same to the people, together with the articles and propositions separately submitted at the election in 1885, when the Sioux Falls constitution was adopted, including the question of locating the temporary seat of government. And if a majority should be against the Sioux Falls constitution, the delegates when assembled in convention shall proceed to form a new constitution in the same manner as if no proposition had been submitted in regard to the Sioux Falls constitution.

The constitutional conventions in all of the proposed States are required to assemble at the capitals of the Territories, except in South Dakota, in which the convention will assemble at Sioux Falls on the 4th day of July, 1889, and after constitutions have been formed as provided in the act, they are to be submitted to the people of the proposed States for ratification or rejection at elections to be held in each on the first Tuesday of October, 1889, at which time the conventions may provide for the election of the officers for full State governments. If the constitutions and governments of said proposed States are republican in form, and if all the provisions of this act have been complied with in the formation thereof, it is made the duty of the President of the United States to issue his proclamation announcing the result of the election in each State, and thereupon the proposed States which have adopted constitutions and formed State governments, as herein provided, shall be deemed admitted by Congress into the Union, under and by virtue of this act, on an equal footing with the original States, from and after the date of the proclamation.

A provision is also inserted in the bill to the effect that if any of the proposed States shall reject the constitution submitted in October, the governor of the Territory shall reassemble the convention for the purpose of forming a new constitution or amending the rejected constitution. And all the provisions of this act, as far as applicable, are to apply to such convention so assembled and to the constitution it may form, to its ratification or rejection, and to the admission of the proposed State.

The provisions in regard to the public lands are retained substantially as passed by the House, with the exception that the proviso in regard to the settlement of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections of unsurveyed lands is stricken out, and it is provided that such lands shall not be subject to pre-emption, homestead entry, or any other entry under the laws of the United States, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, but shall be reserved for school purposes only.

Sections 21, 22, and 23 of the bill as now agreed upon provide for the creation of United States district and circuit courts in each of the proposed States, and for the appointment of a United States district judge, United States marshal, and United States attorney in each, and for the transfer of causes from Territorial courts to such courts as may thereafter have jurisdiction of such causes.

That part of the House amendment which authorized a vote in the Territory of Washington on the question of changing the name of that Territory is stricken out.

With these changes the bill is substantially the same as was provided in the amendment to the Senate bill which passed the House in the first instance.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

WILLIAM M. SPRINGER,
GEO. T. BARNES,
CHAS. S. BAKER,
Managers on the part of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] asks unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the report of the committee of conference.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. SPRINGER the latter portion of the report, following section 25 of the amendment, was read as printed above.

Mr. SPRINGER. I demand the previous question on the adoption of the report, and I now yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARNES].

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I suppose that after the previous question is ordered there will be fifteen minutes for debate on each side.

Mr. COX. Why debate it at all?

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I do not want to debate it, but I want to have the previous question ordered.

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARNES].

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Speaker, I do not rise for the purpose of making a speech. I know how useless it would be to make a speech at this stage in the history of this legislation. I merely wish to say a word or two in explanation of the position which I occupy on this question, and I shall do scarcely more than state what that position is.

I have united with the other conferees of the House in a statement which accompanies the report as evidence of the fact of the correctness of that statement in showing the history of the different stages of legislation on this subject in the various propositions which have been before the Senate and the House. I have tried to bring myself to the conclusion to sign this report, which has been signed by the three conferees on the part of the Senate and by two conferees on the part of the House. But, sir, after full and earnest and faithful reflection on this subject, with a deep desire to come to the same conclusion which has been reached by my associates, I could not conscientiously sign the report which they have signed, and I have therefore withheld my name from the recommendation in favor of the passage of this bill. I shall not attempt at this stage of the discussion to enter into any argument upon it. I will not weary or delay the House now. I have reasons, and they are controlling with myself. I shall content myself simply with a vote in the negative.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the report of the committee of conference was adopted.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to. [Loud applause.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLOUNT, Mr. TAULBEE, and others addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CRISP). The Chair will lay before the House a message from the President of the United States and several other executive communications.

LANDS OF SEMINOLE INDIANS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Congress:

I herewith submit for your consideration a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a proposition made on behalf of the Seminole Nation of Indians for the relinquishment to the United States of their right to certain lands in the Indian Territory.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 19, 1889.

The message, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BLOUNT, Mr. TAULBEE, and others addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House will please be in order. The Chair, acting under the rules, is laying before the House matters which are on the Speaker's table.

Mr. PEEL. I ask that the Committee on Indian Affairs be permitted to report back at any time on the message of the President, just referred.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Indian Affairs may have the privilege of reporting at any time on the message and accompanying papers just laid before the House, and referred to that committee.

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

Mr. TAULBEE. I desire to submit a privileged matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to lay before the House, under the rule, papers which are on the Speaker's table and which are the first thing in order. What is the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE]?

Mr. TAULBEE. I desire to make a report—a privileged report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will first lay before the House several communications which are on the Speaker's table.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS FOR DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates of deficiencies in appropriations for the service of the District of Columbia for the fiscal years 1888 and 1889; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF KEY WEST, FLA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a preliminary report of a board of engineers upon the further improvement of the entrance to Key West Harbor, Florida; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

SUSPENDED LAND ENTRIES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a list of suspended land entries adjudicated by the Commissioner of the General Land Office and confirmed by the board of equitable adjudication for the year ending June 30, 1888; which was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

WASHINGTON AND GEORGETOWN RAILROAD COMPANY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the annual report of receipts and disbursements of the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ENLOE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled the bill (H. R. 8557) for the relief of Dr. David Bell; when the Speaker signed the same.

CENSUS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 1659) to provide for taking the eleventh and subsequent censuses; said bill having been returned from the Senate with amendments.

Mr. COX. If there be no objection, I would like to have these amendments of the Senate concurred in.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the gentleman will not press that proposition now.

Mr. COX. If there be objection I will not press it, but I do not think the proposition will be objected to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will submit the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX]. Unanimous consent is asked to consider now the amendments of the Senate to the bill the title of which has just been read. Is there objection?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. COX. Allow me one moment.

Mr. TAULBEE. Certainly.

Mr. COX. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Census, with the privilege to report back at any time.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to that.

Mr. COX. It is urgent business.

Mr. RANDALL. There is other urgent business. There is objection to its coming back at any time.

WILLIAM ENGLISH.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the bill (H. R. 3721) authorizing the President to appoint William English an officer in the regular Army of the United States, returned from the Senate with amendment.

Mr. HOOKER. I move that the amendment of the Senate be agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

Mr. HOOKER. Let it remain, then, upon the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and that will be done.

STATUE OF LEWIS CASS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following resolutions:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the thanks of Congress be tendered to the governor, and through him to the people of the State of Michigan, for the statue of Lewis Cass, whose name is so conspicuously connected with the development of the Northwest Territory and with eminent services to his State and country both at home and abroad.

Resolved, That the statue is accepted in the name of the nation and assigned a place in the old Hall of Representatives, and that a copy of these resolutions, signed by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, be transmitted to the governor of the State of Michigan.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask by unanimous consent that to-morrow at half past 3 o'clock in the afternoon these resolutions be considered by the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. O'NEALL, of Indiana, and Mr. LYNCH objected.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Mr. Speaker, no one rises to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. LYNCH] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. O'NEALL] have objected.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Well, then, I will put the hour at 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

Mr. RANDALL. These resolutions can be considered by the House, and after they have been disposed of the House can then proceed to other business.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I will say 4 o'clock to-morrow afternoon.

Mr. LYNCH. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the resolutions will be referred to the Committee on the Library.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. GALLINGER, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for three days, commencing Thursday morning, on account of important business.

LANDS OF SEMINOLE INDIANS.

Mr. PEEL. I ask by unanimous consent that the President's message which was laid before the House be withheld and be allowed to remain upon the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has been laid before the House, and has been referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. PEEL. I desire that it shall remain upon the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Committee on Indian Affairs will be discharged from the further consideration of the President's message, and it will be allowed to remain upon the Speaker's table. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

STATUE OF LEWIS CASS.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, in view of the refusal to take up and consider the resolutions which have come from the Senate accepting the statue of Lewis Cass, will the Speaker please tell us what we are to do with the statue if it is not accepted?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is hardly a parliamentary inquiry.

A MEMBER. Take an evening session to the resolutions.

PURCHASE OF PROPERTY IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. TAULBEE. I rise to submit the report of the committee to investigate the purchase of real estate for the District of Columbia.

Mr. RANDALL. Has that committee the right to report at any time?

Mr. TAULBEE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLOUNT. I rise to ask a question.

Mr. TAULBEE. What is it?

Mr. BLOUNT. Is the object of the gentleman from Kentucky to present his report in order to have it printed?

Mr. RANDALL. Has the committee the right to report at any time?

Mr. TAULBEE. It has the right to report at any time. You may rely on me for that. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL. Examine the record.

Mr. TAULBEE. There is an order of the House authorizing the committee to report at any time by bill or otherwise. I request that the views of the minority be submitted with those of the majority, and, together with the accompanying testimony, be printed.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. With the reports?

Mr. TAULBEE. Certainly; and the whole matter be re-referred to the committee.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I object to that. Let the committee be discharged from further action on the subject.

The SPEAKER. When was the report made?

Mr. TAULBEE. The report is now submitted.

Mr. RANDALL. Subject to the inquiry it is a privileged report, and that the committee has the right to report at any time.

Mr. TAULBEE. It is privileged. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL. I have no recollection that leave was given the committee to report at any time.

Mr. TAULBEE. I do not desire to consume the time of the House by deciding questions of order. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL. Well, no; I desire the Speaker to decide this question.

Mr. TAULBEE. I do not think the gentleman from New York would have any objection to the request I made.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I have most decided objections.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will examine the resolution.

Mr. TAULBEE. A copy of the resolution is submitted in the report of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The resolution gives the committee leave to report by bill or otherwise at any time.

Mr. ROWELL. I move that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

The SPEAKER. That motion is unnecessary. When a select committee makes its report, unless it be recommitted to the committee, it is necessarily discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

Mr. TAULBEE. I do not believe we will disagree; and I submit to the gentleman from Illinois that the object of the recommitment is for the purpose of correcting whatever mistakes may have been made in the testimony, and for the purpose of further considering whether or not the committee should take further action. I desire to state that I represent the minority of the committee.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. My friend is the minority.

Mr. REED. How many are there in the minority?

Mr. TAULBEE. I am the minority of the committee.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. What is the majority of the committee?

Mr. BLOUNT. I appeal to the gentleman from Kentucky——

The SPEAKER. This matter is not debatable except by unanimous consent.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to debate.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not desire to debate the question, but simply to state to my friend from Kentucky that I yielded to him, as I understood, to ask consent to have the report printed. I now ask him to withdraw it, as it seems likely to lead to protracted debate.

Mr. TAULBEE. I did not bring about any protracted debate; it is not my fault.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the recommittal of the report.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 59, noes 72.

Mr. TAULBEE. I make the point that no quorum has voted; and pending that, I demand the yeas and nays.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, was received.

INVESTIGATION OF SCHOOL-SITE PURCHASES, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky demands the yeas and nays on the motion to recommit.

Mr. CHEADLE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote understandingly on the question that is submitted, and ask for a statement of the question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already stated it.

Mr. CHEADLE. There has been no statement as to the report. I am asked to recommit a report which I do not know anything about.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to have it read.

Mr. CHEADLE. Then I demand the reading of the report.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I ask by unanimous consent the report of the majority be read, and that I think will satisfy everybody.

The SPEAKER. There is no report but that of the majority.

Mr. TAULBEE. In the reading of the report, on the demand of the gentleman from Indiana, does that also include the reading of the views of the minority?

The SPEAKER. It does not.

Mr. TAULBEE. I ask by unanimous consent they be read in connection with the report.

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Let the evidence be read in connection with this report. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAKER, of New York. That will take too much time.

Mr. CRISP. Pending that, if all that mass of papers at the desk is to be read, I call up the contested-election case.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. That is the testimony. The reading of this bill will not take long.

The SPEAKER. The report is brief, and the Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

The undersigned members of the committee appointed under a resolution of the House, a copy of which is as follows:

"IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, January 14, 1889.

"Mr. HEMPHILL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, submitted the following, which was agreed to:

"Whereas it is stated in certain newspapers that the commissioners of the District of Columbia have, in recent purchases of real estate within and for the use of the District of Columbia, paid to and through certain agents appointed or employed by them prices above that asked or received by the vendors or owners of such property, contrary to law: Therefore,

"Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives appoint a special committee of five members to investigate the matter of the purchases of real estate by the commissioners of the District, and report to the House in writing, at any time, by bill or otherwise; and that said committee be furnished a stenographer by assignment by the Speaker from the roll of stenographers now in the employ of the House; and that they be authorized to employ a clerk at a compensation of $6 per day; and that said committee be authorized to sit during the sessions of the House and authorized to administer oaths and send for persons and papers; that the expenses of said investigation be paid out of the contingent fund of the House;" respectfully report:

That they have considered the evidence submitted upon such investigation, and which is hereto annexed, and upon the facts established find and report the following conclusion:

The commissioners of the District of Columbia in the exercise of their official duties have been charged with the duty of acquiring the title to certain real estate for school sites and other public uses in the city of Washington. In the absence of any express authority of law to employ an agent in the purchasing of such sites or to institute any proceedings for the condemnation of lands desired for public uses, they, in their discretion, requested Mr. John S. Cox, an attorney and real-estate agent, to assist in the procuring and purchasing of certain sites for such uses; that they stated to Mr. Cox that they were not authorized to accord any compensation, but that he must look to the persons from whom the purchases might be made for payment of any and all fees, commissions, or compensations; that certain purchases were made by the District, wherein said Cox acted mainly in the interest of the grantors to the District and received certain fees and commissions as a real-estate agent or attorney, aggregating about $3,000 upon purchases of real estate aggregating in cost upwards of $75,000; that as appears from the testimony of all the witnesses, and there is no evidence to the contrary, the several parcels of real estate purchased by or for the commissioners for the use of the District of Columbia were purchased at reasonable and fair prices; that in no instance was any exorbitant or unreasonable price paid by the commissioners of the District for school or other sites, and in our opinion the commissioners are, respectively, entitled to full exoneration from any charge or imputation of wrong.

The methods employed by the commissioners are, it is true, susceptible of abuse. It is indeed a question whether any method that may be prescribed by law may not be subject to abuse. The pending legislation pertaining to the purchases of sites contemplates a provision authorizing the District commissioners to employ an agent in such cases, and further conferring authority upon them to institute proceedings in the courts of the District of Columbia through which lands required for public uses may be acquired by condemnation and appraisal. There is no doubt in the minds of the undersigned that under either of the methods last mentioned the cost of the lands and sites acquired, as shown by the testimony, would have been much greater than it was under the method practiced by the commissioners.

We feel it due, in conclusion, to state that there were but two questions raised by the investigation: First, was any wrong or fraud perpetrated upon the public in the several purchases in question, or in any of them? Secondly, were the commissioners, or either of them, guilty of any disposition to co-operate in any way in the acquisition of said sites, or any of them, at prices above their real value? To each of these questions we unhesitatingly answer in the negative. All of which is respectfully submitted.

CHARLES S. BAKER.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced the passage of a concurrent resolution, that in the enrollment of the bill (S. 3640) to amend the laws relating to the selection and service of jurors in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, the Committee on Enrolled Bills is authorized and directed to strike out the word "fifty-two" where it occurs in the first line of section 8 and substitute the word "sixty-two," and requested concurrence therein.

It also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2511) to provide for the disposal of certain public lands of the United States under the provisions of the homestead laws only, asked a conference thereon, and had appointed as managers on its part Mr. PLUMB, Mr. HISCOCK, and Mr. BERRY.

It further announced the passage of bills of the following titles; in which concurrence was requested:

A bill (S. 3751) for the relief of certain settlers in Hettinger County, Dakota;

A bill (S. 3938) granting the use of certain lands in the Hot Springs reservation, in the State of Arkansas, to the Hot Springs Benevolent Association; and

A bill (S. 3921) to authorize the Kentucky Union Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Kentucky River and its tributaries.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 2511) to provide for the disposal of certain public lands of the United States under the provisions of the homestead laws only; and by unanimous consent an order was made that the House insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference requested.

Mr. HOLMAN, Mr. PAYSON, and Mr. MCRAE were reappointed as conferees on the part of the House.

INVESTIGATION OF SCHOOL-SITE PURCHASES, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. TAULBEE. I demand the reading of the proof, as it has been made a part of the majority report.

Mr. RANDALL. It is not a part of the report.

The SPEAKER. The rule of the House as it has been laid down is that the matter which is to be voted upon shall be read if the reading is demanded; but if it is insisted that the proof shall be read, that question will have to be decided by the House. The House does not vote upon the proof. It is simply a question now with the House whether it shall have it read or not.

Mr. TAULBEE. I desire to state that I have no purpose whatever to consume the time of the House, but I ask that this report be recommitted. If I understood the reading of the majority report the proof constitutes a part of that report in express terms.

The SPEAKER. All committees of investigation are required to report back the evidence taken, but it constitutes no part of the matter upon which the House is required to vote.

Mr. TAULBEE. I think that as they have referred to the proof in their report, it becomes a part of the report; and I dare say that gentlemen will readily understand how it would be unfair for the House to vote on the majority report after the reading of the proof, without having heard or read the views of the minority.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Is debate in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The Chair thinks this is altogether unusual upon a motion to recommit.

Mr. TAULBEE. My point of order is, that the proof is a part of the report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order; and will, if the gentleman insists upon the reading, let it be decided by the House whether it shall be read or not.

Mr. TAULBEE. I do not insist. I do not want to take up the time of the House.

The SPEAKER. Only fifteen gentlemen have arisen in support of the demand for the yeas and nays, and the yeas and nays are refused.

Mr. TAULBEE. Now, Mr. Speaker, I had made the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman made the point of no quorum, and the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER].

The tellers took their places, and after some time spent in the count,

Mr. TAULBEE said: I will withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I do not withdraw it.

Mr. TAULBEE. I do not care; I am ahead.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] voted in the affirmative under a misapprehension.

Mr. TAULBEE. I have no objection to the change of the vote if I could have an opportunity to see some of our members and see if they did not vote under a misapprehension.

The tellers reported—ayes 83, noes 86.

So the motion to recommit was not agreed to.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Now, I move to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to recommit the report; and also move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. TAULBEE. Can the gentleman from New York make that motion to reconsider and lay on the table, as he did not make the report?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from New York to make the report from the committee.

Mr. TAULBEE. But I made the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York represents the majority, and the majority represents the committee. The gentleman from Kentucky represents the minority.

Mr. TAULBEE. I yield to the gentleman from New York. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I now move to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to recommit the report; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. TAULBEE. I hope that will be done without debate, but on that motion to lay on the table I will demand the yeas and nays. Before doing so I make the point of order that the gentleman has no right to make the motion to reconsider and to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is overruled.

The question was put on laying the motion to reconsider on the table; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. TAULBEE. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 70, noes 21.

Mr. TAULBEE. There is no quorum.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE].

Mr. RANDALL. Has that testimony been ordered by the House to be printed?

The SPEAKER. Not yet.

Mr. RANDALL. That is why I object.

Mr. TAULBEE. I only ask for the usual number to be printed, and I believe it is customary for the testimony to be printed with the report without a motion.

The SPEAKER. The usual number will be printed without a motion, and the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] is that the views of the minority may be printed with that usual number. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table was agreed to—ayes 129, noes 31.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move to postpone the report indefinitely, and upon that I call the previous question.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to make any further motion, but I think this report might be allowed to take the usual course. If the gentleman does not desire to consume further time, he had better let the report lie upon the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] demands the previous question upon his motion.

Mr. TAULBEE. I hope the previous question will be ordered.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. TAULBEE. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to be recognized in opposition to the motion. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has fifteen minutes.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask the Clerk to read the views of the minority as a part of my remarks.

The Clerk read as follows:

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

The undersigned dissents from the views expressed in the foregoing report, and submits the following conclusions:

The testimony taken before the committee, as sworn to by the witnesses, is relied upon to establish the conclusions hereinafter submitted; but the testimony as submitted with the majority report has, since it was taken, been so changed and modified as to admit of a possible doubt of the conclusions of the minority.

For instance, the testimony as given by Mr. John F. Cox touching the relationship which he bore in the matter of purchases of real estate for the District of Columbia tends to establish the conclusion that he acted as the agent for the commissioners; but the testimony as submitted leaves room for possible doubt on this subject. For instance, in his testimony concerning the purchase of the property in square 796 the following question was asked him: "Q. Did you always submit it to him?" (meaning Commissioner Webb). His answer was: "A. Always to him." But as the testimony reads which the majority of the committee submit with their report his answer reads: "A. Always in the case of school sites." In this connection the further question was asked him: "Did you do it in the case of police-station sites?" His answer as sworn to was: "I think so. After that Mr. Webb was in the habit of getting Mr. Entwistle, inspector of buildings, to consult with me as to the reasonableness of the price of the property offered, and in addition to that he would also call upon the trustees in a particular district."

The answer given in the testimony as submitted with the majority report is, "Not to Mr. Wheatley. After that the commissioners were in the habit of getting Mr. Entwistle, inspector of buildings, to consult with them as to the reasonableness of the price of the property offered, and in addition to that they would also call upon the trustees in a particular district."

Touching the same matter, the following question was asked Mr. Cox: "Did you pay the money to the persons from whom the purchase was made, or did the commissioners pay it?" To which he gave the following answer: "The commissioners paid it." But the testimony as submitted makes him answer, "The commissioners did not pay it." In this same connection, touching the matter of his purchase of this property as to the time, the following question was asked of Mr. Cox: "Was that" (meaning his purchase of the property) "before or after you had been called upon by the commissioners of the District to purchase property for the District?" His answer as given on oath was, "It was after." In the proof submitted by the majority of the committee Mr. Cox is represented as giving the following answer: "It was before."

Many other changes materially affecting the issues raised by the investigation have been made in the testimony without the formal consent of the committee. The testimony as detailed before the committee establishes the fact that Mr. Cox was not a real-estate agent at the time of making these purchases; but that his services were in some way not fully explained by the testimony procured by the commissioners in the matter of purchases of real estate. The fact, however, that he acted as the agent of the commissioners in these purchases, and that they fully relied on his conduct as such agent of the negotiations without ever questioning his methods or the prices submitted to them through him, can not be doubted by any one who will read the testimony, even in its modified form, as submitted by the majority of the committee. Whether his agency was absolute, or in the nature of a quasi agency, as stated by one of the commissioners in his testimony, it is immaterial as to the views here submitted.

The further fact is established by the testimony of divers persons from whom purchases were made that Mr. Cox acted also as their agent in selling the property to the District. This dual agency enabled Mr. Cox to purchase property from the owners at a given price and to sell it to the District for a greater price, the profits thus realized being greatly in excess of the ordinary and usual commissions paid to regular dealers in real estate. For example, in the purchase of the property known as the ninth precinct station Mr. Cox's testimony, as detailed before the committee, clearly establishes the fact that after the site was agreed upon as a desirable one for this purpose, and a personal inspection of the premises had been given by Mr. Cox, Commissioner Wheatley, and the chief of police, Mr. Cox proceeded to purchase the property for himself. But, for reasons which have not been explained to the satisfaction of the minority of the committee, the purchase was had in the name of a third party, who is shown to have had no real interest in the transaction, from which third party a different and higher price was submitted to the commissioners of the District, and by them accepted, the difference in the two prices going to Mr. Cox, the commissioners paying the price accepted by them to the third party per G. Repetti, attorney, which attorney is shown to have been an interested party in the original ownership of the property and a member of the firm of Weller & Repetti, who had the property for sale as agents of real estate.

So also in many of the other purchases; parties wholly disinterested in the transaction were used as intermediaries through whom the purchases and conveyances were made, when Mr. Cox was the real party in interest and the party to whom the profits inured.

The testimony establishes the further fact that in most of the cases in which Mr. Cox acted as purchaser or vendor (or whatever relationship he may have sustained both to the commissioners and the original owners), it is shown that the names of disinterested parties were used in the conveyances, the profits in each case, however, inuring to Mr. Cox.

The fact that the commissioners knew, or that they in any event could have known, by the exercise of reasonable diligence, or even a casual observation of the affairs of their office, the full nature of Mr. Cox's connection with these transactions in the beginning of his operations and prior to his opening negotiations for subsequent purchases, can not be reasonably questioned by any one who will read the testimony.

The minority of the committee do not agree with the conclusions of the majority to the effect that but two questions were raised by the investigation, namely, "was any wrong or fraud perpetrated upon the public in the several purchases in question, or any of them; and, secondly, were the commissioners or either of them guilty of any disposition to co-operate in any way in the acquisition of said sites, or any of them, at prices above their real value," and that "to each of these questions unhesitating answers in the negative" should be given. But, in the opinion of the minority of the committee the questions to be determined are, did the commissioners exercise proper diligence and caution in the purchase of property for the District; did they purchase the property as cheaply as they could have done by negotiating directly with the owners; and did they exercise reasonable and ordinary diligence in preventing a waste of the money belonging to the District of Columbia?

On these points the minority of the committee believes that the testimony establishes beyond question the fact that in most of the cases in which Mr. Cox acted as the intermediary, the purchases could have been made from the owners of the property at the price which the District paid, less the profits resulting by the transaction to Mr. Cox.

And while the commissioners, in the opinion of the minority of the committee, have not profited or attempted to reap any profits to themselves from any of these transactions, they unquestionably had an understanding with Mr. Cox, their warm personal friend, that he should by these transactions make an unreasonable and unusual profit.

The minority of the committee is neither unmindful of, nor indifferent to, the fact that the duties devolving upon the commissioners of the District of Columbia are extraordinary and difficult to perform; but the extraordinary nature of these duties, and the difficulty liable to be encountered in an efficient performance of them, tend rather to establish the conclusion that the most efficient, diligent, and painstaking method of performing these duties should be employed rather than the conclusion that a wide latitude should be given to the commissioners in these matters, clothed as they are with extraordinary powers and prerogatives.

And while the commissioners, in the opinion of the minority of the committee, have not been guilty of anything that would be considered criminal, their methods have been unwise and injudicious, and it savors of a favoritism, the result of which has enabled those favored by them to realize extraordinary compensation for the work necessary to be performed in the matter of these purchases at the expense of the interests of the tax-payers of the District of Columbia.

The minority recommends that Congress prohibit by proper legislation the repetition of these questionable methods of administering the affairs of the District, and thus check the evident tendency to manage the public affairs of the District in the interest of individuals and private interest.

W. P. TAULBEE.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, I shall content myself with a single additional observation, and that is that members doubtless have been cognizant of the difficulties which I have encountered at every step looking to this investigation, from the introduction of the first resolution on the first bill day of the present session down to this time. I wish now to say that I am willing that the House may take this matter and deal with it as they deem proper, I, however, having the consciousness that I have discharged the duty which devolved upon me to the best of my ability. If some gentleman desires to speak upon the other side I reserve the remainder of my time. If not, I am willing that we shall now have a vote.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Vote.

The question was taken on the motion to postpone the report indefinitely; and it was agreed to—ayes 57, noes 34.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I ask by unanimous consent the morning hour be dispensed with and that gentlemen having reports from committees to present be allowed to file them with the Clerk for reference under the direction of the Speaker; also that members of the minority have a right to present their views.

Mr. TAULBEE. I will object to that after the fight which the gentleman [Mr. BLOUNT] has made against the privileged report.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have not made any fight against your report.

Mr. TAULBEE. I withdraw my objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no further objection, and it was so ordered.

FILING OF REPORTS.

The following reports were filed by being handed in at the Clerk's desk:

ELIZA MURPHY.

Mr. LAWLER, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 12209) for the relief of Eliza Murphy; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LIFE-SAVING STATION AT MOUTH OF COQUILLE RIVER, OREGON.

Mr. TARSNEY, from the Committee on Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 11643) providing for the establishment of a life-saving station at the mouth of Coquille River, Oregon; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

COL. JESSE H. STRICKLAND.

Mr. GEAR, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back the bill (H. R. 4847) for the relief of Col. Jesse H. Strickland, Eighth Tennessee Cavalry; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GEORGE W. FISHER.

Mr. SIMMONS, from the Committee on Claims, reported a bill (H. R. 12630) for the relief of George W. Fisher; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GEORGE H. BECKWITH.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, from the Committee on War Claims, reported a bill (H. R. 12631) for the relief of George H. Beckwith; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

TITLE TO LOTS, JUNEAU, ALASKA.

Mr. HEARD introduced a bill (H. R. 12629) to enable the inhabitants of the town of Juneau, Alaska, to obtain title to the lots improved by them in said town; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

JULIA M. EDIE.

Mr. WHEELER. I rise to a privileged question. On the 30th day of January the previous question was ordered on a bill (S. 3325) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Julia M. Edie, and I would like to have that bill considered now. It is a privileged matter.

Mr. BLOUNT. I must raise the question of consideration against that bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] will send up the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. Is objection made? If it be understood that I may have an opportunity to bring up this measure when the appropriation bills are out of the way, I am willing to yield——

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir; nothing of that sort is agreed to.

The SPEAKER. This is a privileged matter; the gentleman from Alabama will please send up the bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. I must raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman to do so; but the title of the bill must be read that the House may understand what is the question.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (S. 3325) granting an increase of pension to Julia M. Edie.

The question being taken, Will the House now proceed to consider the bill? it was determined in the negative.

Mr. WHEELER. I will not press this matter further just now, but will call it up hereafter as soon as I can get an opportunity.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled the bill (S. 139) to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861; when the Speaker signed the same.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to resume the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12490) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890.

The pending amendment was read, as follows:

On page 3, in lines 1 and 2, strike out "$1,200" and insert "$900," so as to read:

"Secretary and stenographer to postmaster, five classes: salary, graded in even hundreds of dollars, from $900 to not exceeding $1,600 per annum."

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose the vote was being taken by tellers on this question, and no quorum having voted, the Chair had appointed as tellers the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT]. The tellers will now resume their places.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 17, noes 142.

Mr. HOLMAN. The vote shows very nearly a quorum, and I will not insist further on the point.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend by striking out "$1,200" and inserting "$1,000."

The question was taken on the amendment; and there were—ayes 15, noes 74.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to suggest a vote be allowed on this question in the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. I can not agree to that. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], in pursuing this policy all along the line—but I will not give any reason.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will not press the point of "no quorum," although I regret very much that the Committee of the Whole has made this decision.

The CHAIRMAN. On this question the tellers report—ayes 15, noes 74; so the amendment is rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Cashier, five classes, salary: graded in even hundreds of dollars, at $1,800, $2,000, $2,200, $2,400, and not exceeding $2,600 per annum.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to raise a point of order on this paragraph, upon the ground that it embraces legislation not authorized by the unanimous consent given by the House under the order to which attention has already been called. I desire to be heard a moment upon this point.

Mr. Chairman, there is no ambiguity in the language of the consent given by the House making certain matter in order on this bill. The request was for permission to classify the clerical force in the post-offices—the clerical force in the post-offices. It has been said in the progress of this discussion, by the gentleman of Georgia, that official records may sometimes be referred to for the purpose of ascertaining the meaning of a term. I have before me the classification of employés—all of them or certain of them—in the post-offices. Among others, I find in this classification assistant postmaster, chief clerk, superintendent of division, and then a number of clerks—mailing, general-delivery, stamp, registry, money-order, stamper, porter, janitor or general utility, night, distributing, superintendent of stationery.

In the proper place in this report cashiers are mentioned. I take it for granted that the Chair will decide that the term "clerk," as made use of in the agreement consented to by the House, meant just exactly what the word itself implies, and that the purpose was a classification of the clerks in the post-offices as in the Departments; because in the colloquy that occurred that inquiry was expressly made and was answered in the affirmative. Officers of this class—cashiers—are not "clerks" within the meaning of that agreement. I concede that if the request had been to classify the "employés" in the post-offices it would have covered not only clerks but superintendents, cashiers, and other employés; but the term "employé," a general term, was not employed; no general term was employed from the beginning to the end of that colloquy. The understanding was that clerks alone were to be classified, as in the Departments.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, there is little that I can say, or, as I think, that needs to be said, on this point. The gentleman from Indiana has stated that he has before him the list of employés in the Department.

Mr. HOLMAN. No; I referred to the report made by you, your own classification.

Mr. BLOUNT. Well, it is the same thing. The report made by me contains a statement from the Postmaster-General of the number of employés. The subject is the classification of clerks, and he sends in that list.

There is no such thing known in the statutes relating to the Post-Office Department as a "cashier;" there is no such thing known to the statute as "paper distributers" or "letter distributers;" and so I might go on with nine-tenths of the designations of the clerks in the various post-offices.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Georgia whether the duties assigned to cashiers have hitherto been performed by clerks.

Mr. BLOUNT. All the while, sir; never an exception.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would be glad to be heard on that point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman again.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to be heard further, because if the ruling on this point should be such as to defeat the intention of the House in the consent which was given, it will of course prevent anything of that kind ever occurring again so far as those gentlemen now present are concerned, I hope.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this proposition is subject to the additional objection, according to the statement of the gentleman from Georgia himself, that the office of cashier is not now known to the law. This is, therefore, new legislation, and legislation to which consent has not been given.

Will the Chair permit me to inquire if there is any law now creating the office of cashier, and, if not, whether this bill does not create that office? Can it be held, under this appropriation bill, this office of cashier can be created?

It seems to me to be utterly impossible there is any ground upon which this classification of clerks can stand. The gentleman brings in a bill providing for a cashier. Suppose the assistant postmaster performs his duties, or suppose the superintendent performs his duties, does that authorize their classification as clerks?

Mr. Chairman, good faith and fairness are jewels in all legislative bodies as well as in all other human transactions. When it was asked to classify these clerks, as in the other Departments, everybody here understood what that meant. It meant exactly what it said, that they should be classified as in other Departments. You do not classify cashiers; you do not classify superintendents in the other Departments; you classify clerks into first, second, third, and fourth classes. That was the permission asked, and that was the permission granted. I appeal in the interest of fair dealing that the gentleman from Georgia has no right to build on that a general consent giving permission which the words themselves do not express. The permission was to classify clerks. If cashiers are to be classed as clerks and a new office created then there is not a single employé in the Post-Office Department except perhaps the Postmaster-General himself and the Assistant Postmasters-General who may not be classified as clerks, no matter what may be their business. Superintendents are provided for, and yet will anybody say a superintendent is a clerk in the understanding of any of the Departments? We are now acting on a rule of consent, and that rule ought not to receive a strained meaning. Common fairness requires the rule should receive the meaning intended at the time the permission was asked and granted. If the gentleman from Georgia had asked permission to make the classification provided for in this bill I would not have given my consent, but would have objected. When permission was asked to classify the clerks in the Post-Office Department we knew what such classification meant; that the clerks should be classified, as in other Departments, into first, second, third, and fourth classes.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does the gentleman understand this bill proposes to classify clerks in the Post-Office Department?

Mr. HOLMAN. I asked this question in this colloquy——

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman does not apprehend me. He used the expression, "Here is a proposition to classify clerks in the Department."

Mr. HOLMAN. If he understood me correctly, he understood me to say in that colloquy it was a classification in that Department; that is, into first, second, third, and fourth classes, as in every other Department.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to say a word right here. Now, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has alluded to the question of frankness. I regret in his zeal to accomplish any purpose he should forget to be fair and decorous himself. I hope to be decorous to the gentleman from Indiana. It is due to myself and to the House. That colloquy disclosed there was no bill proposed at all. The committee had not acted on it. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] suggested we should wait until we had agreed on a bill. The proposition was simply to classify the clerks. After that had been agreed to the gentleman from Indiana attempts to create the impression—but I am quite sure that he can not do it in the mind of the Chair—that some of the clerks are designated as cashiers. I am addressing a high intelligence when I am addressing the Congress of the United States, and I do not discuss this as though I were discussing it before a petty jury.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is hard on the jury.

Mr. BLOUNT. Here it is in the bill itself:

For compensation to clerks in post-offices, $6,550,000.

That is the fault of that appropriation for more than a decade. There is no designation of a single person beyond that of clerk in the Post-Office Department. For convenience it has been found necessary to designate some of the clerks as cashiers, some as finance clerks, some as superintendents of divisions, some as separaters and assorters; entirely a matter of regulation which the Postmaster-General has authority to make.

Now, when we come to classify the clerks, we have seen proper to call the clerks assigned to a certain duty by a particular name for the purpose of convenience. I might call them by some other name than cashiers, and still assign them to that duty; but what avail would that be? They are still clerks, and it is simply a matter of convenience to so designate them, and nothing more. This designation, then, is inserted here because it is a convenient thing in an office to know when a man is called a "cashier" that he has a certain class of clerical duties to perform, and when he is called a "stamp clerk" that he has another special class of duties to perform, and so on throughout the list. These men are assigned to duty and their designation indicates the duty to which they are assigned, and that is all. It is simply a matter of convenience, and ever since I have been a member here these persons have been provided for in the appropriation bills under the designation of "clerks in post-offices," and the reports of the Postmasters-General, so far as I know, have indicated the same designation all the way through.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule upon the question of order.

Mr. BINGHAM. I should like to be heard for a few moments.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, this legislation in this bill pertains only to first and second class post-offices, and in these two classes of offices there are two designations of the subordinate force, the one being "clerks" and the other being "carriers." Legislation covers the classification of the carrier force already. But for years past the Department have been trying to classify the clerical force of these first and second class post-offices. In the report of the Postmaster-General a year ago this classification was recommended, but it is more complete in this bill than in the report that he submitted, which, as I have said, was a recommendation for the classification of the clerks. In this bill there has been the creation of no offices and no indication of new offices other than that which has been always used in the first and second class post-offices.

The mere expression, as used in the bill, of "cashier" or "superintendent" is simply the designation of a clerk, used for convenience—a man paid under the appropriation for the clerical force, acting as a cashier or acting as a clerk, as the case may be, under the appropriation for clerical allowance in that office.

Every man in the first or second class offices is either a clerk or a carrier, and the indication of his specific name is simply inserted here as a matter of convenience in the office, which title describes the line of duty or service which he performs. The cashier is simply a clerk having charge of the finances of the office; and, Mr. Chairman, he has been paid in every appropriation bill under the head of appropriations for clerical hire for post-offices.

Mr. HOLMAN. One word, Mr. Chairman, on that point. I insist that the terms used here should be the same as are commonly employed; and that is all I have asked. The Chair will take into account any Department of this Government and see the application of the point I make. Take, for instance, the Treasury Department. Is the cashier there designated as a clerk? Go into the banking houses of the country, where both terms "cashier" and "clerk" are employed; is the cashier a clerk, or is the clerk a cashier? Go into any business establishment in the country and you will see that there is a clear distinction in the terms.

But the point I sought to make is that in any event here is an attempt to create an office by a new law, to create an office hitherto unknown to the law—that is to say, it is admitted that the office of cashier is unknown by that designation. Somebody had to perform the duty. That is true; but is it not legislation to designate an employé in an office as "cashier," giving him a name and character hitherto unknown in this service, when there is no law authorizing such a designation? Would that not be new law itself? So if you depart from the matter really in hand the point of order is clearly applicable against the appropriation; for the Chair can not hold that a cashier is in the ordinary sense of the term a clerk. If the Chair can so hold, my point of order should be overruled. But if on the other hand the terms "clerk" and "cashier," as usually employed, do not mean the same thing, but indicate different functions or employments, I insist my point of order should be sustained, and that bad faith should not result in this, that a consent given for one object should be, by interpretation, applied to an entirely different purpose—that is, the creation of the office of cashier—when the consent of the House was simply to the classification of clerks, and that only.

Mr. CANNON. If the Chair will allow me, just a single word on the classification of clerks. If the Chair will look on page 2 of the bill, at lines 12 and 13, he will find that it reads: "The Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to classify and fix the salaries of clerks and employés." That is legislation; and then you go ahead and detail what the employés shall do. Now, as they are reached, one by one, the gentleman from Indiana makes the point of order upon the employés and does not make the point of order upon the clerks.

Mr. BLOUNT. I simply want to state the additional fact that he does perform clerical work.

Mr. HOLMAN. And the Postmaster-General and the First Assistant Postmaster-General do clerical work; but does that make the Postmaster-General a clerk in the ordinary sense of the word?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the order heretofore granted should receive its reasonable intendment. So far as the Chair knows the duties heretofore performed by clerks are now to be performed by some one to be designated—as cashier in this instance. The order giving the power to classify did give the power to make new legislation to that extent; and the order to classify, the Chair thinks, included the power to designate the duties of each class. The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order.

Mr. KERR. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish the gentleman would yield to me for a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to move that the committee rise. I have agreed to make that motion at ten minutes to 5.

Mr. KERR. I only want two minutes; but, Mr. Chairman, so many gentlemen seem to be anxious that the committee shall rise that I will not hold the floor. I rose for the purpose of moving that this section be stricken out.

Mr. BLOUNT. There are only a few minutes more, and I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. DOCKERY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12490) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PEEL. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to make the privileged report which I send to the Clerk's desk, and I ask unanimous consent to extend the time of the session before taking recess. It will take only a little time to consider it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] asks that the session be extended until the completion of the consideration of this report. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. Are we not to have a session to-night, and can not this come up to-morrow?

Mr. PEEL. It is not a conference report. I ask the Clerk to read the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent to make a request before that. I want to ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Public Lands have to-morrow night for a session.

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I object.

Mr. PEEL. It is privileged.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that the gentleman desires to consider the Senate bill. The Clerk will read the title of the bill, and then the Chair will submit the request.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3920) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Muscogee (or Creek) Nation of Indians in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, that subject was referred to the committee with the President's message with leave to report at any time.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask that the time be extended so as to dispose of this matter and the census matter.

Mr. COX. All right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the request. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend the time of the session until the completion of the consideration of this bill and the bill relating to the census.

Mr. MILLS. I object. Let them come up in the morning.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to the substitution.

Mr. BAYNE. I object to the substitution of the Senate bill for the House bill.

Mr. WEAVER. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WEAVER. The point of order I make is that the objection does not lie. It was a subject that was referred to the committee, and not a particular bill; and the President's message in this regard was referred to the committee.

Mr. PEEL. The Speaker of the House informed me that I had a right to report it at any time.

Mr. BAYNE. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. RANDALL. I renew it.

Mr. PEEL. I desire to say that the message of the President of the United States relating to this matter was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, with leave to report at any time; and the Speaker said that I could.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes; on a House bill at any time.

Mr. PEEL. It is exactly like the bill of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is impossible for the Chair to decide the point of order in the time remaining of the session before 5 o'clock unless the time is extended. The Chair is not familiar with the terms of the order granting the Committee on Indian Affairs the right to report upon this matter at any time.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask that the time be extended.

Mr. MILLS. I object.

Mr. PEEL. I ask that the time be extended five minutes.

Mr. MILLS. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour of 5 o'clock——

Mr. PEEL. I ask leave to withdraw the report without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection that order will be made.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, according to previous order the House takes a recess until 7 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 7.30 p. m.

Mr. HATCH took the chair as Speaker pro tempore and directed the reading of the following communication:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 20, 1889.

I hereby designate Hon. W. H. HATCH to preside as Speaker pro tempore at the session of the House this evening.

JNO. G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK, Clerk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the special order under which this evening's session is held.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That on Wednesday, February 20, 1889, at 5 o'clock p. m., the House shall take a recess until 7.30 p. m., the evening session to be devoted to the consideration of measures reported from the Committee on Commerce and conference reports that may be ready for submission, said session to terminate not later than 10 o'clock p. m.

PORT OF PORTLAND, OREGON.

Mr. CLARDY. I call up a bill (S. 24) to extend the limits of the port of Portland as a port of entry.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the limits of the port of Portland, in the State of Oregon, as a port of entry, be, and the same are hereby, extended so as to include all that portion of the east bank of the Willamette River lying opposite to the city of Portland, for a distance of 1 mile in width, and extending from the south boundary line of the corporate limits of the city of Portland down said east bank of said river to a point directly opposite to the lower end of Swan Island, in said river.

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Speaker, this is of great importance as well as convenience to the commercial interests of my State. This bill will include the flourishing city of East Portland, Oregon, in the port limits, and I hope the bill will pass.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CLARDY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PORTS OF ENTRY AT TACOMA AND SEATTLE.

Mr. CLARDY. I call up the bill (S. 1128) to create ports of entry at Tacoma and Seattle.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Tacoma, Wash., and Seattle, Wash., be, and they are hereby, constituted ports of entry in the Puget Sound customs collection district, and that the privileges of the first and seventh sections of an act approved June 10, 1880, entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," be, and the same are hereby, extended to said ports.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CLARDY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SECTION 2579 REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. CLARDY. I call up the bill (H. R. 12414) to amend section 2579 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2579 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby amended so as to read:

"SEC. 2579. There shall be in the collection districts in the State of Texas the following officers: In the district of Galveston, a collector, who shall reside at Galveston; a deputy collector, who shall reside at Sabine Pass, and said deputy collector shall have power to enter and clear all vessels coming to that port and exercise such other powers as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe in pursuance of law; a surveyor who shall reside at Velasco, and a surveyor who shall reside at Houston."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CLARDY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DISTRICT OF TAMPA, FLA.

Mr. CLARDY. I call up the bill (S. 1721) establishing a customs district in Florida, to be known as the collection district of Tampa, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a collection of customs district be, and the same is hereby, established on the Gulf coast of the State of Florida, to be known as the collection district of Tampa.

SEC. 2. That said district shall include the territory south of a line immediately north of Anclothe Key light-house, running easterly across the peninsula to Indian River, and thence south to a point opposite to and north of Charlotte Harbor, and thence westerly across the peninsula to the coast north of Charlotte Harbor, and midway between Manatee Bay and Peace River and Charlotte Harbor.

SEC. 3. That the collector for the port of Tampa shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall be paid a salary of $2,000 per annum. There shall also be appointed an appraiser and such inspecting and other officers as the Secretary of the Treasury shall consider useful or necessary for the transaction of the business of the port and for the prevention of smuggling within the district.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, this seems to me rather a strange measure. Secretary Folger, and also his successor in office, recommended the discontinuance of a large number of collection districts, and in view of that fact it seems to me quite extraordinary that we should be engaged here in creating new ones. The Committee on Ways and Means also have been in favor of discontinuing a large number of these districts, and certainly it seems strange that we should be called upon to create a new collection district at this time.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. Mr. Speaker, the remarks just made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] add strength to the reasons in favor of this measure. It is true, sir, that it was the policy of the administration preceding the present one, and also the policy of this Administration, to discontinue certain collection districts, but the Secretary of the Treasury recommends that this district be created. The increase of business has been so great as to render it absolutely necessary. Tampa has grown from 2,000 to 8,000 within a few years; the commerce of the place demands the establishment of this district, and the Secretary of the Treasury recommends it.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I know nothing about the proposed district myself, and if the Secretary of the Treasury has recommended that it be created I shall not interpose any objection. I merely call attention to the fact that Secretary Folger and also his successor have both said to this House in official communications that they could save $500,000 a year by the abolishment of a number of collection districts, but I suppose that the abolishment which they recommended did not embrace this district. Having said this much, I shall not interfere with the bill, as it is recommended by the Secretary.

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Speaker, I want to say in reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Texas that we have recommended the passage of no bill that has not been urgently recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury. The committee recommended an amendment, in line 2, striking out "Anclothe" and inserting "Anclote."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARDY. I offer an additional amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 3, section 1, strike out the words "collection of customs" and insert in lieu thereof "customs collection."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CLARDY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COLLECTION DISTRICT OF MEMPHIS, TENN.

Mr. CLARDY. I call up the bill (H. R. 5032) to extend the limits of the collection district of Memphis. It is a bill which does not involve the expenditure of any money, and it is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the limits of the present port of Memphis, Tenn., be extended from Beale street southward to Jackson street, and that the east line of the present port be extended southward until it intersects said Jackson street.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CLARDY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS POTEAU RIVER, NEAR FORT SMITH, ARK.

Mr. CLARDY. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP].

Mr. CRISP. I call up the bill (H. R. 11735) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Fort Smith and Choctaw Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Poteau River, in the Choctaw Nation, near Fort Smith, Ark."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that this bill is upon the Private Calendar.

Mr. CRISP. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be considered in the House.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill, which was read.

Mr. CRISP. This bill is amendatory of the original act, and relates merely to the jurisdiction of the courts.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS COOSA RIVER, ALABAMA.

Mr. CRISP. I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 11338) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Coosa River at Gadsden, in the State of Alabama. This is a bridge bill to which the Senate has added a formal amendment. I ask that the amendment be concurred in without reading.

There being no objection, the amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER, ABOVE ST. CHARLES, MO.

Mr. CRISP. I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 12515) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Missouri River at the most accessible point between the mouth of the Femme Osage Creek and a point 2 miles above the city of St. Charles, in the county of St. Charles, in the State of Missouri." This is a bill amending a previous bridge bill. There was a bill passed granting to another company the rights with reference to this bridge. This measure amends that act so as to give the rights to the successors of that company.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill also is on the Private Calendar.

Mr. CRISP. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be considered in the House.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The bill, having been read, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection it will be understood that where bridge bills have been referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union or the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, the committee will be discharged from their further consideration and they will be considered in the House. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

BRIDGE OVER MISSOURI RIVER AT OR NEAR KANSAS CITY.

Mr. CRISP. I now call up the bill (S. 3146) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Missouri River at or near Kansas City, Kans., and not over 10 miles above the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railway bridge at Kansas City, Mo. This is a bill in which our deceased friend, Mr. Burnes, of Missouri, was interested. For that reason I ask that it be taken up out of its order. The bill has been referred to the Committee on Commerce and carefully examined. It contains all the usual provisions for the protection of navigation. As the bill is somewhat lengthy I ask that the reading of it be dispensed with, and that it be considered without reading.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection that order will be made.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LIGHT-HOUSE AT POINT ISABEL, TEXAS.

Mr. CLARDY. I call up the bill (H. R. 11342) providing for the re-establishment of the light-house at Point Isabel, Texas.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is on the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. CLARDY. I ask that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be now considered in the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the light-house at Isabel, in the State of Texas, be re-established, at a cost not to exceed $8,000.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Before the word "Isabel," in line 3, insert the word "Point."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KILGORE. As I understand, this bill proposes to erect a light-house at Point Isabel, to take the place of one which has been abandoned.

Mr. CLARDY. This is for the purchase of a site and the erection of a light-house. It is stated by the Light-House Board that unless this bill be passed the board will be put to an expense of some $35,000.

Mr. KILGORE. Has the bill passed the Senate?

Mr. CLARDY. No, sir; it has not; but a similar bill——

Mr. KILGORE. Then it will be a saving of $27,000 to let this bill go through?

Mr. CLARDY. Yes, sir; and the State of Texas gets the benefit of the expenditure.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CLARDY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONTAGIOUS AND INFECTIOUS DISEASES.

Mr. CLARDY. I call up the bill (H. R. 1526) to prevent the introduction of contagious and infectious diseases into the United States, and to establish a bureau of public health. I ask that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of this bill. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAVIS].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri asks that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of this bill, and that it may now be considered in the House. Is there objection?

Mr. CRISP. I think I shall have to object.

Mr. CLARDY. Well, then, I withdraw the bill. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WILSON] to call up another bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I will ask the chairman why he abandons that bill.

Mr. CLARDY. I am only abandoning it for the time being, pending the discussion between the gentleman from Georgia and the gentleman from Massachusetts, to see if some arrangement can not be arrived at.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Because the question whether the House will act upon that or not may influence the consideration of some other measures.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House has not entered upon the consideration of it, and the gentleman has a right to withdraw it for the present.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I know he has the right, but I have the right to know the status of the question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is withdrawn for the present.

BRIDGES ACROSS RED RIVER.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask consideration of the bill (S. 3666) to amend an act entitled "An act granting to the city of Grand Forks, Dak., the right to build two free bridges across the Red River," approved May 21, 1888.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of an act entitled "An act granting to the city of Grand Forks, Dak., the right to build two free bridges across the Red River," approved May 21, 1888, be, and it is hereby, amended by inserting after the words "under this act," in line 1, the words "below the mouth of the Red Lake River;" and, further, after the words "said bridge," in line 11, insert as follows: "And any bridge built under this act, above the mouth of the Red Lake River, shall be built with one draw-span of not less than 87 feet in the clear, measured at low water, and this draw-span shall be over the main channel at the most accessible and best navigable point, and the other span may be less than 80 feet and be kept clear of trestle-work;" and the spans shall not be of less elevation than 3 feet above extreme high-water mark as known at the point of location, measured to the lowest part of the superstructure of said bridge; also, by inserting in line 13, after the words "parallel to," as follows: "And except above the mouth of the Red Lake River;" and also by inserting, in line 15, after the word "stream," as follows: "And above the mouth of the Red Lake River the bridge may be placed at an angle of 83 degrees with the direction of the current of the stream."

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. This is recommended by the Committee on Commerce, and reported by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP].

Mr. CLARDY. And recommended by the Chief of Engineers.

The bill was considered, ordered to a third reading; accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PORT OF DELIVERY, PORT ANGELES, WASH.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I now ask consideration of the bill (S. 28) to create a port of delivery at Port Angeles, in the district of Puget Sound, Washington Territory.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Port Angeles is hereby created a port of delivery in the district of Puget Sound, Washington Territory.

The bill was considered, ordered to a third reading; accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS RED RIVER, LOUISIANA.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 10319) to authorize the Natchitoches Railroad Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Red River in Louisiana. I ask that the reading of the bill be dispensed with as it is in the usual form of bridge bills, is reported by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], and is recommended by the Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment recommended by the Committee on Commerce will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In section 1, line 19, add the words "and equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph companies."

Also, in section 6, strike out, in line 12, the word "five" and insert "three;" so it will read: "And if said bridge is not commenced within three years," etc.

Also, in line 13, strike out "ten" and insert "five;" so it will read: "And completed within five years," etc.

The amendments were concurred in.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BLANCHARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LIGHT-HOUSE, OYSTER-BED SHOAL, NEW YORK.

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Speaker, I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 10832) for the establishment of a light-boat with fog-bell on Oyster-Bed Shoal, in the Hudson River, New York.

I will state that this bill carries no appropriation, is recommended by the Light-House Board, and I ask that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a light-boat with fog-bell be established at or near Oyster-Bed Shoal, in the Hudson River, opposite Rockland Lake Dock, New York, at a cost not to exceed $10,000.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendments:

In line 3 strike out the word "boat" and insert "house." In line 4, change "Oyster-Bed" to "Oyster-Beds;" and in line 6 strike out "$10,000" and insert "$35,000."

Also amend the title so as to read: "A bill for the establishment of a light-house with fog-bell on Oyster-Beds Shoal, in the Hudson River, New York."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The amendment to the title was also concurred in.

Mr. CLARDY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LIGHT-HOUSE AND FOG-SIGNAL, HUMBOLDT, CAL.

Mr. CLARDY. I ask to call up the bill (H. R. 12430) providing for the establishment of the light and fog-signal at Humboldt, Cal., upon a more secure site, and for the establishment of a light-ship at or near the wreck of the steam-ship Oregon, in New York Harbor.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the light and fog-signal at Humboldt, Cal., be established upon a more secure site, at a cost not to exceed $25,000; and that there be established in the vicinity of the wreck of the steam-ship Oregon, entrance to New York Harbor, a light-ship with a steam fog-signal, the entire cost of which shall not exceed $60,000.

Mr. CLARDY. This bill as originally introduced provided simply for the establishment of a light and fog-signal at Humboldt, Cal., but the committee has reported this substitute for the original bill, No. 1226, providing also for the establishment of a light-ship in the vicinity of the wreck of the steam-ship Oregon, at the entrance to New York Harbor.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CLARDY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection the bill H. R. 1226 will be laid upon the table.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

STEAM-TENDER ON THE GREAT LAKES.

Mr. CLARDY. I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 12431) providing for the construction of a steam-tender for service on the Great Lakes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a steam-tender for light-house duty on the northwestern lakes be constructed, at a cost not to exceed $85,000: Provided, That the construction of said tender shall be let to the lowest responsible bidder after advertisement.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CLARDY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LIGHTS ON CONEY ISLAND.

Mr. CLARDY. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 11527) to establish lights on the western end of Coney Island, New York.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to establish a light or lights on the western end of Coney Island, New York, at a sum not to exceed $25,000.

The committee propose, in line 4, after the word "lights," to insert "and a fog-signal."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CLARDY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LIGHTS ON THE COAST OF MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. CLARDY. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 12310) providing for the establishment of certain lights on the coast of Mississippi.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be established range-lights to guide into the mouth of the Pascagoula River, Mississippi, at a cost not to exceed $1,000.

SEC. 2. That there be established a light on the east bank of Pearl River, Mississippi, opposite the draw in the railway bridge, at a cost not to exceed $250.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CLARDY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LIGHT-HOUSE AT SIUSLAW RIVER, OREGON.

Mr. CLARDY. I now call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 7066) providing for the establishment of a light-house at or near the mouth of the Siuslaw River, in the State of Oregon.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to establish a light-house at or near the mouth of the Siuslaw River, in the State of Oregon, at a cost not to exceed $80,000.

Mr. CLARDY. I now yield to the gentleman from Oregon, who desires to offer an amendment.

Mr. HERMANN. I move, in line 4, after the word "at," to insert the words "Heceta Head," and strike out the word "or" in the same line.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HERMANN. This measure has the indorsement of the Light-House Board, which favorably recommends the construction of said light-house to be located at Heceta Head near Siuslaw River, Oregon. The reasons for said construction are fully shown by said board, chief among which is the statement that for 90 miles between Capes Arago and Foulweather, on the Pacific coast, there is now no light, and that the proposed light at Heceta will be between these points, and that "a coast light is required to divide the dark space between the two lights above mentioned." A first-order light at or near Heceta Head is sufficiently near the mouth of Siuslaw River; and it is recommended that the proper steps be taken to establish such light.

This is a light-house which our people have sought for during several years. The Siuslaw is one of the beautiful rivers of Oregon; its commerce is rapidly increasing, and it should be properly encouraged and protected. An enterprising and intelligent people have settled that fertile valley, and soon we may expect a railway to connect the coast with the trunk-line railways of the interior. I beseech the House to pass this just measure.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HERMANN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LIGHT-HOUSE OFF POINT PENINSULAR, LAKE MICHIGAN.

Mr. CLARDY. I now call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 11678) providing for the erection of sundry light-houses and fog-signals in Lakes Erie, Huron, Michigan, and Superior.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a light-house be established at or near Eleven-foot Shoal, off Point Peninsular, Lake Michigan, Michigan, at a cost not exceeding $60,000, and when said light shall be completed the light now maintained at Point Peninsular shall be discontinued,

That a light-house and fog-signal be established at Squaw Island, Lake Michigan, at a cost not exceeding $25,000.

That there be established a light-house at or near Old Mackinac Point, at a cost not exceeding $25,000, and when the same shall be completed the light maintained at McGulpin's Point shall be discontinued.

That a fog-signal and range-lights be placed on the end of the west pier at Ashtabula, Ohio, Lake Erie, at a cost not exceeding $7,000.

That there be established a fog-signal at Michigan Island, Lake Superior, at a cost not exceeding $5,500.

That there be established a red and white flash-light and fog-signal on the Rock of Ages, Lake Superior, at a cost not exceeding $15,000.

That there be established a fog-signal on South Fox Island, Lake Michigan, at a cost not exceeding $5,000.

That a fog-bell be placed at the east end of Portage Ship-Canal, at a cost not exceeding $9,000.

The committee recommend the following amendment: In line 12 strike out the word "Mackinac" and insert the word "Mackinaw," and strike out all after line 17.

The amendmend was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CLARDY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LIGHT-HOUSE AND FOG-SIGNAL AT CHICAGO, ILL.

Mr. CLARDY. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 12113) for the establishment of a light-house and steam fog-signal on the outer breakwater at the harbor at Chicago, Ill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $50,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to establish a light-house and steam fog-signal on the easterly end of the outer breakwater at the harbor of Chicago, Lake Michigan, Illinois: Provided, That this light may be established at any time without regard to the completion of said breakwater.

The committee recommend an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That a light-house and steam fog-signal be established on the easterly end of the outer breakwater at the harbor of Chicago, Lake Michigan, Illinois, at a cost not to exceed $36,000: Provided, That this light may be established at any time without regard to the completion of said breakwater.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CLARDY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LIGHT-HOUSE, ST. CATHERINE ISLAND, GEORGIA.

Mr. CLARDY. I next call up the bill (H. R. 12324) for the establishment of a light-house station on St. Catherine Island, State of Georgia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to establish a light-house station on St. Catherine Island, State of Georgia, at the point which the Light-House Board may select as the most eligible, and that the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for that purpose.

The committee recommend the following amendments:

In line 3 strike out the word "War" and insert "the Treasury." In lines 6 and 7 strike out the words "and that the sum of" and insert "at a cost not to exceed;" and strike out lines 8 and 9.

The amendments were agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CLARDY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LIGHT-HOUSE OFF CAPE HATTERAS, NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. CLARDY. I call up the bill (S. 1283) making an appropriation for the erection of a light-house on or near Diamond Shoal, off Cape Hatteras, North Carolina.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $500,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the erection of a light-house on or near Diamond Shoal, off Cape Hatteras, North Carolina: Provided, That such contractors for doing this work may be selected by the Light-House Board as may, in the judgment of the board, be best fitted by reason of skill, experience, possession of plant and control of means to do the work, payments to be made in the discretion of the board, upon the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The committee propose to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That a light-house be established on or near Diamond Shoal, off Cape Hatteras, North Carolina, at a cost not to exceed $500,000: Provided, That the contractors for doing this work shall be the lowest responsible bidders and best fitted by reason of skill and experience to do the work: And provided further, That payments shall be made therefor, as the work progresses, in the discretion of the Light-House Board, and subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

And to amend the title to conform to the bill.

Mr. CLARDY. It will be seen, Mr. Speaker, that this bill requires the expenditure of a very considerable amount of money—$500,000. It was introduced in the early part of last session. The committee then considered the bill, and listened, of course, to the suggestions made by the Light-House Board, but because the committee was not satisfied of the ability of the board to complete the structure for the amount of the estimate and was not thoroughly satisfied of the feasibility of the project, it refused to recommend the passage of the bill.

During the present session the committee has listened to the members of the Light-House Board, and have ascertained that a contract can be made by which the structure can be completed for the sum of $500,000, which, of course, is a very large sum of money. In addition to that it has heard from the persons engaged in shipping on the coast of the very great danger to which lives and property are subjected at this place. Indeed, I think within the last ten days there has been a loss of several lives at this place, and within the last two or three years a large number of people have been drowned there. So the committee did not feel at liberty any longer to withhold this bill from the consideration of the House. I believe the bill ought to pass. I want to say the amendment provides that unless success is achieved in the building of this light-house it shall cost the Government nothing. The contractor assumes the risk. He gives bond for the faithful completion of the work.

I yield a moment to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. LATHAM], and apologize for the time I have already consumed.

Mr. LATHAM. Mr. Speaker, it would be utterly impossible in the short time allowed me by the chairman of the Committee upon Commerce to properly impress upon the members of the House the vast importance of the measure now under consideration.

To gentlemen who are already acquainted with the general conformation of the Atlantic coast and have any knowledge of our marine history from its earliest period until the present day, it would be an idle waste of time to dwell upon the dangers of Cape Hatteras and the innumerable disasters which have occurred in its vicinity.

To those who know nothing of the appalling terrors and horrible fate of the brave and gallant seamen who have confronted its dangers, any words of mine would fail to adequately portray them.

The sea is a voracious and insatiate monster. Its white-capped waves are constantly beckoning to destruction, and its voice, like the horse-leech's daughter, is ever calling for more victims. Youth and old age, wealth, intellect, beauty, all have alike been swept away in its remorseless wrath, and lie wrapped in its cold embrace. Its dangers and terrors have been told in prose and in verse and in every language. Whether portrayed in the beautiful periods of the Psalmist or tabulated in their dry details by the Light-House Board, they excite the sympathy and appeal to the humanity of every reader. Its moods are as variable and uncertain—

> As the shade
> By the light quivering aspen made.

Roused by the battling winds as they sweep across its bosom to the full height of its majestic wrath, it rushes with irresistible force from the shores of one continent to those of another, sweeping as with a besom of destruction everything in its path, till, tired and spent, it falls back, like a giant exhausted, before the barriers erected by Omniscience against its further encroachments. At times it sleeps as calmly as the infant at its mother's breast; at times it tosses like a strong man in fever. In its anger, terrible; in its serenity, beautiful; in every mood and at all times grand and majestic.

But, Mr. Speaker, just at that point where our eastern sea-line, after pursuing almost a due southern course for more than 500 miles, turns abruptly to the southwest, there lies a sand reef known the world over as Diamond Shoals. Perhaps on account of this angle made in the coast-line, perhaps from other causes, there has been formed here a reef upon which more lives have been lost and more treasure destroyed than anywhere else on the Eastern seaboard.

While the sea sleeps elsewhere it here knows no rest. The pulsations of its mighty bosom are ceaseless and eternal. Its white-capped waves, though repulsed, are never conquered. Its battalions fall back only to again advance. It knows no pity, no remorse. Baffled in its onward march, it wreaks its revenge on everything that comes within its magic influence. The strongest ship that ever rode the main, though her ribs were forged by the Cyclops, is a cockle-boat in its mighty grasp. When the sound of its waves as they break in white foam on the outer Diamond falls upon the ear of the mariner, he "leaves hope behind," for his doom is sealed. No ship has ever ridden its waves in safety; the Angel of Mercy has never drawn from its swirling waters a human being that its waves have once ingulfed.

It is upon this point, around which cluster so many terrible associations and so many harrowing recollections, where so many of those who "go down to the sea in ships" have met untimely ends, where so much hard-earned treasure lies buried, that it is proposed to establish a danger-signal, that far-flashing above the crest of the highest waves of the Atlantic shall carry timely warning to the commerce of the world of the dangers that menace it.

I desire, Mr. Speaker, to impress upon the House the fact that this bill is not of local but of national importance. From every section of the country—from Maine to Texas, from the ship-builders of New England, from the merchants of New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Norfolk, Charleston, Savannah, New Orleans, Galveston, from the shippers of every port worthy the name, from all the large companies engaged in marine insurance—petitions to the Light-House Board urging speedy action in this direction have been received. The leading journals of the country have taken up the question and are demanding that the commercial interests of the country shall be protected.

It will be bad statesmanship and worse economy to close our ears to these demands. It will be the merest folly to attempt to evade our duty or escape responsibility. For more than six years these demands have been made. The Senate has already risen to the measure of its duty. Let us be as liberal and broad in our views and erect to the memory of the present Congress a monument more enduring than brass and more lasting than marble.

Mr. Speaker, it was originally proposed to place a light-ship off Diamond Shoals instead of erecting a light-house. This was soon, however, determined to be impracticable. Buoys were placed outside the shoal and anchored with the heaviest cables. The action of the waves, rubbing one link against another, very shortly destroyed these cables, and the buoys floated from their anchorage. For the same reason no light-ship could safely weather a storm on this coast.

The only argument, Mr. Speaker, that has ever been urged against the passage of this bill, the only reason why the Committee on Commerce have not long since reported it, is that it was considered impracticable to erect a permanent structure at this point. But, sir, this is not true. We have not as yet sounded the possibilities of engineering skill; but more difficult feats than this have been successfully performed. The deepest water on this reef is only 17 feet. A light has been erected and is now in successful operation in the German Ocean, celebrated for its storms and disasters, in 35 feet of water.

But the most complete and conclusive answer to the objection is that the most skillful engineers of the country have declared that the scheme is entirely practicable. And, sir, to settle this matter beyond any sort of controversy, I am informed that a firm entirely solvent has offered to erect the structure at its own expense, to require the payment of nothing until it is complete, and even then to leave 20 per cent. of the contract price in the Treasury for a period of five years as a security to the Government.

Mr. Speaker, I have submitted these facts to the House in the assured confidence that it will recognize the necessity of passing this bill, and that, although the amount may seem large, it will sink into insignificance when the lives and property of our fellow-citizens are in hourly jeopardy.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the bill as amended to a third reading.

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Speaker, I understood the chairman of the Committee on Commerce [Mr. CLARDY] to say that the Government would not be at any expense whatever about this light-house unless it should prove a success. Now, I want to ask him how he is to know that it is going to be a success, when the bill provides for the payment of the money as the work progresses.

A MEMBER. The contractor gives a bond.

Mr. DUNHAM. That is true, but the bill provides that payment shall be made therefor as the work progresses. Now suppose the work progresses from day to day and each day you pay a little money, and when you get through the work is found not to be a success, what will be your remedy? I am not opposed to this bill, but I do not understand the statement of the chairman of the committee, in view of this provision in the bill.

Mr. CLARDY. Then, Mr. Speaker, I will repeat what I said before, that a bond is to be given for the faithful execution of the work and for the refund of the money unless the work proves a success.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CLARDY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The title was amended so as to conform to the bill.

Mr. LATHAM, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to print remarks in the RECORD in connection with the bill.

BRIDGE BILLS.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, we have quite a number of bridge bills which we desire to have considered and of which I have sent a list to the Clerk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10721) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River at or near Cumming's Landing, Lincoln County, Arkansas.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I want to state about that bill, and about all of these bridge bills, that if there is any failure in any of them to contain all the provisions that have been suggested by the War Department it is due to an oversight; but I do not think there is any such failure. There is not one of them in which the report of the engineers with reference to protecting substantially the interests of navigation has been disregarded. Therefore, if there be no objection, I ask that these bills be considered and passed by their titles. Of course if any gentleman objects to any particular bill I will withdraw that for separate action.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] asks unanimous consent that the reading of these bills be dispensed with except by title, in view of the statement just made. Is there objection?

Mr. DUNHAM. I object.

Mr. CLARDY. The gentlemen certainly does not want to have all these bridge bills read at length.

Mr. DUNHAM. I simply want to make a statement, and I have to object in order to get the chance to make it. I suggest that the first bill on the list had better be read, inasmuch as the Commerce Committee of this Congress has put some clauses into these bridge bills that have never been in any such bills heretofore. Let the first bill be read in order that gentlemen present may see wherein it differs from former bridge bills, and then I shall have no objection to the request of the chairman.

Mr. CLARDY. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] that we have already passed several bridge bills to-night, and the gentleman himself is on the subcommittee to consider those bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the first bill.

The Clerk read the bill H. R. 10721 in part.

Mr. DUNHAM (interrupting the reading). Mr. Speaker, the clauses that I desire to call attention to having been read, I do not insist upon the further reading of the bill.

The substitute reported by the committee was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The original bill (H. R. 10609) was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI NEAR ALMA, WIS.

Mr. CRISP. I call up the bill (S. 2816) to authorize the construction of a bridge for railway purposes across the Mississippi River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota, to be located north of and in the vicinity of the city of Alma, Wis.

Mr. HAUGEN. I believe there are two amendments to this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the amendments to this bill have already been agreed to by the House when it was up on a former occasion. The question is now on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. What are those amendments?

Mr. HAUGEN. They are those proposed by the gentleman from Minnesota himself. The first one is in regard to the more definite location of the bridge, and the second extends the time for the commencement of the work from one to two years, and for its completion to three years.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Those are all?

Mr. HAUGEN. Those are all.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HAUGEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE OVER ST. JOHN'S RIVER, FLORIDA.

Mr. CRISP. I now call up the bill (H. R. 10588) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the St. John's River, in the State of Florida.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

At the end of section 3 insert the following:

"And equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph companies, and the United States shall have right of way over said bridge for postal telegraph purposes."

In line 13 of section 6 insert, after the words "shall not be," the word "commenced or."

After the word "Congress," in line 4 of section 7, insert the words "or the Secretary of War."

Add the following as a new section:

"SEC. 8. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date thereof."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE TENSAS RIVER, LOUISIANA.

Mr. CRISP. I call up the bill (S. 3285) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Tensas River, at or near Kirk's Ferry, La.

The amendment as reported by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 7, section 1, strike out "Kirk's" and insert "Daniel's."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI AT LEAVENWORTH, KANS.

Mr. CRISP. I call up the bill (H. R. 11649) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between the city of Leavenworth, in the State of Kansas, and Platte County, in the State of Missouri.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

VICKSBURG, SHREVEPORT AND TEXAS RAILROAD COMPANY.

The next bill, called up by Mr. CRISP, was the bill (H. R. 11782) to approve and ratify the construction by the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad Company of the bridge over the Red River at Shreveport, La., and the bridge over the Ouachita River at Monroe, La., and to authorize said railroad company to maintain said bridges over said water ways, subject to certain stipulations and conditions.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Add the following as a new section:

"SEC. 8. That on the failure of the said railroad company to obey this act and to conform to the provisions thereof any municipal corporation adjacent to said bridges, or interested in the enforcement of this act, or any other corporation, person, or persons injuriously affected by such failure, may institute suit against said railroad company, by mandamus or other appropriate proceedings, in the circuit court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which said bridges are located, in the name of the United States, upon the relation of the party complaining, to enforce the provisions of this act. Such suit shall be brought by the United States district attorney for the district within which said bridges are situat d, and said court shall have full power by its judgment and decree to compel said railroad company to comply with the provisions of this law."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGES ACROSS THE KENTUCKY RIVER.

The next bill, called up by Mr. CRISP, was the bill (H. R. 11573) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Kentucky River.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGES ACROSS RED RIVER.

Mr. CRISP called up for consideration the bill (S. 3666) to amend an act entitled "An act granting to the city of Grand Forks, Dak., the right to build two free bridges across the Red River," approved May 21, 1888.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS YOUNG'S BAY, OREGON.

Mr. CRISP called up for consideration the bill (S. 3645) granting to the Astoria and South Coast Railway Company the right to construct a bridge across Young's Bay, a navigable stream in the county of Clatsop and State of Oregon.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS BAYOU BARTHOLOMEW, LOUISIANA.

Mr. CRISP called up for consideration the bill (S. 3284) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew, at or near Ward's Ferry, Louisiana.

The bill was read.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT LA CROSSE, WIS.

Mr. CRISP called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 12059) to authorize the construction of a bridge or bridges across the Mississippi River at La Crosse, Wis.

The amendment reported by the committee was read by the Clerk, as follows:

Insert in line 14, after the word "War," the words "after an examination and report by a board of three United States engineers and appointed by him;" so it will read:

"Provided, That it shall not be lawful to construct said bridge or bridges until the Secretary of War, after an examination and report by a board of three United States engineers and appointed by him, shall certify that the same will not materially obstruct the navigation of said river."

The amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGES OVER GREEN AND BARREN RIVERS.

Mr. CRISP called up for consideration the bill H. R. 12524, reported as a substitute for the bill (H. R. 11996) to authorize the construction of bridges over Green and Barren Rivers, in the State of Kentucky, by the Henderson State Line Railroad Company.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS OSAGE RIVER.

Mr. CRISP called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 12389) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Osage River at some accessible point in the county of Benton, in the State of Missouri.

The amendment of the committee was read, as follows:

Insert as an additional section:

"SEC. 7. That this act shall be void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date thereof."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WAGON AND FOOT-PASSENGER BRIDGE, LYONS, IOWA.

Mr. CRISP called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 12489) to authorize the construction of a wagon and foot-passenger bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Lyons, Iowa.

The amendments of the committee were reported, as follows:

In section 2, line 9, after the word "than," strike out the word "two" and insert "three."

In same section, line 13, after the word "hundred," insert the words "and fifty."

In same section, line 21, after the word "than," strike out "two" and insert "three."

In same section, line 25, after the word "than," strike out "two" and insert "three."

In same section, line 26, strike out the words "said span," at beginning of the line, and insert as follows, in lieu thereof: "every part of the superstructure of said low bridge."

In section 5, line 25, strike out the words "Secretary of War" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Light-House Board."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to authorize the construction of a railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Lyons, Iowa."

In section 1, line 7, insert the word "railroad" at the end of said line.

In section 1, insert the following words after the word "provided," in line 11: "and to lay on or over said bridge a track or tracks, for the more perfect connection of any railroad or railroads that are or may be constructed to said river, on either or both sides thereof, at or opposite said point."

In section 1, insert the words "railroad trains" after the words "passage of," in line 20.

In section 3, insert the words "railroad and" before the word "telegraph," in line 10.

In section 4, insert the words "railroad and" after the word "all," in line 1.

The amendments were agreed to in gross.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I rise to move that the title of the bill be amended.

The SPEAKER. That was included in the amendments of the committee.

BRIDGE ACROSS CANAL ENTRANCE TO HARBOR OF DULUTH.

Mr. CRISP. I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 5191) for the construction of a bridge across the canal entrance to the harbor of Duluth.

Mr. HAUGEN. I object to the consideration of that bill to-night.

Mr. DUNHAM. Let the bill be read.

Mr. HAUGEN. I have no objection, of course, to the reading of the bill, but I give notice that I will object to its consideration.

Mr. CRISP. Then I ask to withdraw the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be withdrawn.

Mr. HAUGEN. I have a letter from the Secretary of War recommending a postponement of this and the other Duluth bill, and for the present I shall object to these bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is withdrawn.

Mr. DUNHAM. After a bill is presented can it be withdrawn except by consent?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has the right to withdraw the bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS BAY OF SUPERIOR, MINNESOTA.

Mr. CRISP. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 5192) for the construction of a bridge across the Bay of Superior, between Rice's Point and Minnesota Point, in the State of Minnesota.

Mr. HAUGEN. That is the other bill to which I referred, and to which I object.

Mr. DUNHAM. Let the bill be read.

Mr. HAUGEN. I do not object to the reading of the bill, but I raise the question of consideration against it.

Mr. CRISP. I ask to withdraw the bill for the present, in order to save time.

There being no objection, the bill was withdrawn.

Some time subsequently,

Mr. DUNHAM said: Mr. Speaker, House bills 5191 and 5192 were reported from the Committee of Commerce of the House in accordance with the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers. Now, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HAUGEN] has letters of a later day from the Secretary of War, transmitting copies of other letters from the Chief of Engineers, which seem to be against these bridges, and I ask that the letters may be printed in the RECORD, so as to show why these bills can not pass.

Mr. HAUGEN. I will send both letters to the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can take the floor in his own right and ask to have the letters printed.

Mr. HAUGEN. Very well. Mr. Speaker, I will state that these letters were sent to the Committee on Commerce of the Senate when they had under consideration bills of exactly similar character to the ones under consideration here.

Mr. DUNHAM. Inasmuch as the Committee on Commerce acted on information from the Secretary of War at the time, now that the Secretary of War has sent later information and recommends this delay in the matter, it is proper that that information should be printed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The letters referred to by the gentleman from Wisconsin will be printed in connection with the statement of the gentleman.

The letters are as follows:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C., March 24, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith the letter of Hon. N. P. HAUGEN, House of Representatives, dated the 19th instant, asking the views of the War Department as to the general effect upon navigation of the proposed bills (H. R. 5191 and 5192) authorizing bridges "across the canal entrance to the harbor of Duluth, Minn.," and "across the Bay of Superior, from Rice's Point to Minnesota Point," and to report that, so far as the interests of navigation are concerned, all bridges must be considered as forming more or less obstructions; but bridges are essential to the interests and necessities of commerce, and must be permitted when required, the only question being as to limiting as far as practicable the degree of obstruction, having in view the relative importance of the conflicting interests. The reports of this office in reference to the bridges in question contain recommendations for amendments believed to be necessary for the interests of commerce and navigation, but do not advocate or recommend the passage of the bills, Congress alone being the judge of the propriety or necessity for the passage of bridge laws.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. C. DUANE,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers.

Hon. WILLIAM C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, March 27, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 19th instant, stating that the people of the town of Superior, Wis., through their chamber of commerce, remonstrate against the passage of House bills 5191 and 5192, authorizing the construction of bridges across the canal entrance to the harbor of Duluth, Minn., and across the Bay of Superior from Rice's Point to Minnesota Point, and requesting the views of this Department as to the general effect of the proposed bridges upon the navigation of the waters named.

In reply, I beg to inclose a report of the 24th instant from the Chief of Engineers, in which he states that the reports transmitted to Congress upon these bills contain such recommendations as were deemed necessary by his office for the interests of commerce and navigation, but do not recommend the passage of the bills.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War.

Hon. N. P. HAUGEN,
House of Representatives.

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C., December 24, 1888.

SIR: In reference to S. 1553, a bill "to authorize the city of Duluth, St. Louis County, Minnesota, to construct and maintain a bridge across the Bay of Superior, between Minnesota Point and Rice's Point," received informally from the Senate Committee on Commerce, through the clerk of that committee, with request that a report upon it be submitted, I have to report that while the bridge in question might prove as unobjectionable as any other structure of the kind at the locality selected, it is believed that any bridge at that location would prove a serious obstruction to free navigation for the reason that the already crowded and insufficient space would, in the event of further obstruction by another bridge, prove a serious injury to navigation without resulting benefit to the large and constantly increasing commerce seeking ingress and egress at Superior Bay.

In the interests of navigation and commerce, therefore, it is recommended that the bill under consideration be not passed by Congress.

A copy of the bill S. 1453, Fiftieth Congress, first session, is herewith.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THOS. LINCOLN CASEY,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers.

Hon. WILLIAM C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War.

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C., December 24, 1888.

SIR: In reference to S. 1452, Fiftieth Congress, first session, a bill "to authorize the city of Duluth, Minn., to construct and maintain a bridge across the ship-canal, and upon the Government piers of the same, through Minnesota Point," received informally from the Senate Committee on Commerce, through the clerk of that committee, with a request that a report upon it be submitted, I have to report that in view of the fact that the proposed bridge is to be built at the extreme west end of Lake Superior, at the harbor of Duluth, which is exposed probably more than any other harbor on the lakes, and receives the full force of the northeasterly gales which sweep that lake with great and destructive violence, thus rendering its entrance by vessels not only extremely difficult but very dangerous, it would seem to be adverse to the interests of commerce and navigation to render these dangers even more hazardous by the erection of the bridge at the point proposed. In the opinion of this office no bridge should be permitted at this locality that will in any degree enhance the dangers and difficulties to navigation already existing, and it is accordingly recommended that the bill under consideration be not passed by Congress. The bill S. 1452 is herewith.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THOS. LINCOLN CASEY,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers.

Hon. WILLIAM C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, January 2, 1889.

SIR: Referring to a letter from the Department dated February 21, 1888, on the subject of Senate bill 1453, Fiftieth Congress, first session, "to authorize the city of Duluth, St. Louis County, Minnesota, to construct and maintain a bridge across the Bay of Superior, between Minnesota Point and Rice's Point," I now have the honor to transmit herewith a report dated the 24th ultimo, from the Chief of Engineers, recommending, in the interests of navigation and commerce, that the measure under consideration be not passed by Congress.

The recommendation of the Chief of Engineers is concurred in by the Department.

Very respectfully,

WM. C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War.

Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE,
Chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, January 2, 1889.

SIR: Referring to a letter from this Department dated February 20, 1888, on Senate bill No. 1452, Fiftieth Congress, first session, "to authorize the city of Duluth, Minn., to construct and maintain a bridge across the ship-canal and upon the Government piers of the same through Minnesota Points," I now have the honor to transmit for the information of your committee a report of the 24th ultimo from the Chief of Engineers, recommending, in the interests of commerce and navigation, that the bill in question be not passed.

The recommendation of the Chief of Engineers is concurred in by the Department.

Very respectfully,

WM. C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War.

Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE,
Chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE KENTUCKY RIVER, ETC.

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Speaker, I call up for present consideration the bill S. 3921, which is precisely the same bill in its terms as the bill of the House which was reported from the Committee on Commerce.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The title of the bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3921) to authorize the Kentucky Union Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Kentucky River and its tributaries.

Mr. TAULBEE That bill is on the Speaker's table, and I ask that it be taken from the table and substitute it for the House bill which is on the Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, that will be done.

There being no objection, the Senate bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read twice, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TAULBEE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The bill (H. R. 12543) was ordered to be laid on the table.

CONDUIT PIPES ACROSS OHIO RIVER.

Mr. CLARDY. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 11216) to authorize the Union Gas Company to lay conduit pipes across the Ohio River.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the assent of Congress is hereby given to the Union Gas Company to lay pipes for conducting natural gas, petroleum, or salt water across the Ohio River at such points as may be deemed necessary, between the mouth of Buck Creek, in Harrison County, Indiana, and the city of Jeffersonville, Ind., and points opposite thereto in the State of Kentucky, from any point in said State to the upper boundary of the city of Louisville, Ky.: Provided, That said pipes be laid upon or beneath the bed of the river and in such manner as not to interfere with navigation, and under the supervision of the Secretary of War.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CLARDY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE BETWEEN LOUISVILLE AND JEFFERSONVILLE.

Mr. CRISP. I call up now for consideration the joint resolution (H. Res. 256) concerning the construction of a bridge between Louisville, Ky., and Jeffersonville, Ind.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I shall object to the consideration of that bill to-night.

Mr. CRISP. Then I withdraw the bill for the present.

LIFE-SAVING STATION, COQUILLE RIVER, OREGON.

Mr. TARSNEY. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 11643) to provide for the establishment of a life-saving station and life-saving crew at the mouth of the Coquille River, Oregon.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $8,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of establishing a life-saving station, and providing for a life-saving crew, at mouth of Coquille River, in Coos County, in the State of Oregon.

The committee recommended the following amendment:

Strike out all of lines 3, 4, 5, and 6 and insert: "That a life-saving station be, and is hereby, established at the mouth of Coquille River, in Coos County, in the State of Oregon."

Amend title by striking out "and life-saving crew."

Mr. TARSNEY. The bill carries no appropriation. It has been amended in that respect on the recommendation of the committee, and I ask that the amendment be adopted and the bill passed.

The amendment of the committee was concurred in.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to conform.

STEAMER GEORGE H. PARKER.

Mr. CLARDY moved to discharge the Committee on Commerce from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7028) to admit to registry the steamer George H. Parker, and to put it on its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the steamer George H. Parker, so called, and now the property of Abram Smith, a citizen of the State of Michigan, resident at Algonac, St. Clair County, Michigan, be, and said steamer is hereby, directed to be admitted to registry, under the rules and regulations of the Department of the Treasury in that behalf made, and on like terms and conditions as though said steamer was constructed within the United States; and that prior to such registry the said steamer shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, be inspected by the local inspectors of the port where such steamer may be when such inspection is ordered, with reference on each inspection to the condition and safety of the hull, boilers, machinery, and all other equipments of said steamer as a common carrier of passengers and merchandise, and for service on the lakes and rivers of the Northwest.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I would like to have a little explanation of this bill.

Mr. WHITING, of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the fact is, that the steamer is an American-built tug-boat; was sold to Canadian parties, was wrecked, was bought as a wreck, and almost three-fourths of the value was expended in the repair, but not enough to permit the vessel to come in under the law. The gentleman applied to the Commissioner of Navigation, but as the amount fell short a very little the Commissioner said it could only be done by special act. It does not involve a dollar of cost or injustice to an American citizen. It simply gives another American citizen the chance of owning American property.

Mr. FARQUHAR. The explanation is satisfactory.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Does the gentleman understand that the steamer was built originally in the United States?

Mr. WHITING, of Michigan. It was originally built in the United States.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WHITING, of Michigan, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WATER-WORKS CRIB AT LAKE VIEW, ILL.

Mr. DUNHAM. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 11901) to authorize the city of Lake View, Ill., to erect a crib in Lake Michigan for water-works purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby given to the city of Lake View, county of Cook, and State of Illinois, to extend a tunnel, or inlet pipes, into Lake Michigan so far as may be deemed necessary to insure a supply of pure water, and to erect a pier or piers and crib in the navigable waters of said lake for the making, preserving, and working of said aqueducts or pipes or tunnel, the plan and location thereof to be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War: Provided, That said city shall furnish and maintain at its own expense such beacon lights or other signals on such piers or crib as the Light-House Board shall prescribe.

Mr. CLARDY. It involves no expenditure of public money.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DUNHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BUREAU OF PUBLIC HEALTH.

Mr. DAVIS. I now ask to call up the bill (H. R. 1526) to prevent the introduction of contagious and infectious diseases into the United States, and to establish a bureau of public health. I ask unanimous consent to consider it in the House as in Committee of the Whole. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] withdraws his objection.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the consideration of this bill and that it be considered in the House?

Mr. DUNHAM. I think that bill ought to go to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I do not think the gentleman ought to object. He has just got his bill through, and that seems to be a lack of generosity.

Mr. DAVIS. The bill can be considered in the House. I do not propose to take snap judgment upon it.

Mr. DUNHAM. Let the bill be read subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be established in the Department of the Interior a bureau of public health. There shall be appointed from civil life by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a commissioner of health, who shall be intrusted with the management of the bureau herein established. He shall be paid an annual salary of $4,500. For his use the Secretary of the Interior shall provide suitable offices, and, with the approval of the same, he shall employ such assistants and clerks as may be necessary.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the Department of State to obtain from the consular officers at foreign ports and places all available information in regard to the sanitary condition of such ports and places, and to transmit the same to the bureau of health; and said bureau shall also obtain, through all sources accessible, including State and municipal sanitary authorities throughout the United States, weekly reports of the sanitary condition of ports and places within the United States; and shall prepare, publish, and transmit to the medical officers of the Marine-Hospital Service, to collectors of customs, and to State and municipal health officers and authorities weekly abstracts of the consular sanitary reports and other pertinent information received by said bureau; and shall also, as far as it may be able, by means of the voluntary co-operation of State and municipal authorities, of public associations and private persons, procure information relating to climatic and other conditions affecting the public health; and shall make an annual report of its operations to Congress, with such recommendations as it may deem important to the public interests; and said report, if ordered to be printed by Congress, shall be done under the direction of the bureau. That the necessary printing of the bureau of public health shall be done at the Government Printing Office upon the requisition of the commissioner of health, in the same manner and subject to the same provisions as other public printing for the several departments of the Government.

SEC. 3. That the commissioner of health shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, frame rules which, when approved by the President and issued by the Department of State, shall serve for the instruction of consular officers of the United States and of the medical officers serving at any foreign port. In compliance with these rules, every master of a vessel destined for a port of the United States shall be furnished with a certificate containing a detailed statement of the inspection of the vessel, cargo, crew, and passengers, and of the sanitary measures carried out at the expense of the vessel; or if such measures are not carried out, instant warning shall be transmitted to the bureau, who shall immediately notify the quarantine authorities of the port of destination.

SEC. 4. That the bureau of public health shall, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, make investigations, both in the United States and, if necessary, in foreign countries, into the nature, origin, and prevention of contagious and epidemic diseases, as well as the causes and conditions of particular outbreaks of disease in the United States, and shall publish and distribute documents relating to the prevention of disease.

SEC. 5. That the President is authorized, when requested by the bureau of public health, and when the same can be done without prejudice to the public service, to detail officers from the several Departments of the Government for temporary duty, to act under the direction of said bureau, to carry out the provisions of this act; and such officers shall receive no additional compensation except for actual and necessary expenses incurred in the performance of such duties. When a detail of suitable officers can not be made, the commissioner of health may employ such experts, and for such time and in such manner as the funds at the disposal of the bureau may warrant, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 6. That to defray the expenses incurred in carrying out the provisions of this act the sum of $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, on the requisition of the commissioner of health.

SEC. 7. That an act entitled "An act to prevent the introduction of contagious and infectious diseases into the United States, and to establish a national board of health," approved March 3, 1879, and all other acts and parts of acts conflicting with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

SEC. 8. That this act shall take effect sixty days after its passage, within which time the commissioner of health shall be appointed, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

The committee propose the following amendments:

In line 6 of section 5 strike out the word "of," and in line 12 of the same section, after the word "warrant," insert the words "subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of this bill, and that it may be considered in the House. Is there objection?

Mr. DUNHAM. I think it had better go to the Committee of the Whole. I have no objection to its going to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. CLARDY. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the pending bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. ROGERS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1526) to prevent the introduction of infectious and contagious diseases into the United States, and to establish a bureau of public health.

Mr. DAVIS. I will state that the committee propose to amend the bill as in draught by adding, at the conclusion of section 5, the words "subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior." They also propose to amend section 6 by striking out "seventy-five thousand" and inserting "fifty thousand;" and they propose to strike out all after the word "appointed," in section 8.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. If it does not interrupt the gentleman too much, I desire to state to him that I shall move to strike out the words "the Interior" and amend by inserting "Agriculture." Since we have got that Department and a Secretary of Agriculture, I do not see why we should not give him some work and relieve the Secretary of the Interior, who has already too much work.

Mr. DAVIS. This bill provides for the appointment of a commissioner of health, to be subordinate to the Secretary of the Interior, and whose duty it shall be to collect information through our State officials abroad respecting the sanitary condition of foreign countries and the presence there of contagious, infectious, or epidemic diseases which might be brought to our own country.

He will also take measures to ascertain the presence and location of such diseases in our own country and adopt the necessary means to prevent their general diffusion.

He will also be required to suggest methods looking to a more uniform and reliable system of registration in the States in order that decennial vital statistics shall be at once more valuable and more easily and promptly secured. It will be his duty to make investigations into the prevalence of diseases of any particular class or type in certain sections of our widely extended country and their absence or comparative rarity elsewhere. To note the effect of the great variety of climate, soil, and topography which obtain within a territory so vast as ours upon the health, longevity, vigor, and physical characteristics of our people. To note also the effect of occupations upon health. To correspond with the State boards of health, giving and receiving information therefrom, and co-operating with and assisting them in the investigation of sanitary subjects, and in concerting and carrying into effect measures to prevent the spread of disease and improve public sanitation.

His functions will indeed be co-ordinate in many respects with those of the State boards with whom he will be frequently called to act. His investigations will, of course, have a wider scope and will be more valuable for that reason. As a central authority known to be in entire harmony with the State sanitary authorities, he will be able to make suggestions to one or all of them which may be of the greatest service to sanitary science.

The measure proposed by this bill is a logical sequence of the very general establishment of State boards of health.

It is my impression that there are now thirty-one of these boards, and they command the entire confidence of the medical profession and the people wherever they exist. They have been established in more than three-fourths of the States, and in no instance have they been abolished. They have everywhere rendered most eminent service. They have taught the people the most important lessons relating to public health. They have been the means of securing the most salutary legislation respecting the sources of water supply for cities and towns, respecting food and drug adulterations, and the ventilation of public buildings, the abatement of nuisances, and the removal from cities and densely-populated towns of such kinds of business as may be prejudicial to the public health and comfort, and they have made most thorough investigations into the causes of disease connected with imperfect sanitation or whatever tends in sensible degree to increase the death rate, and they have also improved the system of vital registration.

I need hardly dwell upon the importance of each of these duties; and the necessity for prompt and effective measures to check the progress of contagious and infectious diseases when introduced from abroad or originating here will be at once admitted and can not be overstated. A widespread visitation of yellow fever or that more dreadful scourge, cholera, appals the imagination to contemplate, and would carry consternation and death throughout the land. No calamity, not even an invading army, could produce more distress or inflict greater havoc upon our business interests.

We know that the progress of yellow fever can be arrested by proper measures fearlessly and efficiently applied. And it is believed that much can be done to prevent the spread of that still more dreaded and fatal scourge should it reach our shores again, as it is now threatening to do.

The annual reports of the State boards contain a mass of most valuable scientific and practical information upon all subjects connected with the public health. For several years a conference of these boards has assembled annually and its proceedings are of great interest and value.

I would add that the National Public Health Association, which has accomplished so much for sanitary science, is composed largely of members of the State boards of health, or this at least is the fact with its prominent and active members. For some years the representatives of the State boards of health had felt the great importance and indeed necessity for some national authority with whom they could communicate and who could co-ordinate and supervise their labors. To accomplish this there should be entire harmony and co-operation between the national bureau and the State boards, and the former should command the entire confidence and support of the latter.

The greater part of compulsory regulation of health matters comes under the police power which belongs to the States, and it is by the voluntary co-operation of the health authorities that this bill will give powerful aid to them in securing such co-operation and also prompt, reliable, and invaluable information of the kind which they desire.

Inasmuch as the main purpose of Federal legislation upon public health matters should be to aid and co-operate with the States in their efforts to prevent disease and death, and not to override them, it seems clear that the wishes of the State health authorities should have great weight with Congress in considering this question.

After a year's consideration this bill was prepared by the conference of the State boards at its annual meeting, and was afterward approved by the National Public Health Association, and was handed to me to introduce in the last Congress. It was favorably reported by the Committee on Commerce of that Congress, but was not reached upon the Calendar. It has again received a favorable report and is now before you. I know that the enactment of this bill is desired by the medical profession and I believe it to be required by the sanitary interests of the country. I believe every member of this House appreciates the disinterested, self-sacrificing, and devoted labors of that profession in the pursuit of its high calling.

These labors are not confined to the cure or alleviation of disease in the private practice of their profession; it reaches the domain of public medicine, which has been advanced to its present eminence by their unpaid but cheerful and loving labors. True to the traditions and teachings of a noble and humane culture, true to the examples of many generations of the fathers in medicine who have each (clarum et venerabile nomen) sank to rest followed by grateful benedictions, they strive not for wealth and honors alone or chiefly, but for the opportunity to promote the physical, mental, and moral well-being of their fellow-men.

To this end the medical profession asks you to contribute by the passage of this bill. On many subjects before this House I can not venture to speak and must defer to those whose experience here or life training better fits them to decide such issues. But upon this subject I feel more strength, and can without immodesty claim some knowledge, having been an original member of the first board of health established in this country and remaining in that capacity until my service commenced here, and I express my earnest convictions in urging the passage of this bill.

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Chairman, I dislike very much to oppose this bill, because my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAVIS], is very much in favor of it; but I am satisfied that it is too large a proposition to be considered by so small a number of gentlemen as are here to-night, and I am disposed to say that I can not let the bill pass without a quorum.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Why did you not say so awhile ago and save all this time?

Mr. WILKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I think we will all admit that some legislation on public health is very much needed. We have a Bureau of Animal Industry. We spend thousands and thousands of dollars every year to stamp out pleuro-pneumonia in cattle, but how little in protecting human life from disease! It seems to me that some legislation is demanded to co-operate with and assist the State boards of health to prevent contagious diseases from entering and spreading in the United States, and to prevent in some measure, if that be possible, the panics which sometimes originate without good cause and prevail in entire communities. But, Mr. Chairman, the bill offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts covers but small part of the ground of needed legislation.

This bill will not be efficacious for the purpose for which legislation is needed. It is true that under its operation we would get some information from abroad. It directs our consuls to obtain certain information, and causes to be published certain documents intended to inform the people of the United States about yellow fever and other diseases, bu tso far as taking any steps to prevent in any other way the coming of yellow fever from abroad, or from one State to another, it is utterly defective. It is, however, a bill which can do no harm that I know of, but which, I think, will also do very little good.

There is a bill introduced by my colleague [Mr. LAGAN], which was prepared with great care by the board of health of the State of Louisiana and the commercial bodies of the city of New Orleans, and I intended to offer that bill with a slight modification as a substitute for this one introduced by the gentleman from Massachussets [Mr. DAVIS] and reported by the committee. But I recognize fully the fact that on account of the lateness of the hour and of the fact that so few members are present there is no likelihood of either the original bill or a substitute for it being passed this evening. The few that are here seem determined not to take the responsibility of legislating on so important a subject, and therefore I shall not offer as a substitute at this time the bill to which I have referred, but will merely ask unanimous consent to have it printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

As I have said, it is a bill which was introduced by my colleague [Mr. LAGAN], and which I am satisfied will meet the requirements of legislation on this subject, but which, owing to the lateness of the hour and the smallness of the attendance, could not pass to-night even if it were to receive the almost unanimous vote of those that are here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana, that he be permitted to print the bill referred to by him as a part of his remarks?

There was no objection.

The bill, with the change referred to, is as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11723) to create a bureau of health and to prevent the introduction and extension of contagious and infectious diseases in the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be established in the Department of the Interior a board of health. There shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice of the Senate, a chief commissioner of health of the United States, who shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, organize and manage the bureau of health herein established, and may employ such assistants and clerks as may be necessary, with the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture. The Secretary of Agriculture shall provide suitable offices for the bureau of health. The chief commissioner of health of the United States shall be paid an annual salary of $5,000, and shall hold his office until he shall have attained the age of seventy years, unless sooner removed by the President.

SEC. 2. That there shall be appointed by the President a health commission, to be composed of twenty members, to be divided into six sections, as follows: Five commissioners for the yellow-fever section; three commissioners for each of the following sections: Cholera section, three; typhoid-fever section, three; scarlet-fever section, three; small-pox section, three; diphtheria section, three. The members of each section shall be experts in the disease to which their section is devoted. Each commissioner shall receive an annual salary of $1,200, and may reside at his usual residence, except when called into active duty under the provisions of this act. These several sections shall be charged with directing the investigation by the commissioner of health into the cause, origin, and mode of extension and measures to prevent the respective diseases to which they are named. Each section shall formulate methods and rules for the prevention of the respective diseases with which they are charged, to be submitted for the revision and approval of the whole health commission at its annual meeting hereinafter provided for.

The health commission shall designate five of their number, three of whom shall constitute a quorum, to be known as "the quarantine commission." This quarantine commission shall examine into the methods of State and local quarantines at the various seaports of the United States and report to the health commission as to the efficacy or non-efficacy of the same. The quarantine commission shall also be charged with the duty of investigation into and recommendation to the health commission the best manner of equipment and methods of procedure for the various national quarantine stations which are now or may hereafter be constructed. Upon the report of the quarantine commission to the health commissioner that the quarantine service at a port or ports of the United States is inefficacious or negligent in its management, the health commissioner is empowered and commanded to direct the United States collector of customs of that port to refuse entry to any vessel or goods or persons from any place infected with any contagious or infectious disease into such port unless said vessel, goods, or persons shall have undergone the quarantine process prescribed at some national quarantine station or at that of some other port of the United States whose quarantine service has not been condemned by the quarantine commission.

SEC. 3. That the entire health commission shall meet annually in Washington, D. C., in the month of April, on a day to be fixed by the chief commissioner of health of the United States, and at its sessions he shall preside; and at said annual session the health commission shall adopt plans for the prevention of the introduction into the United States of contagious and epidemic diseases, and the prevention of their spread, and make rules and regulations for interstate quarantine, and for the non-interference with interstate communication during a threatening epidemic and preparations for the suppression of a threatened epidemic.

SEC. 4. That whenever an epidemic of yellow fever, cholera, diphtheria, typhoid fever, scarlet fever, or small-pox is threatened and the governor of any State shall call upon the chief commissioner of health of the United States to that end, he shall immediately, with the assistance of the section of the health commission devoted to that particular disease, enforce and carry out the methods, rules, and regulations adopted by the health commission for that disease under the third section of this act, and, as far as possible, in co-operation with the local and State sanitary authorities, and to that end the section of the health commission so called into action shall have the disbursement of the Federal appropriation for the prevention and suppression of contagious diseases on the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 5. That the bureau of health and the chief commissioner of health and section of the health commission called into active duty under the foregoing provisions shall co-operate with, and, so far as it lawfully may, aid State and municipal boards of health in the execution and enforcement of the rules and regulations of such boards to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States from foreign countries and into one State from another.

SEC. 6. That it shall be the duty of the bureau of health to obtain information of the sanitary condition of foreign ports and places from which contagious and infectious diseases may be imported into the United States, and to this end the consular officers of the United States at such ports and places as shall be designated by the chief commissioner of health shall make to him weekly reports of the sanitary condition of the ports or places at which they are respectively stationed, according to such forms as he may prescribe; and the bureau of health shall also obtain, through all sources accessible, weekly reports of the sanitary condition of ports and places within the United States, and shall make investigations into the nature, cause, origin, and means of prevention of contagious and epidemic diseases as well as the causes and conditions of particular outbreaks of such diseases in the United States, and shall publish and transmit to the medical officers of the Marine-Hospital Service, to collectors of customs, and to State and municipal health officers and authorities, weekly abstracts of its sanitary reports; and to them and to the public, as far as possible, the results of its investigations into the causes and the means of prevention of epidemic diseases; and it shall make to the Secretary of the Interior an annual report of its operations, with such recommendations as it may deem important for transmission to Congress.

SEC. 7. That the bureau of health shall annually issue to the consular officers of the United States and to the medical officers serving at any foreign port, and otherwise publicly make known the rules and regulations made by the health commission for the prevention of the introduction of contagious and infectious diseases into the United States and from one State into another. The consuls shall promulgate such rules in their respective ports and places, and shall promptly inform the chief commissioner of health of the United States when any vessel destined to a port of the United States has not obeyed such rules.

SEC. 8. That the President is authorized, when requested by the section of the health commission called into active duty, or by the chief commissioner of health, to detail officers from the several Departments of the Government or employ persons from civil life for temporary duty to act under the direction of said chief commissioner of health or section of the health commission on active duty, to carry out the provisions of this act and the rules adopted by the health commission; and such officers shall receive no additional compensation except for actual and necessary expenses incurred in the performance of such duties.

SEC. 9. That the members of the health commission, when attending the annual session shall be paid their actual expenses going and returning, and the members of the section called in active duty under section 2 shall be paid their actual expenses while engaged in such active duty.

SEC. 10. That it shall be unlawful for any vessel from any port where any contagious or infectious disease exists, or having on board any infectious disease, to enter any port of the United States, except in accordance with the rules adopted by the health commission, and the certificate of the United States consul at such port shall be prima facie evidence of the existence of such disease in the foreign port where he is stationed. Any such vessel which shall enter or attempt to enter a port of the United States in violation of this act shall forfeit to the United States a sum to be awarded in the discretion of the court, not exceeding $1,000, which shall be a lien upon said vessel, to be recovered in any district court of the United States where said vessel may be found. In all such proceedings the United States district attorney for such district shall appear on behalf of the United States, and all such proceedings shall be conducted in accordance with the laws and rules governing cases of seizures of vessels for violation of the revenue laws of the United States.

SEC. 11. That it shall be unlawful for any person to obstruct commerce or intercourse between the States, or between the United States and foreign countries, except in accordance with the rules of the health commission, or to obstruct the section of the health commission when called into active duty in the performance of its duties, and any violation of this section shall be a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, the person so offending shall be fined not exceeding $1,000 and imprisoned not exceeding six months, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 12. That to pay the first year's salaries and expenses of the bureau of health and health commission and the construction of such disinfecting appliances and appurtenances as the health commission may deem advisable, the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, on estimates to be made by the chief commissioner of health and to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

In case of an epidemic of a contagious or infectious disease and a section of the health commission is called into active duty, the sum of $500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, to be drawn and expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to enable such section of the health commission called into active duty to suppress the disease and prevent its spread and to enforce the rules of the health commission provided for and adopted under section 3.

SEC. 13. That the following acts are repealed: An act to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States, approved April 29, 1878 (chapter 66, page 37, volume 20); an act to prevent the introduction of infectious or contagious diseases into the United States and to establish a national board of health, approved March 3, 1879 (chapter 202, volume 20, page 484); an act to prevent the introduction of contagious and infectious diseases into the United States, approved June 2, 1879 (chapter 11, volume 21, page 5).

Mr. CLARDY. In view of the declared opposition to the pending bill, I suggest to my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. DAVIS] that he had better withdraw it.

Mr. DAVIS. I withdraw the bill.

Mr. CLARDY. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. HATCH having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. ROGERS, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration a bill (H. R. 1526) to prevent the introduction of contagious and infectious diseases into the United States, and to establish a bureau of public health, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MANAGEMENT OF RAILROAD TRANSPORTATION, ETC.

Mr. CLARDY. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa, called up the following resolution, reported from the Committee on Commerce:

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and hereby is, directed to report in writing within ten days to this House any and all information it may possess concerning the action of a meeting of railroad presidents in New York City January 10, 1889, so far as the same related to the management of the railway companies subject to the provisions of the interstate-commerce act, to what extent and in what manner, if at all, said commission or any of its members participated in discussing, criticising, or approving the "plan" of maintaining "rates and rules established by the association," and to accompany said report with a copy of the contract, agreement, or "plan" adopted at such meeting or subsequent meetings, and if no such agreement, contract, or "plan" is on file, the substance of such contract, agreement, or "plan," together with the opinion of the commission as to its legal character and its effect on the public, and as to what legislation is necessary to prohibit the form of contract, agreement, or combination for the prevention of competition which was submitted at the New York meeting, if the same be not already prohibited by existing law. Also transmit with said report a list of the companies represented at said meeting, and the names and official title of the persons representing each of said companies.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

In the third line of the resolution strike out "ten days" and insert "five days."

The amendment was adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is now on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the amendment wholly destroys the effect of the resolution. It is simply impossible for these commissioners to answer all these questions, to furnish all this information, and to make all these reports inside of five days. Every member of the House must see that it would not be fair to require this commission to do what it must be apparent on the face of the matter is impossible. If this resolution had been adopted earlier and more time had been given for the reply of the commissioners, I, of course, would have had no objection to the resolution. I do not know that I have any objection, at any rate. I only make this suggestion, that it seems to me we are making an unreasonable requirement.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, it is owing to no fault of mine that this resolution is being considered at so late a day, as it has been impossible, under the rules, to get it before the House sooner, and it seems to me that as we have now reached so late a period in the session, that if this amendment were not now agreed to the entire purpose of the resolution would be defeated.

I wish to say further that the resolution is based upon the alleged fact that this agreement as reported through the press, undenied among the railroad presidents, was submitted to and approved by a majority of the Interstate Commerce Commission in the city of New York. It ought not to take an hour for them to report whether or not the state of facts alleged in the resolution does exist.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution as amended.

Mr. COBB. Upon what does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ANDERSON] base the assertion of these facts as stated in the preamble?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. If I were allowed the time, I could produce what purported to be the substance of the agreement, which was published in the press of the country at the time and without contradiction, as it came from the president of the Union Pacific Railway Company in a statement published in all the daily newspapers the next morning after the meeting of the railroad presidents in the city of New York on the 10th of January; and President Adams said the "agreement of gentlemen" was submitted to three of the commissioners, naming them, and that they had substantially agreed that it was the best arrangement which had been proposed for the management and control of the transportation companies of the country. It was then, and is now, my opinion that the agreement was an unlawful agreement, and that the gentlemen's meeting was an unlawful conspiracy.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Iowa whether the three commissioners referred to took official action; whether they were there in their official capacity? This resolution, of course, is serious; and if the gentleman means to assert that the Interstate Commerce Commissioners, or a majority of them, consulted officially with the railroad presidents of the United States——

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I will say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR] that the press reports stated they had been invited to the city of New York for the purpose of consultation, and there has been no denial that they were present in the city of New York, according to the press reports, according to the report of President Adams, and according to their own interviews in the public press. This is merely an inquiry as to the facts.

Mr. ROWELL. Is it not true that the agreement brought up in New York has been since that time entirely abrogated, and a very different agreement drawn up and signed by some of the officers in Chicago; and if this resolution should pass, would it not require that both the New York contract and the Chicago contract, still pending and not all signed, should be brought out here?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] that this resolution calls for information as to what took place at any subsequent meeting. I will further state, having followed this matter as published in the press, that there are no substantial changes in the agreement which was called the "agreement of gentlemen" purported to be submitted to and approved by the commissioners as it was adopted in New York.

Mr. ROWELL. The agreement made in New York, as I understand, was substantially a pooling agreement——

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROWELL. And the Western roads refused to sign it until it was modified and that portion taken out; is not that true?

Mr. FARQUHAR. That is correct.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. No, sir; I do not understand that the agreement to pool was taken out. It was an agreement to establish and maintain rates among these railroad companies as to the matter of transportation. This combination and agreement to fix and maintain rates was the essence of the agreement at all stages of the proceedings, and that is the very essence of a pool—an agreement to eliminate competition.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Did not the interview disclose the fact that these commissioners were consulted informally; that as a matter of fact they took no official action in regard to the subject, either one way or the other? Is not that the fact?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I can not say whether they were consulted informally or officially. The truth is, as I understand, that they were telegraphed to to meet the bankers and railroad presidents in the city of New York, and that they did meet them, and, according to the president of that meeting, Mr. Charles Francis Adams, the plan was submitted to them, and they, after suggesting some minor changes, approved it. They have authority under the statute to go where they see proper throughout the country in the discharge of their official duties.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Let the resolution be again read.

The Clerk again read the resolution.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I do not like to take up the time of the House. I was in hopes we would get along and really do what belonged to the business of the country before the Commerce Committee. This, sir, is the era of legislative anarchy, and gentlemen who are elected by communists and anarchists in this country hope to inscribe their names high on the roll of fame by presenting themselves all the time as men who stand ready to do something to destroy property upon the building of which the wealth and prosperity of their constituents depend.

I know, sir, how common it is out in the country where I formerly lived to say, "We have got the railroads, and you Wall-street fellows have got the bonds and stocks. Now let us see which is the most profitable." I remember perfectly well when I lived in that country how anxious we were, and how the best Representatives in Congress or in the Legislature were prepared to fall upon their knees and say, "Good Lord! good Wall-street men, bring us your railroads and give us a market for our products." They were taken there; they were built by foreign capital, and now the efforts of a very large body of practical communists are put forth all the time to make them wholly unproductive. And because they are there, and because the men who own them have tried to protect them, it affords an opportunity for men who desire to pose as the friends of labor and the friends of the granger and the friends of the poor men who are having their property mortgaged to decry the improvements in this country which made their property worth something.

Mr. ROWELL. I should like to ask my friend from New York a question.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. Certainly.

Mr. ROWELL. I should like to ask the gentleman whether these men are communists and anarchists who put forth only such efforts as the Supreme Court of the United States has decided they possessed under the law?

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I do not think the gentleman's hypothetical question reaches this case. What I mean to say is that the gentlemen who have been in the front in bringing this resolution forward have had all the glory. It is unbecoming the Congress of the United States, with twenty-five to thirty men sitting around, desiring to call the attention of the country and their constituents to the fact they are doing something against the railroads; it is unbecoming the dignity of the Congress of the United States at such a time, with such a body, under such circumstances, that this Fourth of July hifalutin attempt to write their names high up in the annals and records of the legislation of this country should have this proposed consideration.

Mr. CLARDY. I like the gentleman's speech very well, but we have a great many other bills to consider and pass before the adjournment.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I have learned something from the tactics of the gentleman who introduced this bill and who sent forward at one time the penal code of the District of Columbia to be read on the morning when a two-thirds vote for suspension of the rules was in order, and unless my strength fails me before 10 o'clock, the resolution will not pass. [Laughter and applause.] I would therefore suggest to the gentleman to withdraw it. In the mean time he has had glory enough out of it. I am willing to yield to him for any glory there be in speaking, but there will not be any glory for him by the passage of of the resolution.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to detain the House by any effort to answer the gentleman from New York, who has made a speech wholly and entirely without reference to the matter under discussion. In my humble opinion he has not offered a single word germane to the discussion at issue, but has availed himself of the opportunity to offer an insult to as intelligent and as loyal a district of people as live in the United States of America. And they are certainly as intelligent, certainly as loyal, and certainly as patriotic as the Wall street district of my friend, and which he represents so fittingly on this floor.

This is not a question of making an assault upon the railroad propo erty and vested interests in the United States, but it is a question as t whether or not the railroad presidents in this country, in connection with the bankers and capitalists of the country, and with the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission did not have a meeting that constituted an unlawful assembly in the eye of the law, where they were agreeing among themselves to do that thing which was directly in violation of the law, under the specious pretense that they had assembled to take some means to enforce the law.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Right there allow me to say that that is the very point in the gentleman's speech that I desired some inquiry about, in relation to the Interstate Commerce Commission and its connection with this meeting——

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I can not yield to the gentleman.

In connection with that meeting, Mr. Speaker, we have the spectacle, as the report goes through the public press undenied, that a majority of the United States Commission on Interstate Commerce met with these gentlemen in the same city, and after having had the argument of gentlemen submitted to them, the further report comes that they agreed to that "plan," suggesting a few verbal changes, which were made by the presidents of the railroad companies.

Now, I submit, sir, if these facts are true, and this resolution seeks to elicit that information, if it is not a grave and serious matter; and being a mere resolution of inquiry, I ask in the name of common sense if there is no truth in it who it is to recoil upon but the gentleman that the gentleman from New York has so inveighed against as wanting to pose here as a "reformer to get himself before the country?" If it is not true; if the Commissioners of Interstate Commerce can exonerate themselves from the charge made in the public press; if they can send back that report and it shows that there is no foundation for the passage of the resolution of inquiry, who is to be harmed? Certainly not the railroads, or the gentleman from New York, or the Interstate Commerce Commission; and if it is true, the people are entitled to know the facts, and they are entitled to know them at once.

Mr. Speaker, I could take from my desk, and have read here, from the speech of the leading railroad man in this country, who was president of that New York meeting, Charles Francis Adams, extracts in which he says that the railroad companies are violating the interstate-commerce law from one end of the country to the other; and the Interstate Commerce Commission has stumped the country declaring that the law is being violated, and in numerous interviews have so declared, if there is any reliance to be placed upon the uncontradicted statements made through the press of the country.

These facts are submitted unchallenged and unquestioned in the public press; and I can show from evidence of witnesses, evidence which I now have in my desk taken before the Interstate Commerce Commission, testimony of managers and superintendents of railroads, testifying brazenly, unrebuked in the presence of the Interstate Commerce Commission, that the statute is a dead letter.

In view of these facts, sir, I insist upon pressing this question. This resolution ought to be adopted. The people are entitled to the information, and I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Before the gentleman does that I would like to ask whether he will not consent to strike out the word "direct" and use the word "request?" I doubt the power of the House to direct the commission, which is a judicial or semi-judicial body. I think perhaps we are going beyond the power of the House in adopting the resolution in that form.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Well, it was a House resolution. I considered the matter, and inasmuch as this is a commission created by law for a specific purpose, I thought that the word "directed" was the proper term to be used in connection with the information sought.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. It is a commission, that is true; it is called a commission; but its powers are certainly to a certain extent judicial.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I think there is no trouble about the wording of the resolution in that respect.

Mr. DUNHAM. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Iowa, in view of the statement of the gentleman from New York, would it not be well for him to withdraw the resolution? The gentleman from New York has informed him that if his health holds out until 10 o'clock he will not permit the adoption of the resolution, and as there are other matters that ought to be considered I would suggest that it be withdrawn.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I insist upon the previous question.

Mr. DUNHAM. Well, let us have the question. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The question was taken on ordering the previous question; and there were on a division—ayes 19, noes 1.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. CLARDY. I ask the gentleman from Iowa to withdraw the resolution, as it will be impossible to secure the attendance of a quorum to pass it to-night.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. In view of the point made of no quorum, and the request of the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, I withdraw the resolution, as it will be impossible to procure a quorum to-night; but I am glad to know that the objection is located precisely where it is, in Wall street.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the resolution will be withdrawn.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LIGHT-HOUSE AND FOG-SIGNAL AT ORCHARD SHOALS, NEW YORK.

Mr. CLARDY. I ask to report back from the Committee on Commerce the bill (S. 3818) to establish a light-house and fog-signal at Orchard Shoals, Prince's Bay, New York, and ask consideration of it at this time. I ask to dispense with the reading of the bill, as it is in the usual form.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri asks that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be considered at this time.

Mr. CLARDY. I ask to report the bill back from the Committee of Commerce, and that it be considered at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri? The Chair hears none.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $60,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated for establishing a light-house and fog-signal at or near Old Orchard Shoals, Prince's Bay, New York, and for a new tower at Waacaack light-station, New Jersey.

It is proposed to strike out "the sum of $60,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated" and insert "that there be established a light-house and fog-signal station, etc., at a cost not to exceed $60,000."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read as proposed to be amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be established a light-house and fog-signal at or near Old Orchard Shoals, Prince's Bay, New York, and a new tower at Waacaack light-station, New Jersey, at a cost not to exceed $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CLARDY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FRAUDS ON AMERICAN MANUFACTURES.

Mr. DUNHAM. I call up the bill (H. R. 3307) to prevent frauds on American manufactures.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the importation of all articles of foreign manufacture, or of boxes or packages containing the same, when stamped, marked, branded, or labeled to represent that such articles were manufactured in the United States, is hereby prohibited, and the same shall be forfeited to the United States unless re-exported within ninety days after the same shall have been received at any custom-house.

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect on the 1st day of July, A. D. 1888.

Mr. DUNHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. VANCE].

Mr. VANCE. It is proposed, in line 5, after the word "labeled," to strike out the words "to represent."

Mr. BUCHANAN. That does not make sense in the way it is amended.

Mr. CLARDY. It is proposed to amend by striking out the latter part of the first section, which reads: "Unless re-exported within ninety days after the same shall have been received at any custom-house."

Mr. VANCE. I hope that amendment will not be agreed to. It opens up a very considerable subject where goods are brought into this country. When they are reimported the importer may be liable for them; therefore I hope it will not be agreed to. This bill is as I introduced it. The committee offers this amendment, and it goes further than the bill proposed. Therefore I hope that it will not be agreed to.

Mr. CLARDY. The committee agreed to this amendment after considerable discussion of this bill. I want to say that this is a matter that is in the Senate tariff bill, and it involves the discussion of some hours, if not of some days; I do not think we have time to go on with it.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. We can pass it in a short time.

Mr. ADAMS. What amendment does the Chair refer to as pending?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment that is pending before the House is the amendment offered by the committee, which is to strike out what will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the following words in the concluding portion of the first section: "Unless re-exported within ninety days after the same shall have been received at any custom-house."

Mr. VANCE. I will satisfy the gentleman in relation to this bill.

Mr. ADAMS. I do not care to discuss it. It is the other amendment.

Mr. VANCE. I have no objection to the other amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. But I have, because it would deprive it of all effect. It was a limit, a prohibition, to those articles where the stamp expressly declared that they are manufactured in the United States.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. Speaker, this bill is a simple one and needs no extended remarks in its defense. As I am indebted to the Committee on Commerce for a hearing at this time I do not propose to use all the evidence I have at hand. I appreciate the courtesy with which I have been treated, and, knowing as I do, that much legislation of importance is to be considered in the brief time given to this committee, I will not presume upon the good nature of the House. I have material sufficient, much of it furnished ill-advisedly by the opponents of this bill, to take hours of your time, but will forbear.

This measure is one which must commend itself to the good grace and wise discretion of the House. It is drawn to prevent forgery, and simply gives to American manufacturers the rights in competition with foreign makers, which they now have, as against competition in the United States. It provides that no goods of foreign make shall be sold here on the presumption that they are produced in this country, and it gives to manufacturers here the right to their own trade-mark against the world, as well as the right to object to the sale of goods which bear false or misleading marks. That this is being systematically done by foreign manufacturers, particularly of cutlery, I have proved to the complete satisfaction of the committee reporting this bill.

If the time were given me I could prove that other articles, ostensibly of American manufacture, are sold here by foreign makers, and that American firms engaged in manufacturing skates, guns, hosiery, cotton goods, and edged tools are not alone hurt at home by this traffic, but are injured in their trade abroad. There is one firm in my district alone—the famous Collins Company—which manufactures superior articles of axes and edge tools. Its trade-mark has been simulated in foreign countries and the reputation which its goods have achieved on their merits is being stolen by what is practically forgery. But this is one evil which Congress can not correct. It can, however, remedy the wrong within the limits of the United States, and the bill under consideration is intended to do it.

The practice has grown up of sending to this country inferior goods branded to create the assumption that they are made here, and to this practice is the objection made. Already three hundred American names are being put upon foreign cutlery, and to give the House an idea of the manner in which this is done I will quote the following as specimens intended to create the conviction that the purchaser is buying American goods:

New England Cutlery Company, Bay State Cutlery Company, Granite State Cutlery Company, Pennsylvania Cutlery Company, Western Cutlery Company, Chicago Knife Company, Maine Knife Company, Ames Cutlery Company, Fulton Cutlery Works, Irving Cutlery Company, Eagle Cutlery Company, Clinton Cutlery Company, Manhattan Cutlery Company, Knickerbocker Cutlery Company, St. Lawrence Cutlery Company, National Cutlery Company, Eagleton Cutlery Company, Derby Cutlery Company, Chatham Cutlery Company, York Cutlery Company, Essex Cutlery Company, Windsor Cutlery Company, Mount Vernon Cutlery Company, Southfield Cutlery Company, Nelson Cutlery Company, Easton Shear Company, Buck Cutlery Company, Worthington Cutlery Company, Howard Manufacturing Company.

If these goods were sold upon their merits and with the maker's name affixed, no objection would be made. But aside from depriving the American cutler of a market which is essentially his, this method puts his goods in bad repute. It reacts upon his reputation as a maker of fine goods, and thus is its influence twofold to the detriment of Americans who have made a reputation in trade which is their most valuable asset. The duty is paid on these American imprinted goods as cheap foreign goods and they are sold as the best American article. This is a fraud upon the public; it is obtaining trade under false pretenses; it is more than the theft of money; it is the pilfering of a reputation. But I forbear. I was about to quote the words of Shakespeare in defense of my position. It needs no defense.

This evil has been recognized in England, and the following is an extract from an act known as the "Merchandise marks act" (50 and 51 Vict.) passed by Parliament in 1887:

Whereas it is expedient to make further provision for prohibiting the importation of goods which, if sold, would be liable to forfeiture under this act, be it therefore enacted as follows:

1. All such goods, and also all goods of foreign manufacture bearing any name or trade-mark being or purporting to be the name or trade-mark of any manufacturer, dealer, or trader in the United Kingdom, unless such name or trade-mark is accompanied by a definite indication of the country in which the goods were made or produced, are hereby prohibited to be imported into the United Kingdom, and, subject to the provisions of this section, shall be included among goods prohibited to be imported as if they were specified in section 42 of the customs consolidation act, 1876.

4. Where there is on any goods a name which is identical with or a colorable imitation of the name of a place in the United Kingdom, that name, unless accompanied by the name of the country in which such place is situate, shall be treated for the purposes of this section as if it were the name of a place in the United Kingdom.

And now, gentlemen, I have alluded to several of the points in favor of the passage of this bill. The evidence is cumulative, and the more we examine it the more convincing it becomes. It is simply an act of justice, a bit of equity crystallized into a law, and believing that I have proved these facts beyond a peradventure, I ask the House to sustain me by passing the bill.

The question was taken on the amendment; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. CLARDY. Division.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the second amendment, offered by the gentleman from Missouri, in line 5, to strike out the words "to represent."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VANCE. I ask unanimous consent that the date in the second section be changed from 1888 to 1889. The bill was introduced a year ago.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

Mr. CLARDY. I suggest that the time for adjournment has arrived.

Mr. BUCHANAN. If the gentleman wants to subject us to further frauds on the part of foreign manufacturers he can do so. The bill is to prevent a bald, bare-faced fraud on the American people.

Mr. CLARDY. Now, I would like to have a vote of the House upon this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the hour of 10 o'clock p. m. having arrived, under previous order the Chair declares the House adjourned until 12 m. to-morrow.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. BLISS: A bill (H. R. 12632) granting a pension to James A. Davis—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DUBOIS: A bill (H. R. 12633) to ratify an act entitled "An act to provide for a wagon-road between Mount Idaho, in Idaho County, and Little Salmon Meadows, in Washington County," in Idaho Territory—to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. STOCKDALE: A bill (H. R. 12634) for the relief of Ada E. Lawrence, administratrix of C. De France—to the Committee on War Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JEHU BAKER: Petition of C. F. Winston and others, favoring a sufficient appropriation to fully and fairly test the mode by which sugar can be manufactured from sorghum cane at the least possible cost—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. C. A. RUSSELL: Of 160 citizens of Pomfret, Conn.

By Mr. J. W. STEWART: Of 59 citizens of Hinesburgh, Vt.

By Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR: Petition of 28 citizens of Colebrook, Ohio.

By Mr. TRACEY: Of 134 citizens of Newport, and of 107 citizens of Monticello, Minn.

The following petition for a national Sunday-rest law was received and referred to the Committee on Labor:

By Mr. VOORHEES: Petition of 386 citizens of Washington Territory.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 21, 1889.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

STATISTICS REGARDING MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following communication from the Commissioner of Labor; which was read:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR, Washington, D. C., February 20, 1889.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit to Congress herewith a special report on the statistics of and relating to marriage and divorce in the several States and Territories and in the District of Columbia.

This report is made in accordance with the provisions of an act approved March 3, 1887.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CARROLL D. WRIGHT, Commissioner.

Hon. JOHN J. INGALLS,
President pro tempore United States Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will lie on the table and be printed. What disposition shall be made of the accompanying papers which lie on the table of the Secretary?

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that they be referred to the Committee on Printing to ascertain whether it be necessary that they should be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

CHANGES IN DISTRICT OFFICES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from W. B. Webb, president of the board of commissioners of the District of Columbia, transmitting, pursuant to a resolution of February 8, 1889, a list of officers and employés under the control of the commissioners who have been changed since March 4, 1885; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Select Committee to Examine into the Condition of the Civil Service, and ordered to be printed.

COURT OF CLAIMS REPORT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting, pursuant to law, the conclusions of fact and of law filed by that court in certain French spoliation claims; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CULLOM presented a memorial of 12 citizens of Pennsylvania, and a memorial of 25 citizens of Dana, Ill., remonstrating against the passage of the Sunday-rest bill; which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Ex-Prisoners of War Association, of Winnebago County, Illinois, urging the passage of Senate bill 505, in relation to pensions; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of labor organizations, churches, and citizens of the State of Illinois, praying for the passage of the Sunday-rest bill; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a memorial adopted by the State Grange of Illinois, remonstrating against the national debt refunding scheme and urging that the national debt be paid off as soon as possible; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the State Grange of Illinois, favoring a graduated income tax and an increase in the volume of money to at least $40 per capita; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the State Grange of Illinois, urging Congress to foster the commercial interests of the people by large appropriations for the improvement of inland water ways for the purposes of navigation; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the State Grange of Illinois, urging Congress to investigate the cattle and dressed-beef combinations, and asking such legislation as will fully meet the case; which was referred to the Select Committee on the Transportation and Sale of Meat Products.

He also presented a petition of the State Grange of Illinois, praying for the enactment of laws that will give women the right to vote equally with men; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the State Grange of Illinois, urging the enactment of legislation providing for the election of United States Senators by a direct vote of the people; which were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. PASCO. I present a telegram from the governor of the State of Florida, stating that the Legislature of that State, now in session, has just adopted a unanimous joint resolution "urging our representatives in Washington to use all means to secure the payment of the Indian war claims, on account of our urgent necessities." As I shall make an effort to get the matter on one of the appropriation bills, I move that the paper be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PASCO presented a petition of 41 citizens of Pensacola, Fla., and a petition of 4 citizens of Tallahassee, Fla., praying for the passage of the Sunday-rest bill; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. FAULKNER. I present a memorial of 71 citizens of Martinsburgh, W. Va., remonstrating against the passage of the bill in regard to Sunday observance or any other religious institution or rite, and also opposing any resolution for the amendment of the National Constitution that would by instruction in public schools or in any other way give preference to religious principles over the views of religion held by non-religious persons, and praying that the Government be kept strictly secular and that the separation of church and state be complete.

I move the reference of the memorial to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS presented the petition of W. H. Bishop and 133 others (91 voters and 43 women), citizens of Newport, Minn.; the petition of J. M. Brown and 297 others (134 voters and 164 women), citizens of Verndale, Minn., and the petition of Charles Bradford and 82 others

Ryan and 29 others (21 voters and 9 women), citizens of Ironton, all in the State of Ohio, praying for a submission to the States of a constitutional prohibitory amendment; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of 812 citizens of Ohio, praying for the passage of a Sunday-rest law; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. PLUMB. I have a letter addressed to myself, and not therefore within the rule as a petition, but which deals in a very intelligent and elaborate way with the subject of irrigation, which has recently been committed by the action of the Senate to a special committee for investigation. At the request of a member of that committee I present the letter, and ask that it may be printed as a document and referred to that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection.

Mr. ALLISON presented the petition of Rev. James Hill and 46 other veterans of the Union Army, citizens of Cascade, Dubuque County, Iowa, praying for the passage of all proper pension legislation first, and stating that after such legislation the reduction of revenue required can be computed; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of 368 citizens of Iowa, praying for the passage of the Sunday-rest bill; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. EDMUNDS presented the petition of J. F. Miles and 58 others (27 voters and 32 women), citizens of Hinesburgh, Vt., praying for the submission to the States of a constitutional prohibitory amendment; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COKE presented a petition of 43 citizens of Texas, praying for the passage of the Sunday-rest bill; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

THOMAS D. FISTER—RECUSANT WITNESS.

Mr. SPOONER. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to present to the Senate a report from that committee which I believe to be in the nature of a privileged matter. I ask that the report may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, submits a report, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the report, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds respectfully report:

That under the following resolution adopted by the Senate December 21, 1888:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be, and the same is hereby, authorized and instructed to make, either by the committee or a subcommittee thereof, an investigation into the conduct of the office of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department as far as it may deem necessary, and to inquire into the laws, regulations, and customs relating to the erection of public buildings, and for that purpose the committee, or said subcommittee, if appointed, is authorized and empowered to send for persons and papers, and to administer oaths; said committee to report by bill or otherwise"— a subcommittee of said committee was appointed, consisting of Senators MORRILL, SPOONER, and PASCO, which subcommittee was charged with the duty of making the investigation in said resolution provided for, and reporting the result thereof to the committee.

That the said subcommittee caused to be subpœnaed before them various witnesses from time to time.

That on the 14th day of February, 1889, the subcommittee met, pursuant to adjournment, there being present Senators MORRILL, SPOONER, and PASCO, and also Senator DANIEL, of Virginia. That on said day Thomas D. Fister, whose attendance before the committee had been requested, appeared before the committee and was sworn, and testified as follows:

"Thomas D. Fister sworn and examined.

"By the CHAIRMAN:

"Q. What is your age?
"A. I am fifty years old in October.
"Q. Colonel Fister, is it?
"A. Thomas D.
"Q. You are the gentleman known as Colonel Fister?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. Have been in the Army?
"A. I belonged to the navy.
"Q. You were in the navy?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. In what capacity?
"A. As a lieutenant, in the Confederate navy.
"Q. Is that where you got your title of colonel?
"A. No, sir; I was on land also.
"Q. In what capacity?
"A. Well, my rank was lieutenant; never had any other but that.
"Q. I did not know.
"A. As you know, they call a man general, colonel, or anything else.
"Q. What is your position?
"A. I am the assistant and chief clerk of the Supervising Architect.
"Q. That is, assistant and chief clerk?
"A. That is the title.
"Q. How long have you been in that service?
"A. I think three years this month.
"Q. By whom were you appointed? Under this administration?
"A. By Secretary Manning; yes, sir. Mr. Bell was the Supervising Architect.
"Q. You were appointed under Cleveland's administration?
"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Where did you come from here?
"A. From Pennsylvania.
"Q. How long had you lived in Pennsylvania?
"A. That is my native State; I was born there.
"Q. How did you happen to get into the Confederate navy?
"A. I happened to be South and happened to marry a Southern lady before the war.
"Q. Are you an architect?
"A. No, sir.
"Q. Draughtsman?
"A. No, sir.
"Q. Have you been interested in any of these contracts for the preparation of plans for the Government buildings, outside of the office?
"A. No, sir.
"Q. Had nothing to do with that branch of the business whatever?
"A. No, sir; don't know anything about it.
"Q. What are your principal duties?
"A. The principal duty is to look after the business portion of the office; see that the discipline is all right, to hunt up anything any United States Senator or Congressman that come there to see Colonel Fréret about. Of course he can't look into these matters; he can call on me and I look up the information for him, and also look over all the correspondence and check it.
"Q. Do you select sites?
"A. Yes, sir; I have selected most of the sites within the last three years; not all.
"Q. Did you select the site at Binghamton?
"A. I did not.
"Q. Did you go there and examine it before it was selected?
"A. No, sir; I never was there in my life.
"Q. Did you select the site at Worcester, Mass.?
"A. I did.
"Q. What other sites have you selected within the last three months?
"A. In the last three months I have selected—
"Q. I don't know that that was selected within three months at Worcester.
"A. No, sir; along there. I can tell you pretty near all. I have not got any memorandum with me.
"Q. Has that site been purchased?
"A. It has.
"Q. And conveyed to the Government?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. What did it cost?
"A. Seventy-five thousand dollars, I think, what the Government paid for it. The original offer was $176,810.
"Q. Do you mean to say that the Government paid $75,000 for the site of Worcester, Mass.?
"A. I think so; I think it is $75,000. Yes, sir; I think it was $75,000.
"Q. Has that been paid?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. To whom was it paid; do you know?
"A. No, sir; I don't recollect the parties.
"Q. Was any money raised at Worcester by the people there, which was employed in the purchase of this site?
"A. That I do not know anything about.
"Q. You don't know anything about that?
"A. No, sir.
"Q. You never heard anything about that?
"A. Well, the offer originally was $176,810. It was modified and offered to me at $75,000. How the money was got up of course I don't know anything about.
"Q. You have never heard that a large amount of money was raised there for the purpose of purchasing the site?
"A. From hearsay. I have heard it talked about among the citizens. How it was done of course I don't know.
"Q. How much did you hear that the citizens raised?
"A. I don't know as I ever heard a particular amount.
"Q. How long were you there?
"A. I was there, I think, about three or four days; I can not tell exactly.
"Q. Ever been there more than once?
"A. No, sir; never.
"Q. Where did you stop when you were there?
"A. At the main hotel there; I forget the name. I forget whether it is—it is the main hotel there.
"Q. Your expenses were paid by the Government?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. There was a good deal of strife about the location?
"A. Oh, yes, sir; a great deal. I attended two; I know of one meeting where there must have been three or four hundred people. Of course, I can not say exactly how many; but there were a great many people, at any rate. There was a great deal of strife. I think there was. I forget how many sites were offered now; a good many; and almost every man that had a site thought his was the best. They generally do.
"Q. Yes, best for him.
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. Well, you did not hear how much money the citizens raised there?
"A. No, sir; I don't know anything about that. I know that the Government paid, I think it was, $75,000; I won't be certain. I think that was it. I think the records of the office will show that.
"Q. You have had no consideration at any time to influence you?
"A. No, sir.
"Q. In the selection of sites; you answered that 'No, sir?'
"A. I answered that, 'No, sir.'
"Q. Directly or indirectly?
"A. Directly or indirectly.
"Q. I ask you that question more in justice to yourself from some things that I have read and heard than I do otherwise.
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. I don't mean to imply by putting the question to you that I think you have done so.
"A. I answer and say that I have not.
"Q. Did you collect any moneys in your office for the Democratic campaign in the last election?
"A. Did I collect any?
"Q. Yes.
"A. I have always told my people——
"Q. Answer my question.
"A. I will have to answer it my own way.
"Q. No; answer it my way, and I will give you an opportunity to explain.
"A. Then I will have to refuse to answer that question.
"Q. You decline to answer, do you?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. Did you receive any moneys from the employés of the office during the last campaign for campaign purposes?
"A. I decline to answer.
"Q. Did you receive any moneys from any other employés of the Treasury Department, or check, or drafts during the last campaign for campaign purposes?
"A. I decline to answer that.

"By Senator MORRILL:
"Q. You decline to answer?
"A. Yes, sir.

"By the CHAIRMAN:
"Q. Upon what ground do you decline to answer; that you will criminate yourself?
"A. No, sir.
"Q. What is your ground for declining to answer?
"A. I think that is private matter. That I decline to answer.
"Q. Did you receive any drafts, or checks from any one in the service of the Government during the last fall for campaign uses?
"A. I say I decline to answer that question for the same reason.
"Q. Did you receive any voluntary contributions from any one in the employ of the Government for campaign uses?
"A. I decline to answer that.
"Q. On the ground that it is a private matter?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. Did you send any moneys not your own during the last campaign to the treasurer or any other official of the Democratic national committee?
"A. I decline to answer that question.
"Q. Do you know of any moneys being paid by clerks or draughtsmen or other employés of the Supervising Architect's Office for campaign purposes during the last campaign?
"A. I decline to answer that.
"Q. Will you be kind enough to tell me what you are willing to testify to?
"A. I am telling you now——
"Q. Under whose advice do you decline to answer these questions?
"A. Under my own.
"Q. Have you had any consultation with any official of the Treasury Department?
"A. No, sir.
"Q. On the subject?
"A. No, sir.
"Q. Have you talked with Secretary Maynard about it?
"A. I have not.
"Q. Or Thompson?
"A. I have not.
"Q. Or Colonel Fréret?
"A. No, sir.
"Q. Then I understand you to decline to tell the committee—to testify at all as to the collection of campaign money by you in the Treasury Department, including the Architect's Office?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Senator PASCO. I understood him to state at the beginning that he was willing to testify to it in his own way, and I think he has the right to make the statement in his own way.
"The CHAIRMAN. Now, Senator PASCO, try your hand to get the facts in your own way. I turn the witness over to you.

"By Senator PASCO:
"Q. I request him to state all that he knows on the subject in connection with the Department; whether any money was received from either or both of the political parties, and whether any amount, or what amount, passed through you; state in your own way all you know.
"A. I have never.
"Senator PASCO. I am satisfied with that general statement of the question.
"The WITNESS. So far as I know there was no solicitation for money by anybody. I have never asked anybody for money; always told them that they could not talk to me. Never solicited money from any person in the Treasury Department or outside at no time.
"Q. Were any requests made to you; were any circulars received by you during the campaign?
"A. There were circulars received; whether I got any I forget. I know there was some circulars received from both parties, both from the Republican committee and the Democratic committee. There is a letter [producing it] that was sent to the law clerk at my office.

"By Senator MORRILL:
"Q. In relation to this matter?
"A. Asking for contribution.

"By the CHAIRMAN:
"Q. You preserved that, but none received from the Democrats?
"A. I tried to get one, but I could not. I know there was one. I acknowledge there was.
"The CHAIRMAN. I do not want to be understood as abandoning these questions, because I propose that the witness shall answer the questions if the Senate can compel him, and he must abide the consequences. If my associate, Senator PASCO, can get the information out of him, I want him to try it.

"By Senator PASCO:
"Q. Did you receive any other or do you know of any other communications of this nature being received from either party?
"A. I am satisfied, I know that there were circulars sent from both parties; I know that I saw some from the Democratic party, but I have not got one; I can't say whether there was one sent to me or not; I don't recollect; but I know there were circulars sent around from both parties, because I heard talk about it. That (the circular) was handed to me the other day. I did not have it. I tried to get one of the other circulars.
"Q. Did you make any response to that or any other circular or application?
"A. Myself? No, sir; I never answered any circular at all.
"Q. Did you receive any fund for campaign purposes from either of the political parties?
"A. I decline to answer that question.
"Q. Have you anything further to say on that subject?
"A. No, sir.
"Q. I ask you to say it in your own way.
"A. I have nothing more to say.

"By the CHAIRMAN:
"Q. Then your declination to answer is not based upon the fact that I ask you to make a categorical answer, but upon your insistence that it is a private matter that the committee have no right to examine into?
"A. I made my statement; that is what I stand to.

"By Senator MORRILL:
"Q. You do not decline to answer because you have not knowledge of the fact?
"A. What is that, sir?
"Q. Do you not decline to answer because you have not any knowledge of the fact?
"A. Well, I respectfully decline to answer that question.

"By the CHAIRMAN:
"Q. Do you know Mr. Kinkel?
"A. I do.
"Q. Charles Kinkel; he is a draughtsman in the office of the Supervising Architect?

"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. Did he collect any money or receive any money by draft, check, or otherwise, in the office, to your knowledge, for campaign purposes?
"A. I don't know anything at all about Mr. Kinkel—what he did.
"Q. I said to your knowledge?
"A. I don't know anything at all what Kinkel did.
"Q. Did Kinkel turn over to you any draft or check or money collected from the employés in the Supervising Architect's Office for Democratic purposes?
"A. I decline to answer that question.
"Q. You know whether he did or not, don't you?
"A. I respectfully decline to answer that question.
"Senator PASCO. I would like to have what the witness said in reference to this matter read by the stenographer.
"(The stenographer read the testimony as requested.)
"Senator DANIEL. Mr. Chairman, does the chairman prefer to lay the matter aside?
"The CHAIRMAN. I do not care to discuss the matter in the presence of the witness.
"Q. I ask whether C. M. Anstell is the law clerk in the Supervising Architect's Office?
"A. Yes, sir. Now, if the Senator will allow me to ask a question, I would like to correct something.
"The CHAIRMAN. Go on; you may do so.
"The WITNESS. I understand that the Senator asked me whether I refused on the ground of criminating myself?
"The CHAIRMAN. I asked you that question.
"The WITNESS. I believe it was you. I declined to answer that question, and I see that the stenographer has it stating no. I want to make that correction now. I stated that I refused to answer that question.
"The CHAIRMAN. You stated it the way the stenographer has it; but, if you desire to correct it, you can correct it.
"The WITNESS. I do not mean to say that the stenographer would not get it correctly, but that is what I want to correct.
"Senator PASCO. He has the right to correct it, of course.
"The CHAIRMAN. Yes; certainly. He has the right to make any correction he desires to. (To the witness.) You may retire and remain in waiting. (The witness retires.)
"Senator PASCO. That letter is in as evidence, is it?
"The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.
"The letter reads as follows:
"'James P. Foster, president. Andrew B. Humphrey, secretary. Phineas C. Lounsbury, treasurer. Gen. W. W. Dudley, chairman campaign committee.
"'(Cut:) R. L. U. S.

That said subcommittee, after the retirement of said witness, considered the pertinency of the questions which the witness had declined to answer, and his duty in relation thereto, and decided that it was the duty of the witness to answer, and that the matter be reported to the full committee.

That afterwards, at a meeting of the full committee, held on the 18th day of February, 1889, the following proceedings were had:

"THE UNITED STATES SENATE,
"COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS,
"Monday, February 18, 1889.

"The committee met pursuant to call.
"Present: Senators STANFORD (chairman), MORRILL, SPOONER, VEST, DANIEL, and PASCO.

"TESTIMONY OF THOMAS D. FISTER—RECALLED.

"Thomas D. Fister was recalled, and was interrogated and answered as follows:

"By Senator SPOONER:

"Q. I have prepared, with the approval of the committee, some questions to be put to you, and which the committee decide are proper questions, and questions that it is your duty to answer. Before doing it, in order that you may be advised of the state of the law upon the subject, I want to call your attention to three sections of the statutes:
"SEC. 102 (Revised Statutes, page 17). Every person who, having been summoned as a witness, by the authority of either House of Congress, to give testimony or to produce papers upon any matters under inquiry before either House, or any committee of either House of Congress, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the question under inquiry, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of not more than $1,000 nor less than $100, and imprisonment in a common jail for not less than one month nor more than twelve months.
"SEC. 103. No witness is privileged to refuse to testify to any fact, or to produce any paper, respecting which he shall be examined by either House of Congress, or by any committee of either House, upon the ground that his testimony to such fact or his production of such paper may tend to disgrace him or otherwise render him infamous.
"'SEC. 104. Whenever a witness summoned as mentioned in section 102 fails to testify, and the facts are reported to either House, the President of the Senate or the Speaker of the House, as the case may be, shall certify the fact under the seal of the Senate or House to the district attorney for the District of Columbia, whose duty it shall be to bring the matter before the grand jury for their action.'
"I call your attention also to section 859 of the Revised Statutes, which says:
"'SEC. 859 (page 162 R. S.). No testimony given by a witness before either House, or before any committee of either House of Congress, shall be used as evidence in any criminal proceeding against him in any court, except in a prosecution for perjury committed in giving such testimony. But an official paper or record produced by him is not within the said privilege.'
"I also call your attention to those sections of the statutes under which these questions are framed:
"'SEC. 11. That no Senator or Representative or Territorial Delegate of the Congress, or Senator, Representative, or Delegate elect, or any officer or employé of either of said Houses, and no executive, judicial, military, or naval officer of the United States, and no clerk or employé of any Department, branch, or bureau of the executive, judicial, or military or naval service of the United States shall, directly or indirectly, solicit or receive, or be in any manner concerned in soliciting or receiving, any assessment, subscription, or contribution for any political purpose whatever, from any officer, clerk, or employé of the United States, or any Department, branch, or bureau thereof, or from any person receiving any salary or compensation from moneys derived from the Treasury of the United States.' (Act January 16, 1883.)
"'SEC. 15. That any person who shall be guilty of violating any provision of the four foregoing sections [one of which I have just read to you] shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment for a term not exceeding three years, or by such fine and imprisonment both, in the discretion of the court.' (Act January 16, 1883.)
"Having called your attention to these provisions of the statutes, I put to you these questions:
"Q. Did you, during the year 1888, directly or indirectly, solicit any assessment, subscription, or contribution for any political purpose from any officer, clerk, or employé of the United States in the office of the Supervising Architect or any branch or bureau thereof, or from any person employed in that office receiving any salary or compensation from moneys derived from the Treasury of the United States?
"A. Well, sir, I believe that is the same question you put to me before.
"Q. I will read you the question again if you desire it.
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. Did you, during the year 1888, directly or indirectly, solicit any assessment, subscription, or contribution for any purpose from any officer, clerk, or employé of the United States in the office of the Supervising Architect or any branch or bureau thereof, or from any person employed in that office receiving any salary or compensation from moneys derived from the Treasury of the United States?
"A. I did not.
"Q. Did you, during the year 1888, directly or indirectly, receive any assessment, subscription, or contribution for any political purpose whatever, from any officer, clerk, or employé in the office of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department?
"A. I respectfully decline to answer that question.
"Q. If so, state from whom and the amounts.
"A. I respectfully decline to answer, for the same reason.
"Q. Were you, during the year 1888, in any manner concerned in soliciting or receiving any assessment, subscription, or contribution for any political purpose whatever from any officer, clerk, or employé of the United States in the office of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department?
"A. I was not.
"Q. Do you understand the question?
"A. I understand it: whether I solicited——
"Q. No; let me read it to you again:
"'Were you, during the year 1888, in any manner concerned in soliciting or receiving any assessment, subscription, or contribution——
"The WITNESS (interrupting). I did not understand.
"Senator SPOONER. I thought you did not. (Resuming the reading of the question:)
"'For any political purpose whatever from any officer, clerk, or employé of the United States in the office of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department?'
"A. I respectfully decline to answer that question.
"Q. Upon what ground do you decline to answer these questions?
"A. On the same ground I gave you when I was examined before.
"Q. State the ground.
"A. That it is a private matter.
"Senator SPOONER. You may retire, unless some other member of the committee wants to put a question.

"By Senator VEST:

"Q. You do not desire any time to consult any one upon this question, counsel or otherwise?
"A. No, sir.
"Q. You have made up your mind?
"A. I have made up my mind."
The witness retired.

That the committee decided that the subjects embraced in the quesions put to the witness on the 14th day of February, 1889, were within the jurisdiction of the committee under the resolution; that it was the duty of the witness to answer the same, and that he was in contempt of the committee and of the Senate in his refusal so to do; and the committee therefore report the facts to the Senate, and recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the President of the Senate issue his warrant, directed to the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, commanding him forthwith to arrest and to bring to the bar of the Senate the body of Thomas D. Fister, to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt, and in the mean time to keep the said Fister in his custody to await the further order of the Senate."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. MORGAN. That is rather an important matter concerning the jurisdiction of the Senate to put a citizen on trial at the bar of the Senate. It seems to involve several rather important and delicate legal questions, and I therefore ask that the resolution go over, and that the resolution and the accompanying papers be printed

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection.

Mr. SPOONER. I have no objection to the resolution going over, but I simply desire to say that I shall not be able to be in attendance in the Senate to-morrow or next day, and I give notice that on Monday next I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the resolution.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate to correct the enrollment of the bill (S. 3640) to amend the laws relating to the selection and service of jurors in the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PUGH. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report back the bill (H. R. 11197) for the removal of the political disabilities of Henry A. Ramsey without amendment, and ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. HOAR. Let that go on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. PUGH, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3470) to remove the political disabilities of Henry A. Ramsey, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11128) for the disposition of the agricultural lands embraced within the limits of the Pipestone Indian reservation in Minnesota, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2866) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to fix the amount of compensation to be paid for right of way for railroads through Indian reservations in certain contingencies, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11970) to divide a portion of the reservation of the Sioux Nation of Indians in Dakota into separate reservations and to secure the relinquishment of the Indian title to the remainder, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments, and moved that it be recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. 3984) to provide for the purchase of the claim of the Seminole Nation of Indians to certain lands in the Indian Territory; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. MORGAN. Let that bill be read at length.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length the second time, if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill, but was interrupted by Mr. SHERMAN. Is that bill up for consideration?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is being read the second time at length for information, at the request of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to the reading of it being completed, but I object to its present consideration.

The Chief Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $1,912,942.02 be, and the same hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay in full the Seminole Nation of Indians for all the right, title, interest, and claim which said nation of Indians may have in and to certain lands ceded by Article III of the treaty between the United States and said nation of Indians, which was concluded June 14, 1866, and proclaimed August 16, 1866, and which land was then estimated to contain 2,169,089 acres, but which is now, after survey, ascertained to contain 2,037,414.62 acres, said sum of money to be paid as follows: $1,500,000 to remain in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of said nation of Indians, and to bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum from July 1, 1889, said interest to be paid semi-annually to the treasurer of said nation, and the sum of $412,942.20 to be paid to the treasurer of said nation, or to such person or persons as shall be duly authorized by the laws of said nation to receive the same, at such times and in such sums as shall be directed and required by the legislative authority of said nation. This appropriation to become operative upon the execution by the duly appointed delegates of said nation, empowered so to do, of a release and conveyance to the United States of all the right, title, interest, and claim of said nation of Indians in and to said lands, in manner and form satisfactory to the President of the United States, and said release and conveyance, when fully executed and delivered, shall operate to extinguish all claims of every kind and character of said Seminole Nation of Indians in and to the tract of country to which said release and conveyance shall apply.

SEC. 2. That the lands acquired by the United States under said agreement shall be a part of the public domain, but they shall only be disposed of in accordance with the laws regulating homestead entries, and to the persons qualified to make such homestead entries, not exceeding 160 acres to one qualified claimant. And the provisions of section 2301 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not apply to any lands acquired under said agreement. Any person who may enter upon any part of said lands in said agreement mentioned prior to the time that the same are opened to settlement by act of Congress shall not be permitted to occupy or to make entry of such lands or lay any claim thereto.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendments, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 8429) granting a pension to W. W. Wilson;

A bill (H. R. 12428) for the relief of Martha Rhodes;

A bill (H. R. 12273) for the relief of Newton C. Ridenour; and

A bill (H. R. 8100) granting a pension to Anna J. Weaver.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3888) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to adjust and settle the account of James M. Wilbur with the United States, and to pay said Wilbur such sum of money as may be found due to him thereon, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was recommitted the bill (H. R. 834) for the heirs of John H. Newman, deceased, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PLUMB. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12485) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments. I give notice that at the earliest possible moment after the completion of the consideration of the sundry civil bill I shall call this up.

Mr. TURPIE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12542) for the relief of the heirs of Noah W. Yoder, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PASCO, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred an amendment submitted by himself on the 19th instant intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, reported it without amendment and moved its reference to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 11984) granting a pension to Mrs. Helen Sutherland; and

A bill (H. R. 10644) granting a pension to Elizabeth Peterson.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3653) to authorize the sale of a tract of land in the military reservation at Fort Leavenworth, in the State of Kansas, to report it favorably with one small amendment, and recommend the passage of the bill as so amended. I call the attention of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] to this report.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. In behalf of the Senate conferees I present the report of the conference committee on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and I ask that it may be considered now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report? The Chair hears none. It will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11795) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 3, 21, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 39, 40, 45, 46, 51, 52, 53, 54, 59, 60, 64, 65, 67, 68, 69, 84, 85, 86, 87, 94, 95, 96, and 97.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 19, 20, 23, 24, 25, 26, 41, 42, 43, 44, 47, 48, 56, 57, 58, 62, 63, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 76, 77, 78, 81, 82, 88, 89, 91, and 92, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$364,486.10;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$6,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 37: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the year proposed insert "1881;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 38: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the year proposed insert "1881;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 49: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$28,320;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 55: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 55, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"And not less than two hundred of the clerks in the office of the Adjutant-General shall be exclusively engaged in preparing and making reports to expedite the settlement of pension applications and soldiers' claims."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 61: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 61, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out from said amendment the following words: "One clerk of class 3; one clerk of class 2;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 66: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 66, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$9,880;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 75: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 75, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "four;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 79: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 79, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "eleven;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 80: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 80, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "two;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 83: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 83, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$37,840;" and the Senate agree to the same.

W. B. ALLISON,
H. L. DAWES,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

WM. H. FORNEY,
SAM. J. RANDALL,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. GIBSON introduced a bill (S. 3985) for the relief of George E. Payne; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SABIN introduced a bill (S. 3986) for the relief of Henry D. O'Brien, late postmaster at St. Anthony, Minn.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3987) granting a pension to John Frank; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HISCOCK introduced a bill (S. 3988) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint commissioners to investigate certain claims for damages done to planted oysters in Raritan Bay in 1881; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 3989) to refer Senate bill No. 1313, for relief of the estate of Edwin E. Saunders, deceased, to the Court of Claims; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. PUGH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Post-Office appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CULLOM submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF LABOR.

Mr. HAWLEY. There are two or three matters from the Committee on Printing that I should be glad to have the Senate consider immediately. I report from that committee favorably the joint resolution (H. Res. 262) to print 39,000 copies of the fourth annual report of the Commissioner of Labor. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORT ON PRODUCTION OF THE PRECIOUS METALS.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am also instructed by the Committee on Printing to report favorably a concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives, and I ask that it may be considered at this time.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed for distribution for the Director of the Mint 1,000 additional copies of the report on production of precious metals of the United States for the calendar year 1887.

EULOGIES ON EDWARD W. ROBERTSON.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am also directed by the Committee on Printing to report favorably without amendment the joint resolution (H. Res. 258) providing for the printing of the eulogies on the life and character of Edward W. Robertson, deceased, late a Representative in Congress from Louisiana. I ask for its immediate consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INAUGURAL ADDRESSES OF PRESIDENTS, ETC.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask to have taken up and considered at the present time Senate joint resolution 138, which was reported favorably a few days ago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut asks unanimous consent for the consideration of a resolution the title of which will be read.

Mr. HOAR. Subject to objection.

Mr. HAWLEY. Subject to objection.

The CHIEF CLERK. A joint resolution (S. R. 138) to print 10,000 copies of a compilation of the inaugural addresses of the Presidents of the United States, from George Washington to Benjamin Harrison, for the first century of Presidential inaugurations, with authenticated incidents connected therewith, biographical sketches of the Presidents from official sources, together with steel-plate portraits of the Presidents and steel-plate illustrations of the Capitol and White House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. COCKRELL. Is that all of the resolution?

Mr. HAWLEY. I will say that the expense is not what it would appear to be, for the plates are to be obtained from the Treasury Department. The portraits of the Presidents are all existing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. COCKRELL. Is that all of the resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Only the title has been read. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HARRIS. Let it be read at length for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there be printed, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, 10,000 copies of the inaugural addresses, in chronological order, from George Washington to Benjamin Harrison, covering the first century of the inaugurations of the Presidents of the United States, together with certain historical data connected with the inauguration ceremonies, and brief biographical sketches of the Presidents, with steel-plate portraits of the Presidents and steel engravings of the Capitol and White House, 3,000 of which copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 6,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 copies for the use of the compilers and editors of the work; and the compilers of the work shall have the right to use the plates employed in printing and illustrating the first edition in getting out a second edition; and the sum of $5,130, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of printing the illustrations at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, which is hereby directed to do the work.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, is this resolution open to amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has inquired if there be objection to its present consideration.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to make no objection, but I reserve the right to object if it turns out that it leads to debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is open to amendment as in Committee of the Whole, if there be no objection to its consideration.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to move as an addition to the resolution at the proper place that the Farewell Address of Washington and the Farewell Address of Jackson be included.

Mr. HOAR. They have been printed a thousand times in other forms.

Mr. BLAIR. I shall be very glad to see the Farewell Address of Washington printed with these inaugural addresses also.

Mr. HAWLEY. I certainly have no objection.

Mr. BLAIR. And also that of President Jackson.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add as a new section:

SEC. 2. That the Farewell Addresses of President George Washington and of President Andrew Jackson be also included.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to amend by inserting where the joint resolution speaks of the portraits the words "with a suitable index by subjects."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be stated from the desk.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think the words "with a suitable index" will answer the purpose.

Mr. HOAR. I want the index so that the subjects shall be indicated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 9, after the word "Presidents," it is proposed to insert "with a suitable index by subjects;" so as to read: "And brief biographical sketches of the Presidents, with a suitable index by subjects," etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DANIEL. I beg leave to ask the Senator from Connecticut if the word "inclusive" should not be inserted after the name of President Benjamin Harrison, in line 6, so as to include all the inaugural addresses and the proceedings from Washington to Benjamin Harrison.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think that would be better. I will accept the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 6, after the name "Benjamin Harrison," it is proposed to insert the word "inclusive;" so as to read:

From George Washington to Benjamin Harrison, inclusive.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I favor the resolution, but I think it ought to be more extended, and we ought to include in this publication all the messages of all the Presidents. This addition would not make more than two ordinary volumes and would be an exceedingly interesting publication. I made the suggestion personally to the Senator from Connecticut, but as the Committee on Printing has not reported it I shall not offer the amendment. I should like exceedingly to see such a compilation.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think that would to some extent destroy the special interest in this volume. Those messages have been printed many times in an ordinary, plain way.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like very much to see the Declaration of Independence included. This will be a kind of convenient work to the people. The Declaration of Independence is an important document, and it should be included.

Mr. HAWLEY. Does the Senator make that motion?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do. I move to insert "including the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States."

Mr. ALLISON. And the amendments.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend so as to make the joint resolution read:

That the Declaration of Independence, the Farewell Addresses of President George Washington and of President Andrew Jackson be also included——

Mr. HAWLEY. Did I understand the Senator from Iowa to move to insert the Constitution?

Mr. ALLISON. The Constitution and amendments. They form an important document.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let it follow the Declaration of Independence.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend so as to make the joint resolution read:

That the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution of the United States and the amendments thereto, and the Farewell Addresses of President George Washington and of President Andrew Jackson be also included, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. Had we not better include the Revised Statutes?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think I shall draw the line there.

Mr. BUTLER. I will not offer it as an amendment, but I think in order to make the volume complete we had better put the Revised Statutes in—all the general statutes.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think the title might be amended by stopping at the words "inaugural addresses."

Mr. PLUMB. I move to lay the joint resolution on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. HAWLEY. I shall be perfectly willing to have it lie over. It is open to objection.

Mr. BUTLER. Let it lie over and see what we have scooped up this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution resumes its place on the Calendar, if there be no objection.

COMMITTEE ON IRRIGATION AND ARID LANDS.

Mr. STEWART submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Select Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, appointed under authority of a resolution of the Senate of February 14, 1889, is hereby authorized, in pursuing the investigation in said resolution ordered, to hold its sessions and take testimony at any place in the United States, and to employ a stenographer and a messenger, the expenses of such investigation to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate. The committee is also authorized to cause its proceedings and the testimony taken before it to be printed from time to time as it may see fit, exclusively for its use. Any subcommittee appointed by said committee may exercise the same powers as the full committee.

INDIAN SEVERALTY LANDS.

Mr. DAWES submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to communicate to the Senate a detailed account of the expenditure under the two items of appropriation of $10,000 and $30,000 in the Indian appropriation act of June 29, 1888, for the completion and for the continuance of work under the act providing for the allotment of lands in severalty to the Indians on the various reservations, and of what has been done in carrying out the provisions of said appropriations, the number of allotments completed, and the number of trust patents delivered in conformity with the provisions of said appropriations, and also the sum necessary to be expended in like work during the coming year.

FORT LEAVENWORTH MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] just now reported a bill from the Committee on Military Affairs of a kind which, while important, is not liable to any objection whatever and which ought to be passed now if there is to be any final passage of it at this session of Congress. I ask unanimous consent that it be now considered. It provides practically for the enlargement of the waterworks at Leavenworth to meet the conditions imposed for the supply of water to the military post at Fort Leavenworth.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the bill (S. 3653) to authorize the sale of a tract of land in the military reservation at Fort Leavenworth, in the State of Kansas, may be now considered.

Mr. HOAR. Let it be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 22, after the word "for," to strike out all down to and including the word "cents," in line 24, in the following words:

The price and sum of $250 per acre, amounting to the sum of $2,437.30.

And to insert:

Such price and sum of money, not less than $300 per acre, as the Secretary may determine to be fair and reasonable.

So as to read:

Containing 9¾ acres, more or less, reserving to the United States or assigns the coal, or royalty for the coal, underlying said lands, at and for such price and sum of money, not less than $300 per acre, as the Secretary may determine to be fair and reasonable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 4, as follows:

SEC. 4. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 10319) to authorize the Natchitoches Railroad Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Red River in Louisiana;

A bill (H. R. 10588) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the St. John's River, in the State of Florida;

A bill (H. R. 10721) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River at or near Cumming's Landing, Lincoln County, Arkansas;

A bill (H. R. 11649) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between the city of Leavenworth, in the State of Kansas, and Platte County, in the State of Missouri;

A bill (H. R. 11782) to approve and ratify the construction by the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad Company of the bridge over the Red River at Shreveport, La., and the bridge over the Ouachita River at Monroe, La., and to authorize said railroad company to maintain said bridges over said water ways, subject to certain stipulations and conditions; and

A bill (H. R. 12489) to authorize the construction of a railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Lyons, Iowa.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2816) to authorize the construction of a bridge for railway purposes across the Mississippi River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota, to be located north of and in the vicinity of the city of Alma, Wis., with amendments in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 185) to provide for the division of Dakota into two States and to enable the people of North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, and Washington to form constitutions and State governments and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, and to make donations of public lands to such States; and Joint resolution (S. R. 140) authorizing the printing of 50,000 copies of the fourth and fifth annual reports of the Bureau of Animal Industry, for the years 1887 and 1888.

CONGRESSIONAL ELECTIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] coming over from yesterday.

Mr. CALL. I wish to ask the consent of the Senator from Massachusetts and the unanimous consent of the Senate to allow the consideration of Senate bill 746.

Mr. HOAR. I must object until the resolution passes. As soon as the resolution is out of the way that measure can be taken up.

Mr. CALL. Allow me to say one word. I think the resolution to which the Senator from Massachusetts refers will occupy considerable time of the Senate. Both houses of the Legislature of Florida have unanimously asked for the consideration and passage by the Senate of this bill. In view of the fact that there was yellow fever in that State last year which threatened to extend itself to all the great cities North and South, the Legislature was called together in extra session specially to provide measures for the protection of the State and of the United States against the recurrence of this disease. The resources of the State have been largely drawn upon last year and will be exhausted in carrying out of these preventive measures which the law will require, and it is desired that this bill shall be passed in order that it may go to the other House and furnish the State treasury with the money needed for this purpose. I very earnestly request that it may be allowed to pass. It will be observed that the purpose for which this money will be largely used is common to all the States, and one of the highest utility and perhaps one of absolute necessity. This bill is reported from the Committee on Claims, and I earnestly hope that it may be passed by the Senate and placed on one of the appropriation bills.

I give notice that I shall feel myself justified, in view of the necessities of the State and in obedience to the joint resolution of the Legislature, to press the passage of this bill every day until the Senate shall take favorable action upon it. I again urge the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senate to allow this bill to be considered and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 746) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to settle and pay the claim of the State of Florida on account of expenditures made in suppressing Indian hostilities, and for other purposes. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOAR. I must object until the resolution for an investigation is out of the way, which relates to a worse epidemic than any yellow fever.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be stated.

The SECRETARY. "A resolution by Mr. HOAR authorizing the Committee on Privileges and Elections to investigate the alleged election outrages in certain States."

Mr. VEST. Let the resolution be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read at length.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. HOAR, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be authorized to inquire whether in any State the free and lawful expression of the will of the people in the election of members of the Fifty-first Congress and ascertaining the result thereof, or in the election of members of State Legislatures who have elected or are to elect Senators of the United States who may claim seats during said Congress, and ascertaining the result thereof, or in the choice of electors of President and Vice-President of the United States in 1888 and declaring the result thereof, has been prevented by violence, intimidation, fraud, or other crime.

Also, whether the laws governing such elections in any States have been so framed or administered as to accomplish or permit the defeat of the will of the people in such elections.

Also, to inquire into the facts of the recent election in the State of Louisiana, held on the 17th day of April, 1888, at which there was chosen a Legislature which has since elected two United States Senators.

And said committee shall also inquire whether there were in connection with the aforesaid election illegalities, frauds, false canvasses, and false returns so extensive and so systematic in their character as to show that there existed on the part of the various State election officers a deliberate plan to apparently carry said elections without regard to the votes actually cast, and to choose a governor and other State officers and a State Legislature by such illegal, false, and fraudulent means, and if so, whether said Legislature was actually and duly elected by the people of Louisiana or was in fact substantially the creation solely of the returning and canvassing officers, and whether said State of Louisiana has a republican form of government, including a Legislature entitled to choose United States Senators and to provide methods for the appointment of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to offer an amendment, in the first paragraph, by inserting after the word "intimidation" the word "bribery." I am not sure but that the language of the resolution would include bribery; the term "fraud, or other crime" perhaps might be sufficient to cover it, but I desire to have it specifically incorporated in the resolution that the inquiry shall be made with reference to the question of bribery at elections in the States.

It is well known that there have been charges of bribery at the last Presidential election, that by the use of money the purchase of votes by the bribery of voters was attempted; and if this investigation is to take place I want an inquiry into that fact so that it may be exposed to the people of this country.

The terms employed in the resolution might possibly be fairly construed to include bribery, but it is evidently better to insert the term specifically so that there can be no mode of escaping an inquiry upon that subject. I therefore move the insertion of the word "bribery" after the word "intimidation."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the last line of the first clause of the resolution, after the word "intimidation," it is proposed to insert the word "bribery."

Mr. HOAR. I will accept the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Delaware, and it is agreed to.

Mr. PASCO. I wish to move an amendment to that amendment. I suggest, after the word "bribery," to insert the words "or other unlawful use of money." I ask the Senator from Delaware to accept that amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I have no objection to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment moved by the Senator from Florida will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the amendment just adopted it is proposed to insert the words "or other unlawful use of money."

Mr. HOAR. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be made, if there be no objection. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, the day before yesterday when the Senator from Massachusetts reported the resolution from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and again yesterday when he offered another resolution, I objected to its consideration. I did so because I believed then as I do now that there is no necessity whatever for bringing this question to the attention of the Senate in the closing hours of this session. For several weeks we have had a resolution pending in the body offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] covering practically the ground of the resolution presented by the Senator from Massachusetts, and another phase of the question from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, that committee coming to the body with a resolution in these words:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be directed carefully to revise the existing laws regulating elections of members of Congress with a view of providing for a more complete protection of the exercise of the elective franchise and for the punishment of offenses against it, and to report to the next legislative session of the Senate by bill or otherwise.

That resolution seems to be broad enough to cover this entire question of what legislation may be necessary hereafter to protect the ballot and to provide for a fair election in all cases where members of Congress are to be elected, if Congress has the power to so provide by law.

When that resolution came before this body the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], speaking not only for himself but I think for every member on this side of the Chamber, made the offer to the other side that we would adopt that resolution at once, and without debate, unnecessary as it is; but we did it for the purpose of not delaying the legislation which is absolutely necessary to be had to permit the wheels of the Government to go on, and to prevent that which everybody in the country desires to prevent, an extra session of Congress. Having made that tender, and after the statement of the Senator, it was rejected by the majority of the Senate, and the resolution is still pending and under debate.

But more than that, sir, the resolutions offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] on my right were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, as some of us believed and understood that the whole question hereafter should come up on the resolution reported by the Senator from New York. There is no Senator on this or the other side of the Chamber who does not recognize possibly the necessity for additional legislation. Certainly none object to a fair inquiry into the provisions of law as they now exist, and to ascertain what may be necessary to correct the election machinery in the cases spoken of in the resolution so far as Congress has the power to so legislate.

In the face of that notice, which was given calmly and properly on this question of going into a sectional issue—for that is what the resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts means—if in the closing hours of this session you intend to prepare a drag-net to look up all the little shortcomings, acts of commission and omission, in one section of this country, you do it with the full knowledge, and I have no doubt you do it with the intent, having had notice served, of delaying the necessary legislation at this session and bringing about what some may desire, an extra session of Congress.

Throughout the land there is in the newspapers and in public assemblages and on all public occasions apparently an organized and systematic determination on the part of a few agitators to convince the country that there is nothing but corruption and bad government in some sections of the Union. I believe that it is but the revival of a school which began at the creation of the Government, which does not believe in popular government and popular suffrage, which wants to break down the great system that was inaugurated by the fathers. It can not be done by direct assaults upon the institution, but they hope to make it possible by discrediting the honesty and fair dealing of the American people residing in certain States of the Union. The provision for holding elections does not give a perfect system in any State. It is the one question that has given greatest concern from the beginning until now. If it fails the structure is gone; and as the country grows in population and in wealth it becomes the duty of every lover of his country to give his best service, thought, and vote for equal and just laws to maintain the purity of the ballot.

There is not a patriot, there is not a Democrat, nor is there a Republican, who believes in our institutions who is not ready to consider fairly and well what further legislation may be necessary to protect the ballot; but a proposition is submitted here by the Senator from Massachusetts, as the spokesman of his committee, reproducing practically the resolution offered by the Senator from New Hampshire, not in the spirit of fair dealing with a view to investigate this subject in all sections of the Union, but to revive the animosities of the war, to deal only with certain divisions of this country which have no ordinary task to maintain their respective State governments.

There is in my judgment no excuse for such a raid at this time. Can it be that the Republican party having been successful at the late election, soon to come into power in all branches of the Government, can not wait until they get the full possession of the Government and then assume the entire responsibility of such legislation as is to come hereafter? We are too fresh from the late contest to take up these questions as a judge would take them up or as a patriot should in Congress with a view to produce a great result without bringing up the sectional troubles and discussions again.

Mr. President, let us be entirely frank. Everybody knows that there is trouble; that there have been thousands of instances in every State in the Union where complaints have been made of the want of fairness in conducting elections. It is not confined to Louisiana; it is not confined alone to Massachusetts, or to Maryland, or to Connecticut, or to Rhode Island, but it is in every State in the Union. Then I ask the Senator from Massachusetts, who knows that fact as well as I do, why it is that he singles out the State of Louisiana and prepares a drag-net to go into that State and examine into an election held not at the Presidential election but in April last, without a single memorial or petition ever having been presented by anybody in Louisiana or by any Republican member of the Legislature of that State.

If, as it looks upon the face, that now in 1889, with the incoming administration of the party of the Senator from Massachusetts, all the old wounds are to be opened, and that, not satisfied with your victory and the possession of the Government, you will enter upon a scheme which must paralyze the business interests of this country and revive the bitter feelings that have passed or ought to have passed forever, then I admit the Senator from Massachusetts is a typical representative of those Senators who would be likely to engage in such a work.

There have been times when parties have been defeated, and they have not counseled with their judgment and have permitted their disappointments and temper to lead them astray. In this case, flushed as you are with victory, with the whole Government at your command after the 4th of March next, I ask the Senator from Massachusetts why it is that he enters upon this tirade against one section of his country. Is it for the purpose, by Federal legislation and bayonets and deputy marshals, of putting one class of people or a people of one color in the possession of twelve or thirteen States in the Union? Would he tolerate this in Massachusetts? Does he tolerate it there? I know of no State in the Union that has excluded from the suffrage more people than the State of Massachusetts does to-day by its constitution.

I do not wish to go into details as to what each of the States has done, how they have excluded their citizens or the residents of their Territory from participation in the election of the officers of the States and of Senators and Members of Congress. I had hoped, and I believe yet, that the majority of this body and the majority of the American people will take a broader view of this question, will recognize that it is one of the first moment, will consider it in the spirit suggested by the Senator from New York, without partisan bias, at a time when we are far enough removed from the excitements of the last campaign to permit us to come to some conclusion that would be wise and in the interest of the whole people. If that can be done, then I for one will agree to the consideration of the question.

But when we have agreed to place the whole matter in the hands of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to give the Senator from New York and his party, which has a majority of that committee, full opportunity to consider in all their details the laws upon the statute-books and to bring forth in December next any amendment, any suggestion that may better the present condition of affairs, why is it desired to go beyond that?

Mr. HOAR. We want to know what the facts are.

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator from Massachusetts says he wants to know the facts. If the Senator from Massachusetts were frank, as he ought to be, he would answer by saying: "I want to rake over the Southern section of the country and see how bad a case I may make against that section." I do not believe the Senator from Massachusetts, brave as he is, would dare to go to Massachusetts and to Rhode Island and to Connecticut and denounce his people for their omissions as he has denounced the people of Louisiana and of Texas. He would like to rake up all the harsh and hard things that are said in the excitement of a political campaign, and they occur in every State in the Union.

There are men who grow excited in Massachusetts as they do in Texas and commit acts and make speeches in the height of the excitement that they would not be guilty of at any other time. That is one of the necessary and inevitable results of popular suffrage. It can not be made absolutely pure, for nothing in this world has been since the fall of Adam. But taking the sixty or sixty-five millions of people, the machinery which is provided by the States and by the United States for conducting elections is to-day as fair and shows the result of the will of the people as nearly as it is possible to ascertain it under our system. You may better it here and there, and all good men of all parties are most anxious to have that done, but you can not do it, you will not do it if you are to revive the issues of the war and bring Massachusetts against South Carolina, and New York against the great State of Texas.

The first two clauses of the resolution submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts relate to the choice of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States in 1888. That part of the resolution embraces the elections in every State in the Union; it embraces the election of every member of Congress; but I ask the Senator from Massachusetts where does he find the power to go into a State of this Union and examine and inquire into the local election in the State of Louisiana? Does he mean that from this time henceforth, if his party is to have the power, the States are to be ignored; that no longer will we rely upon local self-government, but that the National Government shall take possession and charge of the local affairs of every State in this Union?

Mr. President, I in part represent one of the original thirteen States of this Union, whose citizens at the creation of this Government bore their full part in all the struggles which led up to the Declaration of Independence and the adoption of the Constitution. The people of Maryland have been true to this Union from that hour to this. There never has been a time when Maryland did not do her full part in this Union. A small State, she can have her rights only by insisting on a strict observance of the Constitution and being left to manage her own affairs in her own way.

When you enter upon the scheme proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts, wiping out and destroying the rights and power of the States to regulate their own elections, his State and mine, those of us upon this border, small in area and sparse in population compared with the great States of the Union, will be swallowed up and our rights will be gone from us. The Representatives of New England may enter upon it and for a time may harass and embarrass the Southern end of our country, but when you have entered upon your scheme you will soon find that the power that is gathering along the banks of the Mississippi and west of it will have us at their mercy, and the Union and the Government as we have understood it, and as it has been administered up to this hour, will be a thing of the past.

I know that during the campaign through which we have just passed, our friends on the other side——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to call the attention of the Senate to the regular order, which is the resolution reported by the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] directing the Committee on Privileges and Elections to revise the existing laws regulating elections of members of Congress, etc.

Mr. ALLISON. Pending that I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill, laying aside informally the pending order. I do not care to displace it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and the consideration of the appropriation bill will be resumed.

Mr. VOORHEES. I desire to submit an amendment to the resolution offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], which I ask be read and printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the resolution:

And said committee shall also inquire into and investigate fully whether money was corruptly and unlawfully used in the control of elections in November, 1888, in any of the States, and for this purpose said committee shall have power to examine into the various sums of money raised for such purpose, by whom paid, and by whom collected, and to whom disbursed, and it shall be the duty of said committee to exercise this power.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BOWEN. I ask the Senator from Iowa to yield to me for a few moments that I may call up the bill (S. 3894) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Southern Ute Indians in Colorado, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying the same into effect.

Mr. ALLISON. I consent to yield to the Senator from Colorado if the bill will lead to no debate.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I object to the consideration of that bill in the absence of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES], who is chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BOWEN. He will be here before the bill is read through.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I object to its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas persists in his objection. The appropriation bill is before the Senate.

Mr. PASCO. I ask the Senator from Iowa to yield to me for the passage of a bill which will occupy but a few moments time, and which was passed upon unanimously by the Committee on Claims. If it leads to any discussion I shall withdraw it.

Mr. ALLISON. With every disposition to gratify Senators, and having promised to yield to my friend from Colorado without knowing that he had a long bill——

Mr. BOWEN. I was going to ask leave to omit the reading by unanimous consent.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We can not do that.

Mr. ALLISON. I must decline to yield to friends at this moment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for the regular order, which is the appropriation bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I feel obliged to go on with the appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont calls for the regular order.

Mr. BOWEN. Then I give notice that I shall move to take up Senate bill 3894 as soon as the appropriation bill is finished.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (H. R. 12490) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 258) providing for the printing of the eulogies on the life and character of Edward W. Robertson, deceased, late a Representative in Congress from Louisiana; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 262) to print 39,000 copies of the fourth annual report of the Commissioner of Labor.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEWART. I move that the Committee on Appropriations be discharged from the further consideration of an amendment offered on the 11th instant and referred to that committee, intended to be proposed to the Army appropriation bill, and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. It has been printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered if there be no objection.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12008) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the reserved amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations on page 19, line 12, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "1 cent" and insert "50 cents," and in line 14, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seventy-six" and insert "ninety;" so as to read:

For wages of plate-printers, at piece-rates to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, not to exceed the rates usually paid for such work, including the wages of printers' assistants, at $1.25 a day each when employed, and for wages of printers' assistants at steam-presses, at $1.50 a day each when employed, and for royalty at not exceeding 50 cents per thousand impressions for use of steam plate-printing machines, $390,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, as I took the floor yesterday to make a few remarks upon the pending amendment a privileged report, that of a conference committee, was interposed, which consumed the remainder of the day. Since then I learn of the great anxiety of the Senator from Iowa who is in charge of the bill to have it disposed of as soon as possible. I shall, therefore, make my remarks, which otherwise might have been more prolonged, just as brief as I possibly can with justice to those in whose interests I feel some concern.

This controversy over the amendment in question is one which has been in existence in the country for a long time. It has appeared and reappeared at various times in the Senate and House of Representatives. It is between what are known as the plate-printers of the country and those interested in certain steam-press inventions which assume to do the same class of work. It is work performed upon the Government securities and upon the Government stamps. The amount of this work which is done by the steam-press is not so very considerable, and the saving to the country by the highest computation made by those interested in their use is not very large. It is assumed by some to be three or four hundred thousand dollars. By the best information that I have been able to obtain it is not half that amount.

The money involved, however, whether it be many or few thousands of dollars, is a consideration of importance, provided that its expenditure be not controlled by considerations of more consequence. But I think there are such other considerations, and I believe, as a general proposition which ought to control our action with reference to this amendment (which, if adopted, is practically the adoption of the steam-press rather than the hand-press in the manufacture of our securities on certain important branches of that manufacture), that the adoption of this amendment, being such affirmative action by the country, will be a serious step in the direction of the depreciation of the high quality of those securities and stamps which is indispensable for the true interests of the Government and of the people whom the Government represents.

This is not a question as to whether labor-saving machinery should be adopted in this country, or in any country, whether the progress and the improvement of society require that existing forms of handicraft, existing utensils made use of by individuals in the various industries of life, in the various forms of production, and in earning sustenance for the human race, shall give way as improvements dawn upon society and better methods of accomplishing the great ends of industry are invented. It is not such a question as that, and those who favor the continued use of the hand-press by no means take such a position as that. It is to-day the general position, as I understand it, of what are called the labor organizations of the country. Whether it be their position or be otherwise, it is the universal concession of all intelligent men that actually labor-saving machinery, its introduction, and the gradual supplanting of other methods of production is a benefit to the human race, and not only to the human race as a whole but it is ultimately a benefit to those who are actually engaged in the production.

So the working people, as they style themselves, and as others sometimes call them, are interested more than others for the reason that they are the most numerous class of people, and those whose condition needs most promotion and encouragement. They are of all people the most interested in the introduction of labor-saving machinery, but it should never be forgotten, as it seems to be forgotten by those who own these labor-saving machines, by those who control these inventions (who are the few, and they not the inventors either, as a rule, but those capitalists who have come to the ownership of labor-saving machines), that no labor-saving machinery should be introduced until it be demonstrated that it has the quality of saving labor. The mere fact that it is able to perform just the same amount of work which is performed by previous methods and utensils does not constitute a reason for its introduction unless that work of the same quality may be performed at a great reduction of expenditure.

In such a case I admit that the labor-saving machinery should be introduced, although the quality of the work might not be superior to that of the previous utensil employed, and for this reason, that the existing occupations and means of livelihood, the knowledge which a man or a woman has acquired of his or her handicraft, is necessarily and properly an important element of supporting life and of continuing existence, and during the interim when the new piece of machinery is being introduced and is being applied in general use, there necessarily must be in a considerable degree deprivation and suffering and want among those whose occupations for the time being are interrupted and oftentimes destroyed.

Therefore it is that in the case now before the Senate, unless it be clear, unless it be a demonstration that the steam-press introduced into this Government and other work is an actual and a positive and an important benefit to some class or to all classes, it is not to be by the Government introduced here as a measure to supplant the means of livelihood of any of our fellow-citizens.

Now, the hand plate-printers come here and they, by universal concession as well as by a great amount of positive proof, show that they perform the highest quality of work in their occupation; that their work is superior to the work of the steam-press in those branches of that occupation where the steam-press can be used at all. It is, I say, demonstrated here by universal concession that a great part of the work of the printing of the Government securities can not be performed at all by the steam-press, and that it is only a limited portion of it, and that the inferior or less difficult parts of the work, which are performed in this process of the manufacture of currency and of stamps by the steam-press.

I may fairly assume that it is also a demonstration from the great mass of evidence which has been taken so far, even by the Senate committee and certainly as the result of the investigations of the committee of the House of Representatives, that the work of the hand-press is better upon the backs of the certificates and on the stamps than is that of the steam-press, is of a higher quality when each press is called upon to do the best that it can. I think that is conceded and is fairly to be assumed from all the evidence and the admissions in the case.

Mr. President, we are then in this situation, that we have governmental work to perform, and that the highest quality of that work is of indispensable necessity to the general interests of the people. That seems to be conceded by all. It is admitted that the business of counterfeiting the superior production, the carefully executed certificates for currency of the country, is much more difficult than that of counterfeiting the inferior order of work. So, if it be important that the currency of the country should not be counterfeited, it is important that it should be executed in the highest possible style of the art which prints currency or which makes stamps.

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] yesterday, in commenting upon this point, stated that in the investigations of the committee of which he was a member the experts produced by the hand plate-printers as well as those perhaps summoned upon the other side, examined various specimens of work and that they were unable to detect from mere inspection which was the work of the hand-press and which was the work of the steam-press. I think he said that in three cases out of four they mistook the work of the one for the other. The Senator argued from that that there is conclusive evidence as embodied in the report of the committee of which he is a member that there is from this circumstance alone conclusive evidence that the work of the steam-press is as good as that of the hand-press. He reasons from the fact——

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from New Hampshire will allow me. He does not state me quite as strongly as I stated myself.

Mr. BLAIR. I am not done stating the Senator's position.

Mr. HARRIS. What I said was this: When samples of the work indiscriminately taken from the current work of both presses were submitted to the experts and they were called upon to select the better specimens and the worse specimens, in the ratio of three out of four they selected the steam-press work as the better and the hand-press work as the inferior. That was my statement.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator then has stated his point for himself. If he has stated it more strongly than I did, he has not stated it any more strongly than it ought to be stated, and if the increased strength of the statement makes more distinct the inaccuracy of his conclusion, it is not my fault.

Mr. President, the Senator reasons from the statement which he has made to the conclusion which is vital in order that this amendment be adopted; he reasons from that statement of the result of that experiment to the conclusion that the hand-press should be discountenanced and discarded in this particular branch of the work, and that the steam-press should be substituted. I am not misstating the Senator so far as the conclusion is concerned.

It seems to my mind that no such conclusion follows. Behind that experiment, and above and beyond and outside of that experiment is all the great mass of evidence that the highest quality of the hand-press work is superior to the highest quality of the steam-press work, and the fact which nobody disputes is that the currency of the Government requires for the safety and interests of the people the very highest quality of work that can be obtained from any source by the use of any machine or any agency that can be engaged in plate-printing.

Now, let us examine the accuracy of the conclusion which the Senator draws from his experiment. Here are experts brought before the committee, and there are submitted to them various specimens of the current work of both steam and hand presses, as he says, and in the majority of cases the steam-press work is selected by the experts as the better. Now, what is the evidence in the case? The original complaint is contained in the memorial of the Knights of Labor, which I presented more than a year ago, and which has never been investigated until very recently by this committee, so that this evidence only got to us yesterday, too late for anybody to examine it.

The complaint set forth fully at length in the original memorial, and to be found in almost every newspaper issued in the country for ten years, and especially in the more recent period of the last two or three years, is to the effect that the work which is being imposed upon the country is of a very low order, no matter what does it or where it comes from. In other words, the execution of the plate-printing of the currency has not been up to the highest style or quality of any art whatever, whether of the hand-press or of the steam-press; and yet that being the complaint with reference to the general condition of our currency, so that those specimens which came before these experts were all of them inferior and below the quality they ought to be for any evidence that is before us, on examination of this bad work which was presented to them in the particular instances or specimens which were presented to them it appears that the steam-press work was fully as good as the hand-press work.

Any one can see that by the selection, whether it might be accidental or whether it might be by design, of bad specimens or of ordinary and average specimens of both kinds of work, when all concede them to be inferior, and the general public complain that they are so, the work of the steam-press might be even superior to that of the hand-press. And yet it does not appear upon the great general and important proposition that is to be considered here, the question whether the Government work is being done in the highest style of art, and whether, in order that it may be done in the highest style of art, we ought to employ the hand-press or the steam-press, that the Committee on Finance has passed any judgment. Indeed, on that question it has made no investigation. So far as this report has been quoted to us, the committee has made no investigation that touches the real merits of this case.

Mr. President, I do not know how thorough this investigation of the Senate Finance Committee has been. I know that repeatedly I called this matter to the attention of the Committee on Finance at the last session of Congress and urged attention to it and could not obtain it, and when they did undertake this investigation they were pressed by the tariff examination, and I know from my intercourse with members of the committee when they took it up that they found it an exceedingly heavy burden to carry; and I am only astonished that in the immense mass of work which they have performed during the past few months they found time to take the great mass of testimony which is contained in this report.

But, sir, I say I do not believe it has been a thorough investigation, and I say it from some knowledge. I say it because I do not think the report itself touches the main point which was submitted to the committee for investigation and for action. I say it further because I know the parties who make this complaint. These plate-printers themselves complain that they have not been fully heard, and after these hearings closed those who represented them came to me and said their most important witness had not been allowed to speak, and they inquired what could be done. They informed me that they could not obtain a further hearing by the committee, and I did not see how they could have had further hearing by the committee from that date if the matter was to be brought before Congress at all at the present session.

They asked what could be done, and they brought to me the chief of the detective service of the Treasury of the United States, and I talked with Mr. Bell, and he told me that he had not been heard on the point that it was important to be heard on, and I told him to write a letter which I would introduce here in debate, and to state the answers to specific questions which should be addressed to him, and to make his answer to them pointedly, and I would use such data in debate. Accidentally I was away and they went to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] and he has laid the letter of the chief before us.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator allow me a word upon that point?

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. I simply desire to say that the committee heard every witness that the hand-press plate-printers proposed to introduce until they announced that they had closed their case. We sat there day by day for many days hearing every witness that they introduced until they themselves announced that their case was closed. Afterwards we heard the other side, and then we heard such witnesses as they introduced in rebuttal until we closed the case. Mr. Bell was brought to the committee-room after we had ceased to take testimony, and he was instructed to put on file a statement as to certain facts, but we declined to examine him as an expert or to hear any further expert testimony.

Mr. BLAIR. A statement of that kind, I submit to the Senate, is of itself sufficient not only to demonstrate just what I said, but to justify a motion to recommit this report to the committee with instructions to make an investigation, and not come in with a report claiming that it is based upon a thorough investigation, when they have not made it. Where I have lived and where I have been accustomed to see men tried for their lives and their interests of various kinds, the testimony is introduced upon one side, there is a reply to it, and then there is an opportunity for rebuttal. These plate-printers——

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. BLAIR. One moment.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not choose to allow the Senator to put the committee in any false position.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator will then allow me to proceed to see whether I do so.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator has already done so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield?

Mr. BLAIR. I do not just at this moment.

Mr. HARRIS. Very well.

Mr. BLAIR. As the Senator informed me yesterday, I will state my own propositions in my own way; and the Senator has the privilege, as I then claimed, of a response if he chooses to exercise it.

Where I have been accustomed to live and everywhere under all systems of jurisprudence and of investigation, whether by legislative bodies or any other that I have ever heard of before, a different method is pursued from that pursued by this committee; and I judge of that method by giving credit to the fullest extent to the statement which the Senator has just made in reference to the method by them pursued.

I say, sir, that the party making complaint produces his evidence; the party making defense produces his defense; and then the other party has the opportunity of producing his reply; and the witnesses, when produced, are not to be put off with a cold permission to file statements as to certain facts if they see fit to do so. It is not the privilege of the witness; it is the privilege of a party, and when a party produces an expert as a witness it is not to questions of fact that an expert is produced; and Mr. Bell is the superior expert of all experts in the country upon this question, or at least I so understand. At all events, he is the chief of the detective service of the Treasury Department, and he ought to be better than anybody else as an expert upon a question of this kind.

Now, Mr. President, what does Mr. Bell say in the letter which the honorable Senator from Connecticut introduced here? He says—and I will read it as bearing upon the only proposition that ought to be considered in treating this amendment; that is to say, as to whether the Government securities are done in the highest style of any art that can be employed in the printing of these securities, and whether the Government securities are so executed as to make them easy of counterfeiting and as to whether as a matter of fact they are easy of counterfeiting—he says that they are increasingly easy of counterfeiting and are being counterfeited more to-day than ever before, because steam-presses are employed in their execution and the hand-press has been rejected. Upon these three points let me read this letter:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 12, 1889.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 11th instant, asking reply to the following questions, namely:

First. Are the Government securities, in your judgment, printed in the highest style of the art; and is it necessary that they should be?

Answer. No, they are not; and I deem it necessary that they should be.

Second. Do the steam-presses print as good impressions as the hand-presses?

Answer. No, they do not.

Third. Do the present issues of silver certificates compare favorably with former issues in wear and execution?

Answer. No, they do not by any means.

Fourth. Are the present issues more easily counterfeited than former issues?

Answer. Yes, in my opinion they are. The former issues were printed in more colors, and in a higher style of art, which could not be so readily photographed; whereas the present issues have less colors and can be easily photographed.

Fifth. Do you hear of any complaint from the public generally, regarding the silver certificates?

Answer. Yes, a great many complaints from the public generally, and the bankers in particular.

The committee report to us that even the bankers make no complaint, and yet here is the chief detective of the Treasury of the United States, whose immediate attention is directed to the counterfeiting of the currency, and he says that there is complaint by the bankers, an increasing complaint by the bankers, even.

Sixth. Since the issue of silver certificates have many counterfeits appeared? If any, how were the counterfeits produced?

Answer. The following counterfeit silver certificates have made their appearance:

One dollar, letter D series 1886; photogravure, etc.

He goes on to give a list of eight counterfeit issues which have come under his observation. I need not take time in analyzing this letter and applying its statements to the three points I have mentioned. I will proceed to comment a moment on some other points which arise in this discussion, and I will say that at the proper place I desire to have printed as part of my remarks the memorial of the Knights of Labor, which I originally introduced as the basis of this investigation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will have leave to insert the memorial, if there be no objection.

The memorial is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The undersigned general officers of the Knights of Labor of North America, in pursuance of the following resolution adopted by the general assembly held at Minneapolis, Minn., in October, 1887, to wit:

Resolved by the general assembly of the Knights of Labor, That we demand that all Government securities, notes, bonds, checks, and stamps shall be printed in the highest style of the art of plate-printing, from hand-roller presses, so as to secure the Government and the public against loss by wear and by counterfeiting; and the general assembly, or any persons, or committee appointed to represent the order before Congress, are hereby directed to do all that is practicable to give effect to this resolution—respectfully petition for an investigation into the management of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, of the Treasury Department, and also for such legislation as will prevent the debasement of currency notes (greenbacks), silver certificates, national-bank notes, internal-revenue stamps, and other Government obligations issued from said bureau; also, that an investigation be made into the present method of supplying the Government with postage-stamps and postal-notes.

Your petitioners believe that the time has arrived when it has become a public duty to earnestly invoke your careful consideration of the urgent necessity for Congress to make a thorough examination into the management of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, to ascertain the character and quality of the Government obligations issued by said bureau.

Every citizen of the United States is vitally interested in the integrity of the work of this bureau, and in the absolute security which is virtually guaranteed by the Government in its issues of United States currency, silver certificates, national-bank notes, securities, internal-revenue stamps, etc. The banker, the merchant, the farmer—all classes of the community in fact—depend upon Congress to provide every protection and possible safeguard which the law-making power, in its wisdom and experience, is enabled to enact, which can be thrown around the printing and the issue of every obligation of value, obligations which, of necessity, have to be used by the Government and the people alike in all of their daily business transactions. We are credibly advised and, therefore, earnestly aver that the facts which will be brought out on a thorough and impartial examination will fully demonstrate that an investigation was absolutely necessary for the protection of the public.

This is not the first time that the authority of Congress has been invoked by the public for further security in the issue of the obligations of the Government. Three times Congress has caused a thorough examination to be made. In the Thirty-eighth Congress an investigation was made by a special committee of the House of Representatives, and again by a joint select committee of the two Houses in the Fortieth Congress. In the Forty-third Congress the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House of Representatives made a thorough examination. In their report (H. R. No. 150, second session Forty-third Congress) the Committee on Banking and Currency adopted the following language, found in the report of the Joint Select Committee on Retrenchment (Fortieth Congress):

"All these circumstances have satisfied the committee that methods of printing, numbering, sealing, and issuing of the securities of the United States ought to be adopted which will approach the nearest to being absolutely secure against error and fraud, even if such methods should be more expensive than others having less guaranties of protection."

On page 2 of their report the committee state that "the first requisite is, of course, security," and on page 3 they emphasize, if possible, this truism by saying "but not only is actual security necessary, but the confidence of the people that their obligations are secure."

The minority of the special committee of the Thirty-eighth Congress well say "the cost is nothing when compared with safety and security." This is adopted by Hon. Horace Maynard in his report giving the views of the minority of the Committee on Banking and Currency (page 17). Speaking of the bureau in 1875, and urging that the entire work on Government securities should be done there, he says:

"From the bureau so organized, employing the highest attainable skill and using none but the best procurable materials, and exacting from every employé his best possible effort, we should naturally expect satisfactory results. And we are not surprised, therefore, at the unrivaled character of the work, nor that it received the highest award for bank-note engraving at the Vienna exposition of 1873. A lower degree of excellence would be a discreditable failure. As one security against counterfeiting our public obligations, the highest possible style of artistic and mechanical execution is very important. Against all forms of counterfeiting, which depend for success upon imitation by manual dexterity, this is obviously a complete defense. (Page 12.)

"In the bureau the plates are prepared by the best existing skill and the most approved methods, the expense being but a secondary consideration." (Page 17.)

The following emphatic language is used in regard to internal-revenue stamps (page 20):

"While the individual citizen may have comparatively little interest in the stamps, the public revenues are heavily involved. These suffer and the honest tax-payers are defrauded if counterfeit stamps are altered or there is an unauthorized and dishonest issue of genuine stamps. To prevent counterfeiting the highest attainable artistic and mechanical skill in the execution, together with the use of distinctive paper, is believed to be the most effectual means."

Congress adopted the views set forth by the minority, and the entire work on Government securities was ordered to be done at the bureau, as recommended by Secretary Bristow.

The foregoing extracts show conclusively the anxiety of Congress to enunciate clearly the fact that in the issue of Government obligations not only that "the first requisite is, of course, security," but that the standard should be kept up whatever "the cost" so high that the "confidence of the people" "that their obligations are secure," should be as nearly absolute as possible. Such experienced statesmen as Senators EDMUNDS, HAWLEY, and FARWELL, and Representatives RANDALL and PHELPS were engaged in these investigations and signed the one or the other of the reports above quoted.

Your petitioners are informed and believe that, notwithstanding the known desire of Congress that the issues of the Government should be of the best material, with distinctive paper, having three separate impressions, and the whole to be executed with the best artistic skill, the silver certificates which have been issued, as well as some of the internal-revenue stamps, are of a greatly inferior quality. Complaint in regard to the silver certificates has been universal. It is admitted that the present chief of the bureau has increased the number of steam printing-presses from seven to nineteen and that he has used these presses in order to meet the increased demand on the bureau. The use of the steam-presses is at best an experiment. They have been condemned not only by bankers and brokers who deal in securities, but they have been condemned by a committee of experts appointed by Secretary Folger to investigate their merits. After a thorough test and examination the immediate predecessor of the present chief filed a protest against their use upon Government work. The report of the experts and the protest above referred to are on file in the Treasury Department. This experimental work, known to be exceptionally inferior, is being forced upon the community. The three separate impressions, ordered for additional special security against counterfeiting, has been discontinued.

The plate-printing by hand-roller presses—the best and most artistic mode known—is not up to the standard by reason of the inferior quality of the material furnished the printers. The number of plate-printers is limited to one hundred and eighty-seven. No matter what the requirements of the Government may be, no additional force of plate-printers can be employed. This has caused embarrassment and delay, which has enabled the chief of the bureau to justify himself in the use of steam printing-presses, and the consequent issue of inferior work.

Your petitioners respectfully urge that it was never intended by Congress that the Government obligations issued by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing should be a matter of experiment.

It is needless to urge that if the genuine issue is allowed to deteriorate, become debased, and unable to stand the usual wear, that the ability to successfully counterfeit those issues is correspondingly increased. A poorly-printed bond, bank-note, or revenue stamp is an open advertisement to the counterfeiter to ply his vocation, and cause loss and disaster to a too confiding public. It is, therefore, time that Congress should intervene in the interest of the public and cause a vigorous and impartial investigation.

The plate-printers are a body of intelligent, skilled workmen. Their avocation requires a high average of ability. The exercise of care, skill, and judgment is necessary to produce good work. Neither as a body nor as individuals are they opposed to progress. Should it be demonstrated that machinery can be invented which can supplant their handicraft and artistic skill—usurp and fill their places—they will be quick to admit the fact. But that time has not arrived. They claim that the most satisfactory—because the most "secure"—work ever done has been and is done by them on the hand-roller presses. The handling, the heating, the putting on of the ink, the wiping of the plate—now heavy, now light, to bring out the effect intended by the engraver—the temperature of the hand as well as the texture of the skin, all requiring the constant exercise of forethought, judgment, and skill—human effort entirely—are attributes of and belonging solely to the printer, which a machine can not possibly supply.

Your petitioners are credibly informed and believe that the following facts can be shown, and that they afford sufficient cause for an earnest and impartial examination; and your petitioners believe that the results of an investigation will be to cause such remedial legislation as will in the future protect the Government and give greater security to the public:

First. That by printing the backs of silver certificates on steam-presses the note is inferior and discreditable to the Government.

Second. That the internal-revenue stamps printed on the steam printing-presses are greatly inferior, are not as good as many trade labels, and are a disgrace to the Government.

Third. That economy, and not security, is the primary object of the present management.

Fourth. That at the suggestion of the present chief the law has been so framed as to prevent the employment of a sufficient number of plate-printers to perform the work of the bureau in the manner contemplated when the transfer of the entire work to the bureau was made.

Fifth. That the same law which limits the number of plate-printers to be employed has enabled the chief to increase the steam printing-presses nearly threefold.

Sixth. That the steam printing-presses are not furnished by the owners of the patents, but the right to construct them is purchased by the Government. A royalty is also paid on every impression made.

Seventh. That the steam printing-presses are so easily put out of order that it requires the whole force of machinists to be employed in the effort to keep them in repair, to the neglect of other and more important work.

Eighth. That the Milligan press—the one most in use—has been condemned repeatedly.

Ninth. That an employé of the bureau, who claimed to have made certain improvements on the said presses, was required to furnish his drawings and specifications to the manufacturers—the owners of the patents reaping all of the benefits and the Government being at all of the expense.

Tenth. That no expert, with any regard for his reputation, will hesitate to pronounce the work done by said presses as inferior.

Eleventh. That unless Congress interferes the attempt to force the steam printing-presses on the Government will succeed, and every kind of Government obligation will be printed on them, rapid cheap work being substituted for good but more costly work.

Twelfth. That the Chief of the Bureau speciously recommended and Congress was led to change the employés who worked by the day to annual employés; that by this change the eight-hour law has been, and is daily, evaded; that the employés are compelled to work overtime and on Sundays, especially in the repair of the steam printing-presses, without receiving extra compensation; that the fifteen days' leave with pay granted by Congress has not been granted, the excuse being that work was behind, and that they could not be spared. The eight-hour law has been evaded, and the law granting the fifteen days' leave has been nullified whenever possible.

Thirteenth. That the printing of the one and two dollar certificates has been discontinued.

Fourteenth. That fine engraving can not be worked on steam printing-presses; consequently coarser engraving has been resorted to.

Fifteenth. That the "best procurable material" is not furnished the printers with which to do their work.

Your petitioners will furnish proof on these points whenever required, and they submit herewith specimens of the work done on the steam printing-presses, marked Exhibit A, B, C, D, to which the attention of Congress is directed.

Your petitioners further pray that they may be allowed to appear before the committee on ——— or such other committee as may be designated, and that they be permitted to produce expert witnesses and such documentary evidence as they may deem essential to substantiate their averments.

They also pray that Congress will enact the accompanying or some other bill into a law more clearly defining and limiting the powers of the Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and that the chief and the assistant chief be an engraver or a plate-printer.

Your petitioners believe that the inferior work being issued by the bureau, together with the delay and embarrassment now existing in that office, arises from a want of practical knowledge on the part of those having charge of this important branch of the Treasury Department.

And your petitioners will ever pray, etc.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] in his very able and emphatic argument on this subject dwelt particularly upon the point that there was no complaint among the people at large, that there was nobody complaining of this matter except, as he said, eight or ten hundred plate-printers. If the eight or ten hundred plate-printers who exist in this country, who are an occupation by themselves, complain, I submit that this matter is worthy of investigation. But the complaint goes a great way further. The great labor organizations of the country to which they belong have espoused their cause, and I have letters from Mr. Powderly and from other prominent officers in which they say that they have carefully investigated this matter, and while they disclaim in the strongest terms that they are opposed to the introduction of labor-saving machinery or that this is a movement in that direction, or based upon any hostility to the introduction of labor-saving machinery, they say that in this case the steam-press is simply an invasion of their occupation in the interest of capital and for the performance of work of an inferior quality that the public may be imposed upon and large profits made which belong, as they believe, to the honest men and their associates engaged in this occupation, and therefore they espouse their cause, they indorse it after an investigation, and are careful to preclude the idea that it is based in any degree upon any hostility to the introduction of labor-saving machinery in proper cases.

So, I think myself that the matter is worthy of an investigation even if the public at large did not make much complaint. But, on the other hand, so far from the Senator's statement of the facts being correct, I take it he is very wide of the mark indeed. He has produced a few letters from Mr. Coe and gentlemen like Mr. Coe, who say there is no occasion for complaint, or substantially that. Not a letter is produced so far as I know in this testimony, not a particle of evidence from anybody that undertakes to say that the steam-press work is superior to that of the hand-press, or that in any respect it is better whether upon the face or on the back of the currency. Nobody asserts that it is better than that of the hand-press, but they seem to admit pretty generally that the steam-press work when well done is good enough—the particular part of the work which it does—but these are not the witnesses who are most likely to be free from bias, who are most likely to come here and give us exactly the correct impression as to the character and quality of this work and what is necessary to the public interests, as it seems to me.

All these bankers print national-bank notes, print certificates of stock of companies of every description, and they are interested that there shall come to be dominant in this country a style of art which will enable them to use work of an inferior rather than of a superior quality if it can be obtained at a lesser rate. When the Government of the United States says to the country that the work of the steam-press is of an inferior quality to the work of the hand-press, and that these three or four machines down here in the Department which are destroying the handicraft of these eight hundred or ten hundred of our fellow-citizens perform inferior work, it is equivalent, of course, to a certificate of bad character to that kind of work, and the people at large and those who consume certificates, if I may so speak, those who are interested to buy them and to receive them, and who buy them and pay for them, are at once put upon the alert; they refuse to use and employ these steam-presses, and fall back upon the ancient and high quality of the hand-press work.

So it is a thing of more importance to very great interests in this country and to those who have occasion to print the bank notes that are used that the steam-press does not receive a black eye, if I may so speak, from the action of the Legislature of the country. And so they say this is good enough. Are not the national banks interested to get circulation as cheaply as possible? Would not those who have occasion to buy and use certificates and stamps of every description be interested to get their work as cheaply as possible? And if they can impose an inferior quality on the community at large, and that, too, by the sanction and indorsement of the Congress of the United States in so important a matter as the execution of its currency, it gives to them a vast pecuniary advantage, and they are in a situation to break down these eight or ten hundred men who earn their livelihood by manual occupation.

There is a great interest, a very powerful interest, and a mighty pecuniary interest on the side of the steam-press against this comparatively small number of men and they altogether of small means. But the Senator does not produce this class of testimony here with any presumption in favor of its reliability or its accuracy, and when he says there is no complaint from the people at large I simply point him to the press of this country as it has been for the last ten years. He must have observed the increasing complaints of the counterfeiting of nearly all the small classes of our bills and some of the larger. Why does the chief of the detective service of the Treasury Department come in with this letter dated during this very month in which we are considering this question? The Senator from New York may not have heard of these complaints, but those who have had occasion to inquire do understand in regard to them and do know the facts as to whether these complaints are well founded. They say, as does the chief detective of the Treasury Department, that there is very great call for a reform of this matter.

Now, sir, omitting the most that I intended to say, the issue before the Senate stands right here: This complaint was long since made. The House committee examined it at the last session long and thoroughly, its members made personal examination of the work, they went to the building where the engraving is done, examined our own public servants, and Mr. Graves himself testified before them and he said what everybody has said except this Senate committee, that the work of the hand-press was of a very superior quality to the work of the steam-press when each was performing in the highest style of its possibility, and that House committee thus investigating from the time the complaint was made, giving opportunity for all sides and not choking off the most important witness who testified on either side because they could not get through in season if he testified, reported against the steam-press and strongly and most emphatically in favor of the hand-press.

The House committee, representing the great mass of the people, making this investigation early and long and carefully, reported, as we have seen and as has been introduced in these debates, most emphatically in favor of the hand-press, and the House of Representatives indorsed that report and sent us the bill upon which the report of the Senate committee has been made and which was for the time being indefinitely postponed, but that vote has been reconsidered, I understand, so that the bill may yet be discussed in the Senate, and I hope it will pass here.

They have sent us further this appropriation bill with the clause which is now under discussion, a provision based upon the verity, upon the report of their committee, fully discussed, fully indorsed, and that is the question which we are here to decide, our own appropriation committee having rejected the action of the House and made a substitute for it which I am informed by those who are interested is of no sort of use to them.

Mr. President, under these circumstances, with all these presumptions, with all these facts, all this information against the equality of the work of the steam-press, it does seem to me that the safe and sensible thing for us to do is to let the action of the House stand, and just let this bill pass the Senate in this regard as it came to us from the House; and if we shall have done any harm, if any error shall have been committed thereby, if the public interests shall suffer to any serious extent, or to any extent, the whole great future is open before us, and the men who own these steam-presses can endure a little longer just as well as those whose livelihood depends upon the practice of their handicraft can endure to be deprived of it and of all its proceeds to them.

I ought perhaps to add that a note has been placed on my desk, which I will read here, which comes from the plate-printers:

In every instance the experts protested against giving their opinions on the specimens, and showed how easily the best steam-press work could be taken from new plates and the worst work from old hand-plates. One witness testified to seeing the work selected.

The committee would not, as we proposed, take a day's work from each press.

Mr. Swan, who testified for the machines, said a day's work from hand could not be separated if mixed together, but he separated steam from hand impressions the next moment himself.

I do not know just the relevancy of this, because I am not familiar with the testimony. This is a statement having reference to the action of the experts before the Senate committee.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, in answer to the supplement of the Senator's speech I will say that the statement of the superintendent, distinct, clear, and emphatic, was that the specimens submitted to the experts were taken, indiscriminately and without selection, from the work of the two presses. I do not remember as to the protest of the experts to giving opinions, but sure I am they did give opinions, and the great majority of them selected as the best specimens the work of the steam-press and as the worst specimens the work of the hand-press, and these experts having been introduced by both the hand-printers and the steam-printers, by both sides of the question, in the ratio of three or four to one they selected the steam-press prints as the best.

But I did not rise to prolong this debate, and do not propose to prolong it, but I do propose to put on record the fact as to the fullness and fairness of this investigation, so that the Senator from New Hampshire shall not put the committee in any false position in respect to the matter.

The committee sat there patiently and heard every witness whom the plate-printers proposed to introduce until they declared that they had closed their case. Then the other side were heard until they declared that they had closed, and then we heard the plate-printers in rebuttal until they declared again that they had closed. Then the committee fixed a day upon which they would allow a representative of each side to sum up before the committee, it being distinctly announced and agreed by everybody that the hearing was closed, except the summing up. On the day fixed for the summing up, and at the hour fixed for that purpose, Mr. Bell appeared and the committee declined to examine him and reopen the expert testimony in the case, but told Mr. Bell he could prepare his statement in his own way in respect to the facts deemed material and they would go into the record. He did prepare a statement and it was admitted to the record. That is the whole case. Beyond that I do not care to consume the time of the Senate.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President——

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator tell where that is to be found?

Mr. HARRIS. I suppose it is in the record. He was authorized to prepare his statement and put it there, and I presume he did so.

Mr. CALL. I desire to say a few words in regard to this proposed amendment to the House bill.

Mr. BLAIR. Will it interfere with the Senator if I should make a statement in regard to what I find in the report from Mr. Bell?

Mr. CALL. Not at all.

Mr. BLAIR. In the testimony of Mr. Bell, page 280, this occurs:

John S. Bell appeared before the subcommittee, and was interrogated and answered as follows:

Senator HISCOCK. You are only to examine him, Mr. Ralston, on the line indicated.

Mr. Ralston is attorney for the plate-printers.

Mr. RALSTON. I intended to ask him if he had some of the counterfeit silver certificates that have been issued; and if he has, to ask him to produce them to the committee.

The witness produced a paper and handed it to Senator HISCOCK.

Senator HISCOCK. That will go into the record.

The paper is as follows.

Then comes the paper, which is simply a statement with reference to various counterfeited notes, silver certificates, national-bank notes, internal-revenue stamps, and the like, and some account of their amount, showing the extent of counterfeiting going on, counterfeit plates captured, counterfeit obligations, the amount of counterfeit coin, etc., signed, "Respectfully, John S. Bell," addressed "to Senator HISCOCK." That seems to be the paper that was filed. Then follows an examination by Mr. Ralston and by Mr. HISCOCK. So far as I am able to see in glancing over it hurriedly, it does not touch at all upon the testimony which I have read from him in the letter given by him as an expert. It may be that it is farther on. I see nothing of the kind as yet.

Mr. HARRIS. I stated distinctly that we declined to reopen the expert phase of the examination.

Mr. BLAIR. Very well; then everybody must see that Mr. Bell is of no particular consequence in this case except as an expert, only to establish the fact that there is an increasing tendency to the counterfeiting of the currency and stamps of the United States. That is a question of fact which the committee took his testimony upon, and the Senator from New York ought to have remembered that testimony when he said there was no real occasion for him in this regard because here is the man who knows the fact, and they admitted his testimony, but on the real question as to the relative quality of the work done by these machines and the hand-presses and all the matter contained in the letter and contained in the report by the House committee, which was the essential statement of the best expert that could be produced on either side, he was not examined.

I say it is not a matter in which the committee can claim full justification—unless it be that there may have been some great overwhelming and all-controlling consideration that does not appear here—it is not a justification of the committee which has been tendered here for refusing to receive this man's best testimony of all when aiming at the truth to say that he did not get around in season. These gentlemen had some difficulty in getting at the detective of the Treasury Department who has reported against the work of the steam-printing machine. When they got him they found testimony in the very teeth of the action of the Department and of the report of the Senate committee.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, the Senate amendment proposes to strike out a provision in the House bill reducing the royalty upon these steam-presses, the object being to require the employment of the hand-press and the labor of a greater number of laborers that are employed through that instrumentality.

The error of the report of the Senate committee, in my opinion, is twofold. It assumes propositions which are untrue in themselves, and is based upon a policy which is shortsighted and would be ruinous to the country. It assumes that the question of economy of cost to the Government in respect to the work to be done, the engraving to be done, and the work to be done with these steam or hand presses is to be the controlling consideration, the smallest price for work of equal excellence. Now, stating the proposition in that broad form, which concedes to the report of the Senate committee more than it claims, namely, that the Government should pay only that amount which represents the smallest cost for the thing produced being of equal excellence, I deny it.

Mr. President, that ignores the great question of the civilization of this day, the question as to whether or not the labor-saving machinery which now is coming to do the work of man in almost every department can without legislation to aid the distribution of the products of labor be made use of, leaving the laborer and his family to provide for themselves, thrown out of employment ruthlessly and immediately, without any preparation or any arrangement by law or custom for the distribution of labor and its re-employment. It is the displacement of labor in the contest between machinery and labor. Here we have a striking instance of it.

The report of the Senate committee is in favor of the employment of machinery to the disregard of the lives and comfort of the laborers who have been educated under the Government for this employment, and are trained and fitted for it and for nothing else. On the one side are a few capitalists owning these presses, perhaps twenty or thirty in number, and on the other side are some eight or perhaps ten hundred, several hundred at least, laborers with probably two or three thousand human beings dependent upon their labor, who have been taught, and had a right to expect, that their skilled labor would continue to be employed by the Government, thus furnishing subsistence for their families.

I scarcely think, in this controversy, immediately, without any regard to the interests of those people, unless some great public necessity demanded it, that they should be thrown out of employment by the substitution of these steam-presses.

It may be said that the substitution of labor-saving agencies in all cases where there is a very general and widespread consumption of the thing which is the subject of this labor-saving machine is advantageous to the public in cheapening the necessaries of life; but that is not true of this Government work, limited as it is to the Government demand.

The work for the engraving to be impressed upon the notes and upon the currency is a very limited and peculiar kind of work, which affects the great body of the public only in reference to their use of the bank-notes. Why, then, shall we disregard the interests of this considerable number of laboring people and turn them loose without employment, unfitted as they are for any other business? But, Mr. President, that is always the case in the controversy between the organized forms of human effort or capital and labor and machinery and human life and human comfort, and the day has come when the legislative power must look somewhat towards the subsistence of the people in this great controversy of gigantic forces for the reduction of the cost of everything and the substitution of machinery for human muscle and human effort.

Suppose that two-thirds of the labor of the world could to-day be displaced by labor-saving machines and two-thirds of the human family thrown out of employment, who would solve the proposition as to how this two-thirds of the human race would live without any legislative action for the distribution of that production upon which human life subsists? This observation, which is true, will serve to show that you must look to providing by law for these people whose labor is destroyed and displaced by other agencies, and that you can not, simply because a labor-saving machine will save labor and reduce the cost of the article, substitute it, disregarding the necessity of preserving the lives and the employments of the people.

It is commonly assumed that this displacement of labor will regulate itself and readily find other employment and thus obtain their necessary part of the common productions, but it is evident that this process of change will take time and require favorable conditions, and that the proposition has limitations which must be considered. We could not find a humane employer of labor who would suddenly and without notice to his laborers substitute machinery for hand and leave them to provide for themselves without assistance. That is my great objection to this report of the Senate committee, that it is upon the side of money and machinery and against human life and human comfort.

But there is another point. Is it a clear question that a machine can possess the dexterity of hand and the lightness of touch of the hand and eye of man, the power which artistic work and excellence require? I confess I am loath to accept the testimony of any experts upon this proposition. I do not believe that you can make a machine that can paint a portrait like the human hand and the human eye and the human taste, or that you can make a machine that will take the impression of the most delicate tracery in a steel plate with the same fidelity that can be done with the pressure regulated and adjusted by the eye and the hand of the skilled laborer.

Machinery can do a great deal, but it has not yet created man. Nor do I think that it is reasonable to believe, whatever testimony there may be of experts, that the delicate engraving that should be done and the delicate impressions that should be made in the preparation of currency, of bank-notes, which should be the highest style of art, can be effected by a machine operated by steam as nicely and as carefully as it may be by the human hand. I am prepared to accept rather the testimony which these people have submitted in this controversy. I read from what Mr. Graves, Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, says, in Miscellaneous Document No. 131:

> As to the comparative merits of steam-printing and hand-printing, it may be said that, speaking in the widest sense, steam-printing is not equal to hand-printing.
> * * * * * * *
> There is no doubt that the printing by that process would best carry out the intention of the engraver.

Can there be a doubt upon that proposition—that the hand adjusting the press, the human intelligence directing its use, it would better carry out the nice and delicate work of the engraver than a steam-press; for, say what you may, it is quite obvious that there could not be that delicacy of touch, that instantaneousness of impression, that lightness of impression, that can be afforded by the human hand and the human eye and the human mind. So it would seem that this testimony of Mr. Graves is confirmed by the reasonable probabilities of the case.

On page 48 of House Report No. 3220 Mr. Bell testifies that he asked Mr. O'Neill if there was any difference between a bill printed by steam and one printed by hand, and he said:

> "Certainly there is." I said, "Would it not be better to have these bills printed by hand, would it not be more protection against counterfeiters? In other words, would it not be in the highest state of art?" He said, "Why, of course it would." That is the conversation I had with him.

Here are a large number of statements of opinion by persons who should be well informed upon the subject, some of whom profess to be photographic experts, inventors, photolithographers, editors of national-bank counterfeit detectors; James J. Brooks, ex-chief of the secret service, and quite a number of others, whose testimony is in accordance with what would seem to be the natural reason and the necessary conclusion upon the subject, that the hand-press was better adapted to the higher style of art.

But suppose that they are equal—which they are not and could not be—suppose that the steam-presses are more economical, and that it will cost the Government something more to do the work by hand, and the testimony before the House committee on this subject and the opinion of the committee formed upon the testimony is that there is not a difference of as much as 18 per cent. That is the conclusion of the House report and the House committee upon this evidence, and they think that is to be reduced very much from items which have not been estimated in the report. But assume it to be a difference of 18 per cent. in favor of the steam-press; assume for the argument's sake that the economy is greater with the steam-press than with the hand-press, I still maintain that it is the duty of the Government to continue the use of these hand-presses until the labor can find some other and different and better employment as a substitute for it.

If the Government is to employ labor-saving machines without reference at all to the people who have been engaged in its service, and they, whenever you can find a machine that will save cost to the Government, are without notice to be sent adrift and deprived of their employment, we shall then introduce a new principle and a new theory in our Government; that is to say, that we are entirely authorized by the cheapness of the service to the Government to disregard the lives and comfort and interests of the people who are employed by it.

I scarcely think that proposition can be maintained anywhere. The philosophy of invention does not require it. On the contrary, we shall be as the Chinese are said to be, and we shall claim if that is to be the result of labor-saving inventions, if instead of producing comfort and superior comfort to that which existed before, instead of diffusing more widely the productions of the earth than existed before, they increase the want and suffering and limit the distribution of the necessaries of life, we shall prefer to recur to the old hand-saving and hand-labor processes, for the object of all labor-saving machinery can only be to advance the general welfare and the general comfort of the people in lessening the cost of necessary and useful things and thus widening the area of their distribution, and enabling the labor formerly employed to be applied to other objects useful to man.

Therefore, Mr. President, I maintain that the propositions of the Senate report which boldly assume that the twenty or thirty persons who own these machines are to be considered because they furnish a cheaper article to the Government rather than the three or four thousand whose labor is required by the other processes are entirely erroneous. The evidence does not sustain the proposition that the work is equal in excellence to that of the hand-press.

The only evidence to that effect is that there have been fewer counterfeits of the work done by the steam-press than by the hand-press, and as to the statement of the Senator from Tennessee, which is no doubt correct, that the experts who happened to be employed could not distinguish between the work done by the two, but that the inferior work was in the proportion of three out of four instances, I believe, found to be that of the hand-press, that must be considered in connection with some other considerations to give to it force in the argument.

In order to weigh this and consider it we should have to know who were the experts, what was their degree of skill, and we should have to know why it was that the counterfeits upon the work made by the steam-press was smaller in number than that by the hand-press. We are in the dark upon this subject; but we have the testimony of every one of these skilled laborers and the detectives all concurring in the proposition that the hand-labor work is the highest style of art. Even those who prefer the steam-presses seem to admit this to be the fact, and as to the question whether the bank-notes authorized by the Government should be made in the highest style of art and with the greatest delicacy and beauty of finish there seems to me to be no ground even for argument or difference of opinion.

I can see no ground whatever for a contention in a case like this. My sympathies are with the laboring people always, and where the work is of equal excellence I should give the preference to them, even at a greater cost to the Government. But it seems to me that this is one of the propositions upon which there should be very little difference of opinion.

Here are several thousand people dependent upon a particular kind of work of which the Government has a monopoly, and which the Government has induced them to enter upon, and in which they have for years been employed. They have become skilled and trained workmen under the inducements held out by the Government, and now suddenly, owing to a combination of forces in the shape of a single machine, the property of two or three men, stated in some of these reports to have been in part invented by these laborers in the employment of the Government and improperly patented—by some means this new force has become a subject of property to half a dozen people, and they propose that a large number of laboring people, educated under the Government for this particular employment, shall be dismissed from their work in order that a royalty amounting to many thousands of dollars a year shall be paid to them. In that controversy, Mr. President, I am upon the side of the laborers.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator from New Hampshire will permit me, I wish to again offer in a different form the amendment substantially agreed to yesterday by all Senators present with the exception of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN]. I have the amendment now in a form which meets his views, and I should like to present it as I shall probably be called out of the Chamber in a few minutes.

Mr. BLAIR. What does the Senator desire? I do not wish to be interrupted in the four or five minutes I propose to occupy the floor in a discussion of the pending question.

Mr. SHERMAN. I simply wish to reoffer the amendment I submitted yesterday about street railroads. All will agree to it.

Mr. BLAIR. If it does not lead to discussion I shall be very glad to oblige the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. If there is any objection to it I will withdraw it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio proposes an amendment, which will be received, if there be no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let the amendment come in as the fourth section of the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. The amendment of the Senator from Ohio requires unanimous consent. I do not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add the following additional section to the bill:

SEC. 4. That any company authorized by law to run cars propelled by horses within the District of Columbia is hereby authorized to substitute for horses electric power by storage or independent electrical batteries or under-ground wire, or by under-ground cables moved by steam-power, on the whole or any portion of its roadway, the same to be done under the direction and with the approval of the commissioners of the District of Columbia, with authority to purchase and use any terminal grounds and facilities necessary for the purpose. And any such street railway company electing to substitute such power or any part of its tracks or road-beds on the streets of the District of Columbia, before doing so shall cause such part of its road-beds to be laid with the flat grooved rail and made level with the surface of the streets upon each side of said tracks or road-beds, so that no obstruction shall be presented to vehicles passing over said tracks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendment will be agreed to in lieu of that adopted yesterday. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment reported from the Committee on Appropriations, on page 19, concerning steam plate-printing presses.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, the gist of this report, if it is true or reliable, depends, I judge, from the emphasis which both members of the committee give to it, upon the supposed alleged experiments when the experts could not tell the work of one machine from the other. The gist of this report depending upon that one alleged demonstration of their incapacity to tell the work of the one machine from the other induced me to examine the subject itself a little further and to ask the Senate to consider whether the inference of those who make the report is justified by the evidence before them.

These experiments were not fair. If the very men who gave the opinion said they were not fair, that they could not give a fair opinion at the time, they are witnesses which, if the committee ought to cite at all, they ought to take their testimony that the experiments were unfair, and not come in here with a report based upon an allegation that these men could not tell the difference between the two classes of work, when they themselves said that they could not do it because the tests were unfair. If they are men of veracity the main proposition which the committee submit to us, which we are to rely upon, is that the testimony is good for nothing.

The testimony of the witness who is cited as good, and whose experiment was alleged by that veracious witness to be good for nothing, the committee come here and make the basis of their report against the hand-plate machines. If an expert's testimony is good at all, it is as good when he says his testimony is good for nothing as though he had said the experiment was a fair one and that his opinion was one that he would stand by.

The report is based mainly, apparently from the way in which those who made the report insist upon it, on the alleged fact that the experts could not tell the work of one machine from the other which was submitted to them. I dwelt upon that somewhat originally. Now, if they are to come in here and ask us to believe their report against these hand-presses upon the testimony of these experts, they ask us to accept these experts as telling the truth. That must be clear.

They ask us to rely upon those witnesses. If those same witnesses say that the opinion which these gentlemen present to us as the basis of their report is good for nothing, why are they not to be accepted as true witnesses when they say their testimony is good for nothing as in the other case when it is claimed that their opinion was a sound opinion and the proper basis of a report? If they say that their experiment is an unfair one, then what justification have these gentlemen for asking us to believe their report? That is the proposition which I make in connection with the testimony which I read. Here is one of the experts, Edward Shaffer:

By Mr. GRAVES:

Question.—

Mr. Graves, a Government officer down here, seems to be conducting this examination. He seems to have been before the committee, the most interested person, the most prejudiced if not bitter partisan of these steam-presses apparently in the United States, and he is a Government employé at whose ear may have sat monopolistic toads all these years, filling him with prejudice against the machines of the hand plate-printers. This Mr. Graves comes here and he seems to be conducting the examination. I doubt not, from the way he delivered himself, that as in some other instance of caucus nominations and caucus committees, he may in his zeal have acted almost as a member of the committee. He appears certainly to have conducted the examination of witnesses, and if you open the volume of testimony anywhere you will see the name of Mr. Graves, Mr. Graves, Mr. Graves. Here is the question by Mr. Graves and the answer to him:

Q. I would like to submit to you—

This is to the witness—

I would like to submit to you some impressions which have been submitted to other experts. Please examine these impressions which I now present to you, and which have been numbered by the stenographer, and give your opinion of the character of the printing upon them, designating them, if you can, whether printed by steam or by hand, and indicating which is the better printed.

Now, that is a question by Mr. Graves. The answer is by the expert:

A. No. 3 is very poor.

Q. Please indicate in going over them in what respect you think they are poor; whether because of the condition of the plate or what.

A. The general appearance. The general appearance has not the character which that work should have. It has lost its character.

Q. By what process do you think No. 3 was printed?

A. I could not say. I would not say, because I do not know.

By Senator HISCOCK—

Who seems to have been associated with Mr. Graves in this examination—

Q. Can you give an opinion?

A. No, sir; I would not give an opinion, because I will state this: As a plate-printer, I know very well how things can be picked out for a purpose, in order to puzzle a person. If I went to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and they showed me a pile of work done by hand or told me nothing about it, I could sit down and pick out the hand-work from the steam-work, I think, without knowing what it was.

By Mr. GRAVES:

Who resumes the examination in behalf of the Government or the committee rather, the Senate—

Q. Assuming these impressions to have been properly selected, can you not indicate something of the processes by which they were printed?

A. No, sir.

By Mr. Graves:

Q. You assume that they have been improperly selected?
A. I assume nothing. I assume that I know such a thing could be done in order to puzzle a person. I know very well if any one submits anything in order to make a test he is not going to bring the worst.

Now, these are selected by this Mr. Graves, and the witness says:

I know very well if any one submits anything in order to make a test, he is not going to bring the worst. These have probably been selected by experts that know more about it than I do and given to you.

By Mr. Graves:

Q. You say if the impressions are fairly selected from the general run of the work of the bureau you could tell the difference between the hand-printing and the steam-printing?
A. Not selected at all.

By Mr. Graves:

Q. Taken haphazard?
A. Give me a day's work of a printer that he did the day before, and then give me a day's work from the steam-press done the day before at the same rate of printing which they would do, say 4,000 for the steam-press and 800 for the hand-printer——

Mr. Graves interrupting.

Q. You decline to express any opinion as to the process by which these notes are printed, with your present information?
A. Yes, sir.
Mr. RALSTON—

Who was attorney for the plate-printers—

He says the test is not a fair one.

By Senator HARRIS:

Q. Do you mean you have no well-defined opinion as to whether that work was done by steam-press or the hand-press?
A. I have no opinion about it, because I do not know.
Q. I simply wanted to know if you have or have not an opinion. You say you have not?
A. Yes, sir.
Mr. GRAVES. It seems to me this is a case of expert opinion. Mr. Shaffer appears here as an expert.

I think I can imagine that gentleman at the head of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, bound to give honest and impartial testimony before this committee, acting as a supreme agency in this case to break down the plate-printers in their testimony, suddenly overjoyed as he thinks he has made his point and commenting in an insulting manner upon the witness as though witness had blundered and he, the chief of the bureau, had made his case.

Hear him:

[It seems to me this is a question of expert opinion. Mr. Shaffer appears here as an expert.

Mr. Shaffer had just said he could not tell, and his opinion, his appearance as a witness and as an expert is derided by this man whose name should not have appeared in the investigation or report in any other capacity than as a humble witness like the rest to give testimony to the truth, and that with some modesty, as I believe, from glancing over the report.

Senator HISCOCK. He says he can not tell. That ends it.
Mr. RALSTON. Suppose you give him 4,000 sheets to select from.

That is, suppose you comply with the condition which the expert said was necessary in order that his opinion or that of any other expert might be worth something.

Suppose you give him 4,000 sheets to select from.
Mr. JORDAN.—

Who is one of the hand plate-printers, one of their committee.

Mr. JORDAN. And 800 sheets of hand printing.

Just comply with the conditions by a fair experiment, and then see the result.

Mr. RALSTON. He says that will be a test.
The WITNESS. These impressions have undoubtedly been selected to look as near alike as possible. They do resemble one another. There is more color in No. 4. No. 6 is the lightest.

By Mr. GRAVES—

Who does not deny the intimation that these have been selected, when made in his presence, and on his responsibility alone, if they were selected, there was an imposition upon the committee and the Senate and the country. Mr. Graves was assuming his occupation of a counsel. I do not mean corruptly, but through prejudice, probably, for the steam-press owners, for I do not conceive in what other capacity he could have felt an interest of this kind. Certainly the Government is only interested to get at the truth, and this man does not need to appear here dominating the committee and the country and the whole performance in this way if he is simply here in a proper capacity, and if we are to rely upon anything he has done, especially upon the selection of the specimens the test of which is to be the criterion by which this legislative body is to be actuated and controlled.

Mr. BUTLER. Who is the man? What is his name?

Mr. BLAIR. He is the Superintendent of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing here, the agent and attorney of the steam-press printers to all appearances; and I place less emphasis upon the fact that he conducts this examination before the committee than I do upon the nature of his questions and the fact developed here apparently that he selects these various specimens which could not be relied upon at all, which these plate-printers say could be selected for the purpose of puzzling and imposing upon a witness, and the committee decline to make the test which the witness said would be a fair one and a very easy one to make; that is, to produce the work of a single printer the day before on a steam-press and the work of a single printer the day before upon a hand-press.

By Mr. GRAVES:

Q. Are Nos. 6 and 4 good or bad impressions?
A. A good impression is the exact state of the plate. I do not know whether or not they are the exact state of the plate.
Q. Are they well printed or poorly printed?
A. They do not show the exact state of the lathe-work, which they should show, nor do they show an exact or good impression in the head in the center. It is not as good as I have seen.

By Mr. GIBSON—

I do not know who Mr. Gibson is. He is not the Senator.

Mr. GORMAN. He was the counsel.

Mr. BLAIR. Oh, yes, of the steam machines; a very different individual, and no doubt a very respectable gentleman, which comparison is designed to be complimentary to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON], who is much more than an ordinarily respectable gentleman. I begin with the inferior specimens, and have an excellent one first, and ascend to the Senator from Louisiana.

By Mr. GIBSON:

Q. Then No. 4 and No. 6 you would not consider good impressions?
A. One of them is darker than the other, and I do not consider them good printing. They all appear so nearly alike in the printing that I have not the slightest hesitation in saying they have been picked for the occasion.

This is the expert whose test we are invited to rely upon, and this is what he says about the specimen submitted to him for the purpose of making his test, which is the committee's report.

I would like to say one thing: An impression pulled on a hand-roller press will sometimes stick to the blanket and give you a good impression, so far as the lines are concerned. The lines are there, but not the state of the plate. You can not say it is broken, or it is mashed, but it is thrown out as inferior printing because it is too light. All of the steam-press work I have seen has that characteristic about it. It is light, it is shallow, and consequently the heavy lines show gray or show light. You take it from a plate where the ink is in the lines and it will come out, and there is a dark appearance, no matter what color it is. It gives you different shades in green or anything else. You will find those impressions are better than the majority of work I have ever seen out in circulation, but most of it has a dead, shallow look—flat.

By Senator HISCOCK:

Q. It all has the general appearance of steam plate-printing?
A. It has the general appearance of steam plate-printing, such as I have seen in notes in circulation. I will state one thing, if I may be allowed: I took three notes in change at one time, and the man said to me, "You work over at the bureau?" I said, "Yes." Said he, "What makes the notes look so clean? These notes are very clean." Says I, "What do you mean by clean; wiped out, dead?" "Yes," said he, "they are so pale." Said I, "They have a steam process of printing over there, and that is the result." I afterwards brought those notes over to the bureau and showed them to a man by the name of Meeker, and Mr. Meeker showed them to Mr. O'Neill, and Mr. O'Neill, I believe, showed them to Mr. Graves. Those were notes in circulation that even a man across the counter noticed and asked me what was the matter with them.

There was some evidence of the imperfection of the work from this expert, it seems. Now, I find on page 323 the summing up of Mr. Ralston, who was counsel for the hand-press printers, and rather than trouble the Senate by consuming time to read what all the witnesses say, I will read a few paragraphs of his summing up with reference to the point that I am now dwelling upon. Mr. Ralston says:

To plead that steam-presses should be retained because some poor workmen do bad work is a confession of administrative weakness and incompetence in the men who make it. And this plea is absolutely all there is in the defense of the steam-press. Mr. Graves advances it and Messrs. Morgan, Swann, and Hamilton simply echo it.

Now, who are these gentlemen, Morgan, Swann, and Hamilton, I should like to inquire? The report itself only came here yesterday afternoon. Can any member of the committee inform me who are the gentlemen, Swann, Morgan, and Hamilton, who simply re-echo what Mr. Graves said? I pause for a reply. I assume that nobody knows.

In effect, they say, with one accord, keep the steam-press because we lack the decision of character necessary to fine or discharge men who do equally as bad work. Not one of these witnesses contends steam-work is equal to hand-work. Whatever other explanation they may give by reason of the real inferiority of steam-work, they are all able to detect it at a glance. Mr. Morgan, on seeing a note in Mr. Graves's hands, said without apparent hesitation that the note was, in his opinion, printed by steam. Mr. Swann, being handed thirteen one-dollar and two-dollar silver certificates, without error or difficulty distinguished the hand from the steam work. Mr. Hamilton said that steam-work had a characteristic appearance of its own, but declined to select notes. I shall refer to this matter in another connection.

Mr. Graves, in order to impress this committee with the relative excellence of steam-work as contrasted with hand, resorted to what, in view of all the evidence and the surrounding circumstances, I may call a trick unworthy of him. He showed certain sheets, eight in all, alleged to have been the production of the ordinary operations of either the steam or the hand press, to various witnesses produced by petitioners to obtain their opinions. It was not proven that the steam-press sheets were the ordinary product of that press, or that they were not produced by wiping the plate by hand, a method shown to have been resorted to from time to time coincident with the selection of various kinds of sheets for exhibition; nor were the sheets shown to Arthur Small, Misses Burke and Cruit, and Mrs. Barry, the petitioners' witnesses most skilled in noting the difference in the two methods. It is claimed that in a majority of instances petitioners' witnesses failed to properly classify the sheets shown them. But every witness protested—

"Every witness," note, Mr. President—

But every witness protested against rendering an opinion, knowing the ease with which the sheets could be manipulated for the purpose of deception.

Mr. Little said the test was not a fair one; that impressions should not be selected, but taken right along, and that he could be deceived by specimens submitted; that he simply gave his impression. Mr. Nott would not undertake to distinguish between good steam-press and bad hand-press work, and thought certain hand-press impressions might be blanket (defective) impressions.

That is what I did. I advanced that yesterday. All in ignorance of this whole subject and of the report of the committee, I suggested to the Senator from Tennessee that his demonstration was a folly. You see it seems I was correct, or else these experts, as the committee said, are all wrong and unreliable. I cite them for the purpose of proving that the Senator from Tennessee hardly understood himself when he made his speech to us.

Mr. Conway thought a hand-press plate was worn. Mr. Huck said it was not possible to form an intelligent judgment in a hasty examination. Mr. Russell refused to express an opinion as to which was steam and which hand work, but said that all were much superior to bills he got in his pay. Mr. Shaffer said impressions had undoubtedly been selected to look as much alike as possible, and he had no hesitation in saying they were picked; that impressions submitted were better than most seen in circulation. Mr. Osborne said that "under proper circumstances, with proper and legitimate data, one could come to conclusions in such a case, but to take a pile of work in a hurry it is impossible to say accurately."

The sheets were not selected for this committee from the current work of the bureau. The hand-press impressions presented were printed a year ago, although backs of the same denomination were on the hand-press until about last August.

The testimony of the hand-printers whose work was exhibited to the committee was as to one that he worked last on the backs exhibited from a defective plate and with bad ink, as to one other from a defective plate on a broken-down press.

The testimony of Miss Burke, in rebuttal, was that from time to time during the course of the investigations before the various committees of Congress, including this committee, the bundles of steam-work were gone through and sheets selected by the chief examiners of the bureau. The only explanation of this proceeding given by Mr. Graves was that sheets were sometimes selected for the engraving division. But the observation of employés of this Bureau is that such selections are made by the chief engraver himself, and not by examiners of work.

When the witnesses for the steam-press were examined, their protests were strikingly similar to those used by petitioners' witnesses. Mr. Morgan declined to designate by which process certain notes were printed because he knew nothing of the condition of the plates, and yet he thought the test submitted by Mr. Graves was a fair one.

Here I call attention to another fact which seems to have escaped either member of the committee, and that is that the experts on the side of the steam-press found the same difficulty. They could not tell which was which. An expert testified that the only fair test would be to compare the work of a preceding day or of the same day by the hand and the steam press. I would inquire of either member of the committee if that test was made or if they called for any such test as that; in other words, if they tried to get a fair test. Such experts as they put to the test said on both sides that that was indispensable in order to make a test to be put before the country as the basis of Senatorial or any other action.

The committee inform us that they made a very thorough examination and investigation, and report these men out of court, out of their occupations, out of their means of subsistence, out of their homes, their families, out of education, and out of the necessaries and comforts and enjoyments of life. I ask them if in relying upon this test they undertook to get what the experts all said was necessary in order that you should have a fair one? I ask the Senator from Tennessee to state "in his own way," as he said yesterday, his reply to this question, and if there is no reply to the question I assert that this is an unreliable report.

When the witnesses for the steam-press were examined, their protests were strikingly similar to those used by petitioners' witnesses. Mr. Morgan declined to designate by which process certain notes were printed because he knew nothing of the condition of the plates, and yet he thought the test submitted by Mr. Graves was a fair one!

He was a witness for Mr. Graves. He could not conceive, no matter what Mr. Graves did—right, wrong, or indifferent—but that it was necessarily right. Mr. Graves probably had his official head in his pocket, and it was necessarily right. Though the test, as he has said, could not be a fair one, he thought it must be a fair one because Mr. Graves did it.

Mr. Swann said that certain notes exhibited to him were either hand-blanket (defective) impressions or else steam-press work.

Let us see what that signifies. Here is an expert of the steam pressmen, Mr. Swann, who said that certain notes exhibited to him were either hand-blanket, that is, hand defective impressions, bad machine work, or they were steam impressions; that is to say, that the bad hand-work is easily mistaken for the steam impressions and the steam impressions conform to the bad hand-press work.

That is what we have been saying all along. Here is the witness of the Government who says the same thing. I heard no allusion to this sort of testimony in the remarks of either member of the committee. I wish I had time to examine such testimony as Mr. Swann's, who, when certain notes were exhibited, like many other of the petitioners' witnesses, classed together defective hand-work and average steam-work.

"Think of that, Master Brook." All going together in the basket for old clothes and dumped into the Thames "hissing hot."

"Think of that, Master Brook."

Like many of petitioners' witnesses, he classed together defective hand-work and average steam-work. But, despite this remark by him, he correctly classified thirteen notes shown him, and did this without hesitation. The fact that he did this so readily is convincing evidence that the notes submitted him were average steam and hand impressions, at the same time that it establishes that the notes selected by Mr. Graves were presented not with a view of arriving at the truth, but simply to confuse and deceive.

I can not dwell too strongly on the fact I have indicated, that witnesses on both sides class together defective hand-work (blanket impressions) and the ordinary product of the steam-press. It tells the whole story as to which process secures the better result.

I am now reading from the remarks of counsel, it is true, but nearly every sentence is a citation apparently from what witnesses before the committee said, witnesses upon both sides, and experts. Here it appears by the silence of the gentlemen who make this report, one upon either side of this Chamber, that the conditions specified by these experts as indispensably necessary in order that experiments might be made which we could rely upon were never made. It appears that the only conditions required were that they should take a single day's work of the hand-press and compare that and a single day's work of the steam-press together; and without making a fair test they come in here and report as to which did the superior work. Here this matter has been lingering for more than a year in the Committee on Finance and that test has not been made, or if it has been made, why this silence when I have called upon members of the committee to show either that they did it or that it was not done?

Mr. President, I know how in the exceeding haste of the terrible pressure that is upon Senators all through a session of Congress, and how, as this committee has been situated during the only time they could give to the consideration of this case, it may have been an almost utter impossibility for them to make an investigation into this matter requiring this expert testimony and an examination into the very highest quality of a very intricate and accomplished art. I see how that is. These Senators are not to blame if the aspect in which my remarks seem to place them is the true one. They could not make this investigation fully and thoroughly, and they have not made the investigation fully and thoroughly, and this report is not worth a rush. It ought not to stand. It is a shame if we act upon it.

In came the bill reported and indefinitely postponed forthwith when it was known to this committee that there were great interests anxious to be heard upon it, and no one was present when that report was made, certainly no one who was interested to defend these plate-printers was notified either that it was coming or when it was received; and but for the afterthought of others who heard of this action it never would have been upon the Calendar to-day, and that upon a motion to reconsider made by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. President, I appeal to the Senate to let that document go. It is of no consequence here; and there are rights concerned that are not to be trifled away by any hasty, any unfair, any improper action of the Senate of the United States.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, Senators here presume to attack the report of the Subcommittee on Finance who were not present at the examination that was undertaken and who have not even read the report, and one Senator has denounced it as a rotten report. I wish to say in behalf of the subcommittee who had this subject under their charge that, while I was not a member of the subcommittee, I was present a great many days when the examination was going on, and if there was ever a subject honestly, fairly, and patiently investigated it is the subject we have now under consideration. The parties appeared on both sides, such as were summoned by the committee, and the plate-printers also, not only by themselves but by their attorney. I thought myself that the plate-printers seemed to me amply competent to conduct the examination of the witnesses who testified upon the other side.

Allow me to say that I heard with some pain the Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing stigmatized as an unworthy officer. I believe there has been no officer of the Treasury Department who has stood higher. I say this when I do not agree with the style of politics of that gentleman, which are mugwump politics, as I understand; but I do say that there has been no officer of the Treasury Department who has stood any higher in his reputation for ability and for integrity. So much for the committee.

When the Government undertook to do its own work I was in favor of it on the ground that we could do it cheaper and do it better. We have the testimony of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Treasurer, the Comptroller of the Currency, and the Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing that it is generally satisfactory. There is no complaint from any of those officers. Who are we to rely upon? Are we to rely upon those officers who are placed daily in confidential relations to this work, or are we to take the opinion of Senators who have much less acquaintance with the work of this character?

If the Government is to continue this work I think it should be done so that it could be in equal and fair competition with the similar work throughout the country. The very best engravers and plate-workers in the country have in use the steam machines. Shall not the Government of the United States have the same privilege?

The Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] alludes to the fact that this is a labor-saving machine, and asks if two-thirds of the work of the country were to be at once assumed by labor-saving machines where would the workmen who are now employed go? There is no proposition here to dispense with the labor of a single man. One hundred and ninety-seven employés in plate-printing were employed when the work was placed in the charge of Mr. Graves, and the same number is continued to-day, and it is not proposed to discharge a single man.

But the idea that labor-saving machines reduce the work of the world is a grave mistake. They cheapen products, but they increase the amount of labor-wages in the country. Did the cotton-gin diminish the labor of the South in relation to the production of cotton or the number of laborers employed? By no means. They have increased by more than ten or twenty fold. I know that when railroads were first started in the country some persons were of the opinion that horses would go out of fashion and that oats would be worth nothing; but we have increased railroads to a large extent and yet horses are still used and are of equal value to what they were formerly, and there are many more of them; and oats bear as high a price. So all the talk about the diminution of labor in consequence of labor-saving machines I think is utterly baseless.

I want to just point out the difference between the House provision and the proposition of the Senate. The House proposes that no part of this appropriation shall be used for the repair or reconstruction of any plate-printing press. If a single article about a plate-printing press gets out of order, a screw, nut, or bolt, that would not cost more than a dime to replace or to repair it, it is to be abandoned and thrown out of use. I think that that was entirely wrong and fully justified the Committee on Appropriations in making a change.

There is no question that if we were to abandon the steam printing-press at the present time we would require a larger building to accommodate the men. It would take not less than eighty men, I understand, to supply the place to work in in order to conduct the business that is now upon the Government of the United States in printing all of our revenue stamps, postage stamps, silver certificates, national-bank notes, and United States notes.

The question is whether we shall continue this order of business as it has been for the last year or two, or whether we shall inaugurate a new system and drive out our steam-presses in order to make room for sixty or eighty men to be employed here. I do not think that this is a question in which the United States ought to take any part. If we can not conduct the business here as it is conducted by business men throughout the country on business principles, let us abandon the printing-press and do the work by contract, as was done years ago.

I hope, therefore, that the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations will be agreed to. It seems to me that it is a very moderate one, and one that should not have provoked this long amount of discussion. The Committee on Appropriations propose that the patentees of the steam-presses shall accept the rate per thousand herein provided, which is a reduction from $1 to 50 cents. I think that the royalty of a dollar a thousand sheets was much too large. Unless the patentees shall accept this proposition—

> The said presses shall not be used by the Government after the close of the present fiscal year: Provided, That there shall not be an increase of the number of steam plate-printing machines of the character now employed in the Engraving and Printing Bureau.

It is only proposed not to discharge any men and not to force the Government into the employment of sixty or eighty men more, for which we would have to provide a new building and make an additional appropriation of not less than $100,000 for the additional expense.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I desire to make only one remark. There is not a fair-minded man who occupies a seat upon this floor who will carefully examine the testimony as taken by the committee and arrive at a conclusion different from that reported by the committee. I do not at this late hour propose to go into the details, and least of all I do not propose to garble special paragraphs of the testimony to make comments upon them.

As to the tirade and criticism upon the Finance Committee, I do not propose to notice that further than to say that I am glad to believe, as I do believe, that no opinion or declaration of the Senator from New Hampshire here can harm or hurt the Finance Committee or anybody else.

Mr. BLAIR. I would suggest that that is probably true. In the light of the report they have made I doubt whether they could be injured. The public can judge by that report.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, this matter of plate-printing has excited unusual debate in this Chamber, not on the merits of the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, but Senators have been trying the question which was referred to the Committee on Finance and reported back by that committee so as to be pending in the form of a separate bill on the Calendar. I have listened here to extracts from day to day for two or three days from the report of the Committee on Finance.

The Senator from New Hampshire stated that he regretted that this report and testimony had been made at such a late day; that he had not had an opportunity to examine it, and he then proceeded straightway to condemn it without knowledge, as stated by himself.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator ought not to quite say that. This report, as he knows, came here yesterday. I called attention to a particular question which both Senators who made the report dwelt upon as the essential or one of the essential facts. I found the testimony upon both sides on that question, and I asked them to say whether it was true that they themselves declined to have a fair test made.

Mr. ALLISON. It so happens, although I am a member of the Committee on Finance, that I took no part in this investigation and was not even present in the committee when the report was agreed upon which was presented to the Senate. Therefore, like the Senator from New Hampshire, I have not had time to investigate in detail this testimony.

I submit to the Senate whether it is a wise thing for us on an appropriation bill to so adjust this affair in advance as to compel the Bureau of Engraving and Printing to cease its operations or else compel the Senate to increase largely the appropriation made for the maintenance of that bureau for the next year. The amendments proposed by the Committee on Appropriations are amendments that were proposed by the committee in advance of this report. If the Senator from New Hampshire believes that injustice has been done by the Committee on Finance, why is it that he does not call up this independent legislation upon the subject and have it considered by the Senate? I will join him in voting at any proper time to take up that measure and consider it.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator asks me why I did not call up that measure.

Mr. ALLISON. No, I do not ask that question in the sense of desiring an answer.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator will get one at the proper time.

Mr. ALLISON. I said that was the proper measure on which to consider the question.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator asked why I did not call it up? I will take my opportunity, however, to reply.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly I do not wish to be discourteous to the Senator. I yield to the Senator to say why he does not do it. I did not mean to ask him why he did not. I meant to say that that in my judgment was the true method of dealing with this question. I will hear the Senator.

Mr. BLAIR. After more than a year, for the purpose of investigation, and more than one public and private admonition that this was an important matter, that an important interest desired to have it investigated, the Finance Committee only two or three days ago came in, having taken this amount of testimony, with an adverse report upon the bill which came with the sanction of the other House, and immediately moved, as I am informed, the indefinite postponement of the whole subject.

Only yesterday, which must be one week after that report was made and that indefinite postponement took place, the testimony first appears and is available to the Senate. I understand the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] moved to reconsider the indefinite postponement, and the bill is upon the Calendar. At this late day in the session, with all the business pressing and the Senator's own appropriation bills coming up in advance and provoking and obliging this discussion, he asks me why I do not appeal to the Calendar and make my remarks upon a bill which I do not know how to reach.

Mr. ALLISON. The bill which the Senator says has been in consideration for over a year——

Mr. BLAIR. The memorial; the subject-matter.

Mr. ALLISON. That bill was referred to the Committee on Finance on the 29th day of August, as shown by the report, which is certainly not over a year. I notice by looking at the testimony, because I have not had time to examine it, that the Committee on Finance commenced the taking of testimony on the 12th day of September through its subcommittee.

Mr. BLAIR. If the Senator will allow me right here I will state that in the issue of the RECORD of January 18, 1888, it appears that I introduced a memorial of the Knights of Labor which sets out this whole matter, that I urged attention to it and presented as much as I could the nature of the question, and pressed for action immediately. The other House meanwhile took up the same subject, and acting with more alertness on this all-important matter sent a bill to the Senate which the Finance Committee was obliged to consider.

Mr. ALLISON. The bill was sent to the Senate on the 29th day of August last. There are a great many bills, of course, which are still pending that were presented to this body before that time.

Mr. President, I only desired to call attention to the fact that it is proposed in this appropriation bill by legislation to regulate matters certainly of grave import and of grave importance in this method. The Committee on Appropriations did not believe that that was the true method of dealing with this question. They believed that it was wise for the Committee on Appropriations to provide in this bill for the support of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing for the next fiscal year as now organized.

If the Secretary of the Treasury desires to remove these steam-presses he can do it to-morrow. Any Secretary of the Treasury who may come in after the 4th of March, when it is well understood we are to have a new administration, if he desires to do so, can remove these presses and substitute hand-presses for them. I mention this for the purpose of showing that this is a question of administration and not a question of legislation.

Now, what do we find? We find that in 1878 there were introduced into the Bureau of Engraving and Printing a few steam-presses; that the number has been increased from time to time until there are now in all eighteen of these presses there. The Committee on Appropriations, seeing this dispute and this controversy existing between the hand-plate printers and the steam-presses, provided in this bill that no more steam-presses should be purchased. In other words, we have said that this matter shall for the present stand in abeyance until there can be a thorough and perfect investigation of the question and such legislation upon it as is right and proper. So the status quo, as respects these presses, must remain under the legislation proposed by the Committee on Appropriations in this bill.

What else do we provide? We find that under contracts made by the Secretary of the Treasury the owners of these steam-presses are entitled to receive a royalty at the rate of $1 for each 1,000 sheets, or one-tenth of a cent for each sheet. That is the contract between the Government and the owners of the patent. The Government itself owns all these presses. The Government itself has built and owns each of these presses to-day, but it leases or procures the right from the patentees to use the presses, and it has a contract to pay them $1 per thousand sheets for the use. That is the price that is paid by every private user in the United States.

These presses are used wherever engraving and printing is done to a greater or less degree. Of course in the nature of things their use must be limited, but wherever they are used the uniform royalty for the use of the presses is $1 per thousand sheets. But the committee believed that the Government itself, being a large user of these presses, should have the use of them at a less rate than the rate fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury in his contract with these people. Therefore we have provided that only 50 cents per thousand sheets shall be paid instead of $1 per thousand sheets, which is the present contract price.

The provision in the bill as it came to us from the other House is that only 1 cent per thousand sheets shall be paid. It is a manifest injustice that that sum only should be paid if these presses are used at all. The right to these presses is owned, I understand, by the heirs of the inventor of the press, who was himself a plate-printer. Therefore we set ourselves to regulate the price that should be paid out of this appropriation for the use of these presses, and we deem a fair price to be 50 cents per thousand sheets.

The bill as it came to us from the House provided, as the Senator from Vermont has said, that no repair should be made to any one of these presses. It is perfectly well known to those who are familiar with this work that the presses get out of repair, perhaps daily or weekly, so that if this provision should remain in the bill as sent to us from the House the probability is that within sixty days, by the prohibition of the use of any of this money for the repairs of the presses, they would from necessity be brought into disuse. We thought that that was unfair and therefore struck it out; but we have provided that unless the owners of this patent shall take the royalty which we propose to pay here, then the presses shall be taken out.

Mr. President, I only speak for myself when I say that I have not sufficiently examined this question to be able to express an opinion whether the steam-presses do execute the work assigned to them in the highest style of the art for the particular class of work they do. I am not prepared to state that.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator concede that the Government currency should be printed in the highest style of the art?

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly I do concede that. That is the very question that is found in this volume of 400 or 500 pages. The Senator from Tennessee and the Senator from New York, who have given great attention and examination to this subject, and who have listened to the experts, came to the conclusion that the work is well done upon these presses. Others say that it is not well done. The Senator from New Hampshire says it is not well done.

I submit that on an appropriation bill in a contested case of this character, where five or six successive Secretaries of the Treasury, as many Superintendents of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and Comptrollers of the Currency, all concur in one opinion, it is not a wise thing for us in this indirect way to say that we will destroy these presses and use only one particular kind of a press, and that in order to reach that result we will take $100,000 annually out of the pockets of the tax-payers, and that in addition to that we will expend from $100,000 to $200,000 more in the erection of a building and the construction of machinery for that purpose. All I mean to say is, that if we go into that expenditure and into the condemnation of the existing state of things in the Treasury Department, we should do so with our eyes open and having knowledge.

I for one am willing to spend $100,000 or $200,000, if need be, to execute our currency and securities which must be issued from time to time in the highest style of the art of engraving. I will not allow the Senator from New Hampshire to go an inch in advance of me in that respect. But when the men whose duty it is to execute these things, when the men whose business it is to administer the Government, come to us and say that this work is now well done, as one of the seventy-six Senators upon this floor I shall hesitate long before on an appropriation bill I will utterly and absolutely condemn the men who have been engaged in this business for the last ten or eleven years, covering Republican and Democratic administrations alike.

It is because the Senator from New Hampshire and other Senators insist upon trying an independent case upon the Calendar on an appropriation bill that I object to this proceeding. If it shall turn out that the Senator from New Hampshire is right (and I do not know but that it will, after this testimony is examined and when the bill comes up for consideration) I may vote with him, but in the mean time I will not so cripple and hamper the administration of the Government as to find ourselves here in June or July, without either branch of Congress being in session, unable to carry on the necessary operations of printing greenbacks, silver certificates, and the necessary currency to supply the people with money for the intervening months.

Hence it is that I say if we are to condemn these presses let us do it in a manly way, and when we do it let us come up and make the necessary appropriations in our appropriation bills whereby the work of the Government can be carried on under the methods which we prescribe by legislation condemning the administration for what it has done for the last eleven years.

That is what I object to on this appropriation bill; and so we have amended the House provisions in order that this question may go on as it now goes on until there is a definite and fixed policy as respects what shall be done with the steam-presses which are now the property of the Government, paid for by its money, and which are saving to it certainly from $75,000 to $100,000 per annum.

When the Senator from New Hampshire and other Senators who disagree with the Finance Committee's report shall come up and test this question independently and fairly, I shall be willing to act upon the judgment of the two Houses of Congress as respects what shall be done afterwards in the way of appropriation.

That is all there is in this question. I regret exceedingly that we have been compelled to delay this long appropriation bill on account of the legislation which is proposed by the House of Representatives, and which we believe ought not in this form to be put upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, it would be well not to lose sight of the essence of this case in listening to the adroit and able presentation of it by the honorable Senator who is chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. But I do not rise lacking sensibility to the great force, the elephantine tread of that committee in the Senate. I know very well that there are reasons why that committee can accomplish anything almost that it reports upon favorably in the Senate.

However, the chairman of the committee will pardon me if I call attention to some of the specious illusions, as I deem them, of his very adroit address to us. He speaks as though here was an effort to force a conclusion without an examination; as though the parties who come here complaining that their life-giving avocation is being destroyed were too hasty and were asking judgment without having given time for examination.

The Senator does not need to be reminded in a general way that this has been a subject of controversy for many years. He does not need to be reminded that Government officers have rejected these presses on former occasions, as I am assured—Secretaries of the Treasury and other high officials; and the uncontradicted testimony all along down to the present moment is that as the work done by these steam printing-presses has increased the quality of the currency has deteriorated, until it has become execrable.

A year ago and more these parties brought their case before the Senate and we got no report from the appropriate committee which is available until yesterday afternoon at ten minutes past 1 o'clock, when this testimony was first distributed, and within a very few moments the honorable Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] was explaining his position and citing his report. What opportunity had anybody else to know how faithful, how thorough, how reliable was the investigation of the Finance Committee after they had a year to do it in?

The House, on the other hand, has paid attention to this subject, has investigated it thoroughly, took it up the last session, and as early as last August sent to the Senate a bill regulating this matter, I think removing the steam-presses entirely from the Government work. That bill went to the Finance Committee. Repeatedly their attention was urged to this matter last fall, repeatedly their attention has been called to it this winter, yet not a word has been heard until this testimony was filed here yesterday, or at least no grounds of action were given.

Now, what are these people to do? It being admitted that the quality of the currency is deteriorating and that the people are being robbed by counterfeits in this most delicate and important matter connected with the Government administration, the purity, the verity of the currency, the evil great and increasing year after year, and these particular people coming and complaining that their means of getting a livelihood is taken away, I exhibit, it may be, some heat in advocating immediate action; for I understand that the Senator is right when he says the adoption of this provision is practically the destruction of the steam-press.

We have five, ten, fifteen, or twenty presses, I do not know how many. We have been induced to purchase them and we pay a royalty upon our own purchase and what many say was our own invention originally. The adroit people—the intelligent people in the city of New York—are not all dead yet. They own the steam printing-press, powerful men directly connected with the printing of the national-bank currency, they who have the currency of the country, interested in its circulation, a tremendous moral influence that will be glad to make this, as President Garfield once said of the currency, "cheap and nasty" for their gain.

Mr. President, we have waited long enough. We have waited on the Finance Committee, we have waited on these interested parties all these years, and suffered from it. We have sought action in all legitimate and regular ways. The House of Representatives has acted and sent a bill destroying the steam printing-press so far as its employment by the Government is concerned. That bill was sent to us six months ago, and the report of the committee of the House is before us, the result of a thorough investigation, as it would seem.

I appear to be placed under the ban, even under the contempt it would seem, of the honorable Senator from Tennessee, who thinks my word will not hurt the committee, to which I suggest that no man's word could hurt a committee whose reputation depends upon so bad a report as this. I am placed somewhat under and subject to criticism because I want definite action at last, and because the country needs definite action at last, because the losses in the way of increasing counterfeits are probably five hundred times the increased expense to the Government in having this currency executed with due and proper skill by the hand-press, as it ought to be done.

Senators tell us to wait and discuss this other bill. They complain that the House of Representatives sent over this provision on an appropriation bill, which is practically the destruction of the steam-press. It was provided for in a regular bill that they sent us on the 28th day of last August. We neglecting and refusing to touch the bill that they had sent to us on this vital matter, they put the same provision into an appropriation bill. The Senator from Iowa does not need to be told how often it is that the supreme legislation of the country goes out on appropriation bills, and the Committee on Appropriations marches up in solid phalanx and asks us to choke down our rising disposition to find out something of what they are doing because the Committee on Appropriations says it.

Now, the Committee on Appropriations says it does not know what it is about and can not afford, after all these years, to run the risk of turning out $50,000 or $75,000 worth of these steam printing-presses, which are our own property, while we are under no contract with anybody on the face of the earth, simply paying these men, who took our invention and sold it back to us and are now growing rich upon the royalty, of which we never ought to have paid them a cent.

The Senator says further that we must not do this because we shall have to make a new house to set the men to work in. I have had a note sent me, and I will read it, and others have come to the same effect. This came while the Senator was speaking, and I offer it as a reply because I know it comes from a man who would not tell a falsehood if he knew it, and he can not be mistaken; and there is nothing in the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont or of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, as it seems to me, in regard to the new building, and little as to the increased expense.

> If presses are put out, it will require only about forty-seven more men, nineteen men now being on steam-presses. Two hundred and forty-five plate-printers were formerly employed at the bureau, no more than would be needed if presses were put out; so no new room would be needed and no trouble on that score would ensue.
> J. H. RALSTON, Attorney Knights of Labor.

This is signed J. H. Ralston, attorney Knights of Labor. He is the man who conducted, in behalf of the plate-printers, this examination or investigation before the Finance Committee of the Senate.

Mr. President, this is not a thing that we are ignorant of, or, if ignorant, we ought not to be; and we ought to have definite action at this session, and the rejection of this Senate amendment will give us definite action at this session, and then if we find on further investigation—for I submit there has been enough to justify us in suspending the use of the steam printing-presses entirely—if on the further investigation which the Senator suggests, if upon that further full investigation which the friends of the steam-press would be obliged to institute in order to get back again into their coffers the cash which comes from close proximity to the Treasury of the United States. I say if, after an investigation upon which they must take the affirmative and must make out their case, it turns out that the Government ought to use the steam printing-presses, I shall have nothing to say. But it does seem to me that we have gone far enough to change the presumption and to induce us to fall back upon the system of doing this Government work, which is admitted by everybody to be the best system, under which the currency of the land is executed in the highest style of the art. We are not justified in robbing the people of this entire country longer by being particeps criminis in the crime of counterfeiting the currency of the United States.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. President, I do not rise to thrash over old straw, but after the charges which have been made, especially by the Senator from New Hampshire, against this report, it is proper I think at least that I should say that the reputation of a committee and of Senators upon this floor for honesty, fair dealing, and thorough investigation does not depend upon the overzealous remarks which he may be pleased to make; and I, sir, would as soon stand. I say to him very frankly, upon my reputation, such as it may be, with idle charges of that kind made against it as I would if they were not made at all. They do not weigh and they are not counted. They are not respectful or respectable.

I know for myself that the work which was done by the Finance Committee in investigating this matter was done conscientiously, and it was done thoroughly.

Complaint has been made here that the report came in late. We were compelled to delay it because those who were forwarding the bill that was submitted to us were begging for more time, and we gave to the consideration of this question all the time that we possibly could. And I will add that when it comes down to the investigation and the proof of facts this report is exhaustive. It exhausts the subject. As to the examination of witnesses who were merely to express an opinion unsupported by facts, like the opinion quoted here of a Treasury expert, I may say that that opinion is in the form of a letter in reply to another person who had written to him upon the subject. We limited the examination, but the banks are all over the country and easy of access, yet they have failed to furnish any evidence whatever against steam plate-printing.

As to expressions of opinion about the liability of this money to be counterfeited, when the records were brought to the committee from the secret service division it was demonstrated so far as actual counterfeiting was concerned that there had been less of it under this form of printing than under any other. That subject was investigated, and the evidence of those who take money, of those who pass it, the evidence of the men who are charged with issuing it was all against the idea. Still charges of that kind are indulged in here again.

There has been no attempt on the part of this committee to postpone action on the House bill. I am ready for one to have it taken up at any time when it suits the will and pleasure of the Senate and to discuss it then, and I had hoped that it might be discussed then.

It is proper that we should discuss this question of a crusade against labor-saving machinery in this country, for I announce again that is all there is of it. It is said it will throw people out of employment, and yet the men who say that, in the next breath say that the effect of labor-saving machinery everywhere and in all ages and at all times has been to increase wages and increase employment. It is the renewal of the old war of 1812 and 1813 and 1814 against labor-saving machinery, when looms were torn down and destroyed, and I suppose there is to be a bonfire in the streets of Washington when these presses are to be taken out of the building, the property of the Government, labor-saving machinery, because their expulsion is demanded, and demanded by whom?

Two hundred! And the evidence is uncontradicted that $300,000 is annually saved. Pension them—$1,500 a year. You could afford to do it. Two hundred only have made this demand that their rights are entitled to be respected. I do not challenge that, but I do not want to have the issue mistaken. I repeat, disguise it as you may attempt to do, resort to every artifice or every impression that you choose in reference to it, it is not a question of capital against labor. You might as well say that the looms that weave laces, the looms that are used to weave our fabrics of cotton and wool and linen should be destroyed, that there is a war between labor and capital involved in their use.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That was the old saying.

Mr. HISCOCK. Oh, certainly it was the old saying. That was the old cry. It is reiterated here in this Hall—capital against labor.

These presses are owned by the Government, and if there is any question of capital against labor involved here it is the capital of a man's brain, the fertile genius that invented these machines patented by the Government; it is the capital of the mind, which is as well entitled to protection as that of muscle.

There is no question of capital, of dollars and cents, against labor involved in this question. It is a war upon the inventive genius of man; it is a blow at the inventors of the country. Since these machines have been in use they have been improved, as the old looms were improved that were burned in 1812, and 1813, and 1814, and along there. What genius may do in reference to it yet no man can foretell. But something has been accomplished, and yet the men who propose to strike down these machines stand here and in the next breath admit that labor-saving machinery has advanced the wages of the people all over the country, as it has because it has cheapened the products for the people, those things which they use and which they consume; has increased the market and turns out a hundred times more from the machine than could be by hand, and a small profit upon that hundredfold fruit which it makes more than compensates the producer, although he is not paid as much for the fabric or as much for the product.

You might as well burn the sewing-machines and destroy them, and you might as well go into any of our manufacturing establishments where any invention has been made and draw the line there and say, Oh, no, stop where you are; no more invention.

If that is to be the policy, if this Government is to initiate it, do not let us have any mistake or misunderstanding of what is intended, but put it squarely on the ground that it is a war on labor-saving machinery; put it upon the distinct ground that it is a war against invention, and close your Patent Office.

I am sorry, Mr. President, to have taken so much time in the discussion of this question, but yet after all that has been said, and said in ill time, in my judgment, and in an ill spirit attacking this report, I have felt that to some extent at least I should be pardoned for entering anew into the discussion of the question upon the merits.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President——

Mr. BLAIR. If the Senator will permit me a moment, this matter is so much worse than I thought it was that I should like to say a word.

Mr. CALL. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BLAIR. It seems it is a move in the direction of chaos and old night if the suggestion should be adopted for the rejection of this amendment. There is every indication that it will not be a great while before we are back to the primitive condition of the race. There is more danger than I anticipated. I did not think it was a war against improvements and civilization.

Mr. HISCOCK. There is no one better prepared than the Senator from New Hampshire to prophesy on that subject.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator will bear in mind, while I am not meeting him with any argument to show that the primitive condition of the race is better than the present, or even that I believe it, I want to say to him that I do not think the subject is in issue here. I do not think it is a question between labor-saving machinery and previous methods at all. I think it is a question as to the quality of the work that is to be done in a case where the highest quality is indispensable to the interests of the American people. That is the way I understand it, and I do not think the Senator can get out of it by appealing to the Patent Office and the high state of civilization into which both he and myself have been developed.

While upon that subject the Senator made a personal allusion to me which I think myself was quite deserved; and while I do not complain that either he or the Senator from Tennessee was not justified in the expression of their sentiments of semi-contempt, I would only say that the feeling perhaps is not quite as virulent on my part or on theirs, but that it is at the same time fully reciprocated. So I think we are all right and on good terms as ever so far as that is concerned.

Now, I wish to close what I have to say on this matter by reading a little as a reply to the report of this committee, which I accidentally dropped upon the floor and which the page will please pick up for me, for I realize myself that I should treat the report of a committee of the Senate with an appropriate degree of decorum; and I wish to assure the honorable Senator from Vermont and the Finance Committee that if in what I suggested in the heat of debate I may have expressed occasionally sentiments that were not in the highest state of the art of ornamentation complimentary, I withdraw everything I said that should be withdrawn, but I wish to concentrate all the while, however, a great deal more than I did say upon the imbecile character of the report. [Laughter.] I attack no man's motives.

Now, Mr. President, I want to read an all-searching and comprehensive and decisive reply to this whole steam printing-press case.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 12, 1889.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 11th instant, asking reply to the following questions, namely:

First. Are the Government securities, in your judgment, printed in the highest style of the art; and is it necessary that they should be?

Answer. No, they are not; and I deem it necessary that they should be.

Second. Do the steam-presses print as good impressions as the hand-presses?

Answer. No, they do not.

Third. Do the present issues of silver certificates compare favorably with former issues in wear and execution?

Answer. No, they do not by any means.

Fourth. Are the present issues more easily counterfeited than former issues?

Answer. Yes, in my opinion they are. The former issues were printed in more colors, and in a higher style of art, which could not be so readily photographed; whereas the present issues have less colors and can be easily photographed.

Fifth. Do you hear of any complaint from the public generally, regarding the silver certificates?

Answer. Yes, a great many complaints from the public generally, and the bankers in particular.

Sixth. Since the issue of silver certificates have many counterfeits appeared? If any, how were the counterfeits produced?

Answer. The following counterfeit silver certificates have made their appearance:

One dollar, letter D series 1886; photogravure.
Five dollars, letter D series 1886; photogravure.
Five dollars, letter A series 1886; engraved.
Ten dollars, letter D series 1880; photograph.
Ten dollars, letter, none, series 1880; lithograph-stone plate.
Ten dollars, letter, none, series 1880; roughly chiseled on marble plate.
Twenty dollars, letter B series 1880; photographed and colored by hand.
Twenty dollars, letter C series 1880; engraved.

Respectfully, yours,

JOHN S. BELL, Chief.

Hon. JOSEPH R. HAWLEY,
United States Senate.

Mr. HISCOCK. I wish the Senator from New Hampshire would state which one of those issues was printed by the steam-press.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not know. I have not had time to read the Senator's report yet.

Mr. HISCOCK. That has been the trouble with the Senator all through the discussion.

Mr. BLAIR. Not at all. I understand that some of these counterfeits were issued before the steam-press was much used, and yet the steam-press was rejected and turned out along about 1877, and the earliest of these was in 1880. I think the Senator will find on investigation that the proposition which he laid down here yesterday with so much triumph that the steam printing-press was not used there until about 1886 is not correct, because the fact is that it has been in and out and in and out several times, dating as far back as 1877. That is all I have to say.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I desire to say a word.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Florida will yield to me, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CALL. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee moves that the Senate do now proceed to the consideration of executive business. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "noes" have it.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLACKBURN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], who is necessarily absent. Otherwise I should vote "yea."

Mr. BROWN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. COLQUITT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

Mr. EUSTIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK].

Mr. EVARTS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. Therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. FRYE (when Mr. HALE'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. HALE] is detained at his home by illness, and is paired with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK].

Mr. HOAR (when his name was called). The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] asked me a little while ago how I stood on this question which has just been debated, and I told him, and he asked me if I would pair with him upon the question, and I promised to do so. I do not conceive that that applies to this vote; but if any gentleman on that side of the Chamber thinks the two questions are so connected that I should treat it as a pair, I will do so. Otherwise I shall vote.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not think the two questions are in any way connected, but it seems thus far to be a pretty strict party vote, if not absolutely so.

Mr. HOAR. I will withhold my vote, though I do not consider myself bound to do so, and will vote if I find that my vote is necessary to make a quorum.

Mr. HARRIS. There is no connection between the two questions.

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN], whom I do not see in his seat.

Mr. PAYNE (when his name was called). I am paired for the afternoon with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. STOCKBRIDGE]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SABIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA].

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], or I should vote "yea." I wish also to announce the pair between my colleague [Mr. COCKRELL] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS]. If the Senator from Alabama were here, he would vote "yea."

Mr. BUTLER. I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HOAR. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Berry,	George,	Harris,	Saulsbury,
Blodgett,	Gibson,	Hearst,	Turpie,
Call,	Gorman,	Jones of Arkansas,	Walthall,
Coke,	Gray,	Pugh,	Wilson of Md.
Daniel,	Hampton,	Reagan,

NAYS—20.

Allison,	Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Sherman,
Blair,	Frye,	Mitchell,	Spooner,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Morrill,	Stewart,
Cullom,	Hiscock,	Platt,	Teller,
Davis,	Hoar,	Sawyer,	Wilson of Iowa.

ABSENT—37.

Aldrich,	Bowen,	Chace,	Dolph,
Bate,	Brown,	Cockrell,	Eustis,
Beck,	Butler,	Colquitt,	Evarts,
Blackburn,	Cameron,	Dawes,	Farwell,

Faulkner,	Morgan,	Quay,	Vance,
Hale,	Paddock,	Ransom,	Vest,
Jones of Nevada,	Palmer,	Riddleberger,	Voorhees.
Kenna,	Pasco,	Sabin,
McPherson,	Payne,	Stanford,
Manderson,	Plumb,	Stockbridge,

So the Senate refused to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations. If there be no objection the two amendments in lines 12, 13, and 14 will be treated as one question. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. BROWN. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 19, line 12, after the word "exceeding," the Committee on Appropriations reported to strike out "1 cent" and insert "50 cents," and in line 14, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seventy-six" and insert "ninety;" so as to read:

For wages of plate-printers, at piece-rates to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, not to exceed the rates usually paid for such work, including the wages of printers' assistants, at $1.25 a day each when employed, and for wages of printers' assistants at steam-presses, at $1.50 a day each when employed, and for royalty at not exceeding 50 cents per thousand impressions for use of steam plate-printing machines, $390,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I propose to make only one further observation upon this subject. The excellence of every argument depends upon its applicability to the subject-matter in dispute. There is no question here, none has been made, between capital and labor. There is no conflict or ever can be properly between these two agencies. The question here is whether the Government of the United States, having assumed a monopoly of the manufacture of national currency notes and bank-notes, the demand for those notes being strictly limited to the uses of the Government and a prohibition imposed upon their manufacture elsewhere, whether the Government is justified in displacing the labor of a large number of skilled operatives and laborers by the use of machinery to the detriment of this large number of persons. That is the question.

Of course the point arises as to the excellence of that labor, the comparative excellence. If any one can believe that a machine can be invented that surpasses the ingenuity or the dexterity of the human hand in the matter of art and high art, then the Senate committee are justified in discouraging the employment of these skilled laborers; but it can not be said that the arguments which justify inventions and the uses of inventions which save labor can justify this particular action of the Government in assuming a monopoly of the manufacture and supply of bank-notes, and then substituting machinery for human labor and the support of labor.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator from Florida, before he takes his seat, answer a question?

Mr. CALL. I will if I can.

Mr. GRAY. I ask whether he would be quite willing, in furtherance of the general policy which he is advocating, to abolish the use of steam-presses in the Government Printing Office in order to increase the amount of labor on the hand-presses?

Mr. CALL. That is a different question, and has nothing to do with the question we are discussing. The Government of the United States has not assumed a monopoly of printing all over the United States; that is different. It is in the limitation of this business which this Government has made a monopoly and prohibited the performance of this work as well.

Mr. GRAY. There would be a greater demand for labor.

Mr. CALL. Nobody has said that whatever creates a greater demand for labor should be done. What we say is that the demand for labor which the Government has made and created shall not be ruthlessly displaced without a necessity for it in the superior excellence and skill of the work to be done. That is what we say.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I dislike very much to detain the Senate even for a moment at this late hour in the discussion of this matter, but having considered as a member of the Committee on Appropriations the appropriation bill which is now before the Senate, and acting with my friend from Iowa, the chairman of the committee, who has so well stated this entire case to the Senate so far as the consideration of the matter by the Committee on Appropriations was concerned, and there having been such a radical difference in the views which have been presented, I feel that it is proper for me to say a few words, to explain my vote upon the proposition as now presented.

The Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], and the members of the Committee on Finance who have examined this question and reported upon it, make the broad statement that the advocates of this proposition are opposed to all improved machinery, and therefore it is the old controversy which has been going on from the very beginning.

I have taken a great deal of pains and a great deal of time to examine the testimony furnished by the report made to the House of Representatives, being Report No. 3220 of the first session of this Congress, and the conclusions of the Committee on Finance, and I find that the petitioners in this case and the representative man of the Knights of Labor in this country, Mr. T. V. Powderly, asked that the use of steam machine presses should be prohibited in this bureau. Mr. Powderly starts out with the proposition:

It is not opposition to the introduction of labor-saving machinery which prompts the writing of this letter. I am in favor of labor-saving machinery wherever it can do the work as well as by hand.

So I think it is not fair to vote upon this proposition with the understanding or under the statement made by the Senator from New York that it is dictated by opposition to improved machinery. I have waded through this volume of testimony presented by the Committee on Finance at nights, as well as the volume from the House committee.

I have visited the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and although not an expert, yet with some fair knowledge of machinery, I do not hesitate to say that I believe the weight of the testimony and the examinations of the work performed show that this machinery does not print the greenbacks and that class of work in the highest style of art to be compared with hand-work. That is my belief, it is my impression, but like the Senator from Iowa, I do not think it is sufficiently conclusive to take the radical measure which is proposed in the bill as it comes from the House of Representatives.

In 1878 the Treasury Department made a contract with the inventor or others who owned this machine, the contract being that the Government should pay $500 for the privilege of manufacturing at its own cost each of these machines, and that in addition to the $500 bonus the Government was to pay $1 for every thousand sheets of impressions made by the machines. The machines have earned up to this time, as stated by Mr. Graves, about $70,000. In other words, the inventors have received a clear profit of about $70,000 for these machines.

Mr. FRYE. What is the sum paid by other contractors?

Mr. GORMAN. I will come to that in a moment. This is a royalty which the Committee on Appropriations in the light of to-day believe to be excessive. I do not criticise the action of the Department heretofore from 1878 down; but this royalty is now excessive, and therefore the Committee on Appropriations propose that the amount to be paid hereafter shall be one-half of that now received, to which I think we shall all agree if the machines are to be used at all.

This company have contracted with other parties outside, disconnected with the Government, for the use of these machines upon the precise terms on which the Government contract is based; but the fact remains that notwithstanding the enterprise of the bank-note companies, notwithstanding the desire of private parties who have to compete in bidding for postage-stamps and the stamps used by the Internal Revenue Bureau against this Department, there are but four other of these machines used by private people in the world.

The reason of that, to my mind, is that as experts, as men of affairs, those engaged in the business to which they could be applied, have not been satisfied that the machine has yet reached that point of efficiency where it can properly compete in the fine work of printing bonds and securities in a manner acceptable to those who deal in them, as is done by hand-work. That has weighed very much with me in coming to the conclusion that the hand-work is preferable for the larger denominations of the Government securities, and for bank-notes and silver certificates, aside from all the testimony which is embraced in these volumes, and which has been referred to by the Senator from New Hampshire, and others.

But when it comes to the printing of postage stamps and of stamps for the Internal Revenue Bureau there is not, I think, a single witness who claims that this work by machinery is even equal to the hand-work, but at all events it is sufficient to protect the interests of the Government.

One year ago, when the Postmaster-General was giving out his contracts and advertising for bids for the postage and other stamps used by his Department, the option was given to print them either by machine or hand work, and the Government engraving and printing establishment in Washington put in its bid; but its head was disinclined because he had no confidence in the machine to make the machine-work and hand-work on the stamps at the same rate, and he put in his bid $25,000 beyond the bid of the American Bank Note Company, which did risk the machine-work, and the bid was accepted, and it was lost to the people here and went to New York. All these matters have come into consideration.

The Committee on Appropriations—and I violate no confidence in saying that, as I am sure my friend from Iowa will admit—when considering this appropriation bill had no light whatever upon the subject except that embraced in the House report and the statements of two or three gentlemen representing the plate-printers, which were very short, and a very brief statement from Mr. Graves. Therefore we were not at the time of the consideration of this bill in a position to have sufficient knowledge to uproot the existing state of things, and we made the compromise provision which we have reported to this bill in the amendment now pending.

I have listened to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] with a great deal of pleasure, as I have to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], as well as the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], who is a member of the Finance Committee. These Senators are always earnest and always present a subject to the Senate intelligently and well; but the fact remains that, notwithstanding all the bills which have come to the two Houses during this entire Congress, at the last the men who are employed at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and elsewhere have not had that consideration for the questions which they presented which they think they were entitled to have, and when I came to examine the record I thought that that complaint was well founded.

Mr. President, there are among the employés of that bureau men of great intelligence and of wonderful courage. The fact is that they have come to the Senate and to the House of Representatives and to the committees of the two Houses and faced the gentleman who is in charge of this bureau—a man of parts, a Republican, or a Mugwump, as my friend from Vermont calls him, certainly not a Democrat, an old official of the Department, one who, I believe, in all the other stations which he has held has performed his duties well, a man above the average in intelligence, and whose integrity I think, from all I have heard of him, is beyond question, an earnest, bold man himself, and if he has a fault it is that he will not tolerate a different opinion in another. And yet the men under him have come and given their testimony without fear or favor, and they have presented their case well and intelligently.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Maryland allow me a word?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. I understood the Senator from Maryland to say that he did not think the plate-printers have had the full opportunity that they were entitled to for a hearing in this case.

Mr. GORMAN. I did not say that.

Mr. HARRIS. What was the Senator's declaration?

Mr. GORMAN. If the Senator will do me the favor to listen to me——

Mr. HARRIS. I have been listening with great care.

Mr. GORMAN. I said that these gentlemen, as I understand, and others who are interested in propositions which are pending before Congress, known as the labor bills, believe that they have not had the consideration that they are entitled to.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator does not refer to the investigation of the Finance Committee?

Mr. GORMAN. Not at all. I will state precisely what I meant.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I have nothing to say. I merely understood the Senator as referring to that investigation.

Mr. GORMAN. I hope the Senator from Tennessee and every other Senator will do me the justice to say that in discussing this question I have reflected upon nobody, and that I state the facts only as I understand them.

Mr. HARRIS. I was misled into the error of supposing that the Senator was referring to the investigation before the Finance Committee, and it was in respect to that that I propounded my question.

Mr. GORMAN. Not at all. I was stating the general proposition.

In this particular case these gentlemen went to the House of Representatives, and were there heard, and I find on the 29th day of August, 1888, there was received in this body a bill from the other House providing—

That from and after the passage of this act all Government securities, bonds, notes, and internal-revenue stamps shall be printed in the highest style of the art of plate-printing from hand-roller presses.

And still another bill providing that the head of that bureau, as I understand it, should be a practical printer, a man who understood the profession, a provision similar to that for the organization of the Government Printing Office; that he should not be simply a man of affairs, but should have this expert knowledge. That was the demand of the printers, and further that you should abolish the presses so far as time-work was concerned.

I think their demand included other things as well as stamps, and though that investigation has been going on in the Senate ever since about the 3d of September, as I understood my friend from Tennessee to say, the bill was not reported until within the last few days, and then, as stated by the Senator from New Hampshire, it was immediately postponed indefinitely, as is generally the custom with adverse reports, and it was placed back upon the Calendar on my motion.

They not only complain of this, but they complain of other measures of like character, which my friend from New Hampshire is entirely responsible for, and which I am glad to call to his attention. We passed at the last Congress, coming from the other House, a bill to prohibit the Government from buying machines, wagons, and other paraphernalia constructed by convict labor. That bill passed the Senate on the 1st day of March in the last Congress, and reached the Executive too late even to be considered, and so failed to become a law.

At this Congress it has come to the Senate again practically in the same form, and is more far-reaching than the bill we have under consideration to-day, for it strikes at thousands and thousands of laborers in this country, whereas the one under consideration embraces not over a thousand or twelve hundred. Hundreds of thousands of men are interested in that bill, and yet that bill, House bill 3406, received in the Senate on the 21st day of March, 1888, remains in the committee, and we have not even had the benefit of the testimony in the case and no opportunity to consider the measure.

Mr. ALLISON. To what committee was that referred?

Mr. GORMAN. It is indorsed "read twice, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor."

Mr. FRYE. Of which the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] is chairman.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President——

Mr. GORMAN. I address myself to the Senator from New Hampshire. I say that when you take the whole matter into consideration, when you consider the long delay, when you take all the remainder of these bills which have been presented and remember that we have never had an opportunity to consider them in the Senate of the United States, there is serious cause for complaint on the part of these people who think that this legislation is absolutely necessary for their comfort and their welfare. Now I will yield.

Mr. BLAIR. Did the Senator state that he addressed himself to me?

Mr. GORMAN. I called your attention to it.

Mr. BLAIR. I have had my attention called to that bill a good many times. There is many a bill which the Committee on Education and Labor reported back for action by the Senate upon the Calendar of the Senate to-day which we can not get action upon for want of time. We have sent many a bill to the House of Representatives from that committee which has not been acted upon by that House. They have got an exceedingly large dose of labor legislation from the Senate of the United States, which they can act upon if there is any possibility of securing action, and which will consume all that there is or all that there has been available to the House of Representatives in the way of what is called labor legislation.

The bill the Senator refers to now is one which did pass once and which the President of the United States placed in his pocket and vetoed in the Congress preceding this. It has been passed again by the House of Representatives and sent here after they had received a great amount of legislation from our committee in the House of Representatives which they refused to pay any attention to, and I have thought that the honorable chairman of that committee in the House, who has spent much time, perhaps, in talking with the Senator from Maryland in reference to this same matter as well as other Senators—I have thought that he might dispose of legislation which we sent to the House of Representatives early. For instance, we passed a bill here at the last session which had reference to the payment of the arrears that are due to Government employés and which they have been endeavoring to secure year after year, and that bill has been incontinently spurned and delayed by intent, as I think, and as those who are interested in the bill think.

We sent them the education bill. That is of more consequence than all other labor or industrial bills, including the tariff. It is of more consequence than all of them. That bill has been in the committee of the other House, and the Democratic leaders of the House have had for three Congresses an opportunity to act upon it, and they have every time incontinently choked it to death in committee without any consideration at all.

Now, we have upon our Calendars bills already reported from our committee that would consume three times the space between now and the close of this session; and if the Senate will consent to take them up I shall be very glad indeed to have them taken up.

The Senator from Maryland has traveled entirely outside of any occasion to make an assault upon me in this debate, and I do not know what authority the Senator has to hold me up to the criticism of the laboring interests of this country as having neglected a bill which your own President vetoed in the last Congress, and which, I suppose, he would veto again if he got a chance to do it. I do not know why the Senator should do that. But inasmuch as he has seen fit to do it, I give notice here and now that our Calendar is loaded down with at least six months' labor legislation which has been matured by the Committee on Education and Labor of the Senate, and if this body will take up some measures that have been matured and are ready for action here and in the other House, I shall be exceedingly glad to give them the opportunity.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, the fact still remains that during the last Congress the bill to which I referred, which affects thousands and thousands of laborers, passed the House of Representatives and came here in the latter part of the first session and did not reach the President until the 2d or 3d day of March, when it was too late to receive his consideration and action.

Mr. BLAIR. It reached the President on the 1st day of March, and he put it in his pocket on purpose and vetoed it, as he did one other bill, but this time, it being very near the Presidential election, he did sign the arbitration bill.

Mr. GORMAN. We are all over the Presidential election now. There came to the Senate on the 21st of March, 1888, a bill that would effect the purpose I speak of. It is a proper bill, for similar bills have been passed by nearly every State in the Union, prohibiting Government officers from purchasing Indian and Army supplies and articles used in the construction of public buildings which are the products of the labor of convicts in penitentiaries, which come in direct conflict with these people, and the Senate has not had the benefit of a report on that bill.

I know how earnest the Senator from New Hampshire is and I want to get him to something practical. Here is an opportunity to pass a bill for the benefit of these people, one that the organized labor of the country wants, and I say to the Senator from New Hampshire, and to the Senator from Iowa, and the Senator from New York, and others who have expressed a desire that this question shall come up, that from this time to the end of the session, immediately after the conclusion of morning business, to the exclusion of every other subject in the morning hour, I shall ask for the consideration of the plate-printers' bill, and ask the Senator from New Hampshire to report the bill which I referred to so as to give these men at least a day in court. I say they are entitled to some consideration. They are entitled to have these measures inquired into, and my friend from Tennessee and my friend from New York surely will not deny it.

Mr. BLAIR. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. GORMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator be willing to postpone the consideration of the resolution having relation to the investigation of Southern outrages in order to consider these measures?

Mr. GORMAN. I will postpone everything if I can benefit these people whose interests my friend from New Hampshire has always claimed to have so much at heart, and I shall put him to the test.

Mr. BLAIR. Even the investigation of Southern outrages?

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, not only have they not had this consideration, but what these men complain of, who are not lawyers, who are not in the habit of coming before committees of Congress, and who have to employ occasionally somebody to present their case—what they complain of is the treatment they have received, that they have not had any consideration whatever, and more than that, that this Republican or Mugwump at the head of this bureau should have insulted them; and, therefore, as men they feel it keenly. They have not had proper consideration at the hands of this Senate, and they have not been treated properly in the declarations of the man who is at the head of the bureau.

Now I will read to the Senate what he says upon this subject. The provision of the law as they presented it was that a man should be placed at the head of this bureau who should be skilled in the work which he was to superintend. Mr. Graves was asked what he thought of that proposition, and his answer was:

A plate-printer is a mechanic, apprenticed to the trade at an early age, without any requirement of education or special intelligence, and spending all his working hours in a narrow, mechanical routine. He has little taste or opportunity for the acquirement of general knowledge.

And therefore not fit for the head of such a department.

He has little taste or opportunity for the acquirement of general knowledge.

Mr. GEORGE. Who said that?

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. Graves.

It is impossible to conceive what qualification to manage a great and intricate bureau, in which perplexing questions of the administration, of legal construction, and of departmental practice are continually arising, and the chief officers of which must have frequent official intercourse with the high officers of the Government, would be furnished by men skilled in performing the purely mechanical operations of plate-printing. Such a craftsman might, indeed, free himself from the trammels of his trade and turn to other pursuits which would qualify him for other things, but just to the extent he should do so he would fall short of the "practical" working required.

And the printers replied by referring to Franklin and a host of others who came from the press, and there is no answer to that. But they do say that with such a declaration by their chief, and after the non-consideration which they have had here, their case is a hard one. I have said to them, as I say to the Senate, that I think their complaint has great force in it, but I am not prepared on an appropriation bill to stop the machinery of this Government. I am not prepared, and I doubt very much if the Senate can be on the evidence presented, to say that we will stop all this machinery now at this moment.

What we have done in this amendment is for the best interests of the Government. We have cut off one-half the amount to be paid, and have provided that not another machine of this kind shall be used in the Government service until the question can be determined whether it is wise to do so. In addition to that I do say now that upon the testimony before us and upon the independent proposition which has already passed the House and which only requires our action here to make it a law the Senate ought not to adjourn until it has considered these two propositions. Therefore I again repeat that I shall ask the unanimous consent of the Senate, and I shall antagonize every other proposition that is presented here during the morning hour, exclusive of the general appropriation bills, with these measures, which ought to be considered and acted upon.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, Senators may trust me not to talk long at this hour of the day after the bill has had so protracted a debate. But the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] invites me to a few observations that I can not refrain from making.

I do not accept his figures as to what the additional cost would be if the hand-presses were employed. They are exaggerated at least threefold.

I do not accept some other statements made as to the additional room that would be required. They are exaggerated.

The hand-presses cost about $125 each. I do not pretend to assume exactly what the additional cost would be if all this work were done as it ought to be done, but it certainly is not $100,000, and it is estimated by others as low as $40,000. The truth is somewhere between those figures.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] in charge of the bill not only acknowledged, but stated with the utmost freedom and frankness, that this work ought all to be done in the highest style of the art. The Senator from New York declared with tremendous emphasis that this is nothing under the sun but a war between capital and labor, or rather, I should say, a war against labor-saving inventions. I deny that emphatically, as emphatically as he asserted it.

I say what every sensible American knows, that if the issue were made alone upon that it could not stand a single minute; nor would I ever rise from my seat to make an argument against a labor-saving invention simply for the sake of keeping men in employment. The world has learned better than that, and the American world better than any other world.

But here is something from what was said within six or eight months by the head of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. It is very brief, and I will read it:

As to the comparative merits of steam-printing and hand-printing, it may be said that, speaking in the widest sense, steam-printing is not equal to hand-printing; that is to say, the steam-press has not shown its capacity to print the finest grades of work, such as the black faces of notes, bonds, and drafts. This is the conclusion of all the committees which have looked into the subject, and it is accepted by the management of this bureau.

I might stop there in answer to the Senator from Iowa and say, he having admitted that the work ought to be done in the highest style of the art, here is the record from the head of that bureau that every committee has reported that it can not be done in the highest style of the art by the steam-press; and Mr. Graves, on whom I have no criticism to make, a man discharging his duties to the best of his ability, but a man too anxious to make a cheap exhibit of the cost of this most important work—Mr. Graves says:

But there is nothing in this conclusion—

The conclusion to which these committees came—to contravene the demonstrated fact that the machine can and does print acceptably—

That is the question—"acceptably" to whom?

the green backs of notes and certificates, which are in the easiest grade of printing, and which, when done on the hand-presses, are intrusted to apprentice boys and the least skillful workmen.

That is all my case; it does decently the work which may be ordinarily intrusted to cheap workmen and apprentices; and my other answer, that is also abundantly sufficient, is the fact that they do not dare to print the faces of the notes; they do not dare to print the best kind of work now on these steam-presses though they have had them for years.

I admit the reasonableness of the pure business considerations suggested by the Senator from Iowa and by the Senator from Maryland, but I want to understand, if I accept in full and frankly the issue between the steam-press and the hand-press as to doing artistic work in the highest style, I plant myself upon the declaration of the Senator from Iowa, that this work ought to be done in the highest style.

Mr. BLAIR. I have received the note I hold in my hand, to which I am requested to call the attention of the Senator from Maryland. He probably has gone out to formulate a written motion in behalf of the convict-labor bill.

Mr. GORMAN. No, sir; I have not. I am here.

Mr. BLAIR. Excuse me. One of the gentlemen so highly complimented by the Senator, Mr. Jordan, who has the courage of his convictions and it seems has said his say to Mr. Graves, writes me as follows:

Senator BLAIR:

Will you please inform Senator GORMAN that the designs on all internal-revenue stamps are the most excellent, and the same lathe work and portraits and scrip is used on all internal-revenue stamps as on all the notes of the Government, and it is necessary they should be.

The internal-revenue work requires two-thirds of the employés at all times to get it out. No machine can print it. If it could be printed successfully by machines so could notes.

That is signed "Jordan," one of those men whom it is difficult to walk over with impunity.

I would say with reference to those measures which ought to be pushed that I have here one in which I hope the Senator will join with us. It was reported by the Committee on Education and Labor, and which for the benefit of his party in general he should insist upon having considered the first of any other, and that is a joint resolution which has been reported in several Congresses and never acted upon favorably by the Democracy, but it is a great measure, in the interest of the working people as well as ourselves. It is Senate joint resolution No. 12, Order of Business 1768, entitled a joint resolution proposing an amendment of the Constitution of the United States in relation to the manufacture, importation, exportation, transportation, and sale of alcoholic liquors.

I hope the Senator will not interfere with the consideration of this measure, for I gave notice several days ago that I should call it up on the first occasion.

Mr. GORMAN. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly.

Mr. GORMAN. Will he not join with me to-morrow morning to take up some measure that will give these men bread first, and then consider that question afterwards?

Mr. BLAIR. These men do not ask us to give them bread. They ask us to give them their God-given right to earn their bread. That is all they ask for.

Mr. GORMAN. Very good. That is what I mean.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to understand that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 19, line 12, after the word "exceeding," the Committee on Appropriations reported to strike out "1 cent" and insert "50 cents," and in line 14, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seventy-six" and insert "ninety;" so as to read:

For wages of plate-printers, at piece-rates to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, not to exceed the rates usually paid for such work, including the wages of printers' assistants, at $1.25 a day each when employed, and for wages of printers' assistants at steam-presses, at $1.50 a day each when employed, and for royalty at not exceeding 50 cents per thousand impressions for use of steam plate-printing machines, $390,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment heretofore passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 16 of the same page, 19, after the word "Treasury," the Committee on Appropriations reported to strike out:

Provided, That no portion of this sum shall be expended for printing United States notes of larger denomination than those that may be canceled or retired: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the repair or reconstruction of steam-plate printing presses: Provided further, That there shall not be an increase of the number of steam plate-printing machines in the Engraving and Printing Bureau: And provided further, That hereafter the name of each person whose portrait shall be placed upon any of the plates for bonds, securities, notes, silver certificates, stamps, fractional or postal currency of the United States shall be inscribed below such portrait: Provided, That unless the patentees of said steam-presses shall accept the $500 already paid as royalty on each press and the rate per thousand sheets herein provided the said presses shall not be used by the Government after the close of the present fiscal year.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

And unless the patentees of said steam-presses shall accept the rate per thousand sheets herein provided, the said presses shall not be used by the Government after the close of the present fiscal year: Provided, That there shall not be an increase of the number of steam plate-printing machines of the character now employed in the Engraving and Printing Bureau.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Does this include the amendments to the whole clause?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The two amendments in lines 12, 13, and 14 were treated as one question and agreed to. The question now recurs on the motion to strike out what has been read by the Secretary and insert the words in italics.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I supposed the whole clause, there being two propositions, was to be treated as one amendment. It was my intention to call for the yeas and nays on the question.

Mr. BLAIR. That is what I desired, but I thought it could be done a little later.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The entire amendments and the clause can be treated as one question.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator that he has the power to have a separate vote when the bill is reported to the Senate.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I will reserve it for a call of the yeas and nays in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer in behalf of the Committee on Appropriations the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, after line 12, it is proposed to insert:

For post-office at Sedalia, Mo.: For purchase of site and completion of building under present limit, $50,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say that there is a law now for this building.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer another amendment from the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 55, after line 6, it is proposed to insert:

International conference of American nations: For an additional amount to pay the expenses of the conference between the United States of America and the Republics of Mexico, Central and South America, Hayti, San Domingo, and the Empire of Brazil, provided for by the act approved May 24, 1888, to be disbursed under the direction and in the discretion of the Secretary of State, $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer another amendment on behalf of the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 79, after line 11, it is proposed to insert:

Military post at the presidio of San Francisco: For continuing the construction and repair of the roads and walks leading to the United States national cemetery on the reservation of the presidio of San Francisco, planting trees and shrubs, and for the protection of and fencing of said road and reservation in which the cemetery is situated, and also for the preservation of the same and its springs of water used for irrigating the post and cemetery from drifting sand, and for the construction of a roadway connecting the Fort Mason reservation with said reservation and cemetery, the further sum of $38,000, to be expended under the direction of the general officer commanding the Division of the Pacific.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer another amendment from the Committee on Appropriations, which has also been reported favorably by the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to substitute for lines 4, 5, and 6, on page 12, the following:

For establishing complete, a light-house and fog-signal on the easterly end of the outer breakwater at Chicago, Lake Michigan, Illinois, without regard to the completion of said breakwater, $56,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What are those lines 4, 5, and 6?

The Secretary read as follows:

Chicago break-water fog-signal, Illinois: For establishing complete a steam fog-whistle on the breakwater at Chicago, Ill., $5,200.

Mr. ALLISON. This has been recommended by the Light-House Board and by the Committee on Commerce.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I offer the following amendment, to be inserted after line 19, on page 14:

For the purchase of a site and the construction of a first-order coast light-house at or near Heceta Head, at or near the mouth of Siuslaw River, Oregon, $80,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that recommended by the Light-House Board?

Mr. ALLISON. It is recommended by the Light-House Board.

Mr. MITCHELL. And reported by the Committee on Commerce.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I offer another amendment, to come in on page 14, after line 16:

For a first-class light-house at the mouth of the Umpqua River, in the State of Oregon, in addition to the amount heretofore appropriated, $30,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear that explained.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will make a word of explanation. At the last session of Congress the Senate passed a separate bill providing for this light-house, which was not taken up in the House. In the sundry civil bill there was inserted a clause making an appropriation of $80,000, in accordance with the recommendation of the Light-House Board and of the Treasury Department generally, to the effect that that amount was required for a first-order light-house on the Umpqua River. It went to the House of Representatives, and in conference the appropriation was stricken down to $50,000, and in that form it became a law. The board report that they are unable to go on with that amount of money. This is an appropriation recommended now of $30,000, making $80,000 in all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This is reported from a committee?

Mr. MITCHELL. It is reported from the Committee on Commerce, and was sent to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So that it is in order?

Mr. MITCHELL. So that it is in order.

Mr. ALLISON. The amount appropriated last year has not been touched by the Light-House Board, because they require this additional sum.

Mr. EDMUNDS. All right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. On page 45, line 23, after "eighty-eight," I move to insert:

And $335,000 in addition thereto, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the connection, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. So that the paragraph will read:

Prevention of epidemics:

The President of the United States is hereby authorized, in case of threatened or actual epidemic of cholera or yellow fever, to use the unexpended balance of the sum appropriated by the joint resolutions approved September 26 and October 12, 1888——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, let us hear what follows that.

The Secretary read as follows:

And $335,000 in addition thereto, or so much thereof as may be necessary, in aid of State and local boards or otherwise, in his discretion, in preventing and suppressing the spread of the same.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say that there is remaining unexpended $168,000 of the appropriation made last year, and now the Senator from Tennessee moves an additional sum.

Mr. HARRIS. This is a contingent fund, to be expended under the discretion of the President in the event and only in the event of an epidemic actually existing and threatened, or so much thereof as necessary, and that is in the discretion of the President. If there shall be an epidemic it is not quite safe to rely upon a smaller fund than this whole sum. It is to be hoped by myself and everybody else there will be none.

Mr. EDMUNDS. All right. Go ahead.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I am directed by the Committee on Patents to report the following amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is it now reported from the Committee on Patents?

Mr. TELLER. It was reported from the Committee on Patents and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read. Will the Senator state at what point it should come in?

Mr. TELLER. It is to come in on page 64, after line 10, just above "Miscellaneous objects."

The SECRETARY. After line 10, page 64, it is proposed to insert:

To enable the United States of America to be properly represented at the convention of the International Union for the Protection of Industrial Property, to be held in the year 1889, $6,000, such delegate or delegates to be appointed by the President of the United States, and to be persons acquainted with patent law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COLQUITT. I move, on page 72, line 9, the following amendment:

For building one brick hospital building, uniform in architecture with the other buildings on the post at the United States arsenal at Augusta, Ga., $10,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order on that.

Mr. BROWN. On what ground?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Iowa to interpose a point of order.

Mr. BROWN. I ask him to state his point of order.

Mr. ALLISON. It is not reported by any committee.

Mr. BROWN. It is estimated for by the head of a Department, by the Secretary of War, who says it is an absolute necessity. I have the estimate here. It reads:

Augusta arsenal, Augusta, Ga.: For one brick hospital building, uniform in architecture with the other buildings.

NOTE.—There never has been a hospital here, and consequently the sick have to be kept in the barracks. The hospital steward and matron also live separate. The two rooms now occupied as dispensary and medical store-room were an old smithy. A hospital building is an absolute necessity.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How many troops are there?

Mr. BROWN. I do not know. This is the Secretary of War's estimate.

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw the point of order. I desire to ask the Senator from Georgia who offered this amendment or his colleague, how many troops are in Augusta, Ga., at this time?

Mr. COLQUITT. I think about thirty.

Mr. ALLISON. About thirty troops?

Mr. COLQUITT. About thirty; but I will state to the Senator that I see the purport of the inquiry. In connection with that I wish to say a word. I do not know what has transpired between the Senator from Iowa and my colleague in the colloquy which they have had; it was rather exclusive and we did not hear it in the rear; but this recommendation was made by the Ordnance Department and approved by the Secretary of War, and the estimate for it has been made by the Treasury Department.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator that my information and understanding are that there was only a single officer at this post and only such assignments as would enable it to exist as a post, but a good many Senators around me say there ought to be a good many troops there, and I shall not further object to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am directed by the Select Committee on the Centennial of the Constitution and the Discovery of America to offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of the bill:

That for the purpose of making adequate preparation for an appropriate celebration of this great historic event, a commission of nine members, to be known as the Constitutional Centennial Commission, is hereby authorized, and the President of the United States shall, and he is hereby authorized and empowered, to appoint said commissioners, subject to the confirmation of the United States Senate, and said commission shall have charge of the preparations for and the ceremonies of said celebration.

That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and requested to invite the chief executive and chief judicial officers of Mexico, Guatemala, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Salvador, Honduras, the United States of Colombia, Venezuela, Bolivia, Peru, Chili, Uruguay, Paraguay, Ecuador, the Argentine Republic, the Empire of Brazil, the Dominion of Canada, Hayti, San Domingo, and such other civil and military officers of said governments as the commission hereinbefore provided for shall designate, to visit Washington in the year 1889 and join with the President of the United States and the Congress of the United States, the justices of the Supreme Court, the governors of the forty-six States and Territories, and others who may be invited, in suitable ceremonies in honor of said event. And the President shall have authority to entertain, in a suitable manner and for a suitable time, in his discretion, the foreign guests attending said celebration; and the sum of $300,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, is hereby appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to defray the expenses incident to said celebration and said entertainment, the same to be paid and disbursed upon proper vouchers approved by the president of said commission.

That said commission shall, from time to time, report directly to the President of the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. I make any point of order that I am entitled to make upon that amendment. It certainly creates nine new offices of considerable magnitude.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under what clause does the Senator from Iowa interpose the point of order?

Mr. ALLISON. On the first portion of the amendment providing for certain officers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has it been referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It so appears by the print.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, this amendment provides for a commission which is to serve without compensation. There is no provision for any compensation or salary to these officers. The matter has passed the Senate once, I think, unanimously, and after considerable discussion. I do not remember that any Senator objected to it.

There is a law which already provides for the invitation at some time during the year of delegates from the governments of the South American republics and other South American states to meet here and discuss our trade and other relations. There has been a great pressure put upon the Senate and upon this committee to provide for a grand scheme of a centennial celebration which shall extend from 1889 to 1892. That has not been reported or recommended by the committee, but the committee, I believe, were unanimously of the opinion that it was proper to have a simple but dignified civic celebration at some time during the year in honor of the centennial of the Constitution.

The scheme which I hope will be adopted, and which passed the Senate at the last session, provided for the assembling of the two Houses of Congress and an address by the Chief-Justice of the United States. The time, I suppose, will be fixed at some period late in the year, probably after the assembling of this convention. It was thought that it was a proper and becoming act and that it would very much tend to promote close and harmonious relations with the other American states to invite their chief-justices and chief executive officers, whoever they were, representing their sovereignty, to be present, and I suppose the President will appoint nine gentlemen of character and dignity in the country, who are expected to serve without any salary or other compensation, to make the arrangements, and this sum is proposed to be put at his command for the sake of enabling him to give a suitable entertainment to these persons.

Whether the sum of $300,000 is more than is necessary I do not know, but the President will not expend it if it is not.

I think it will be a very important aid to carrying out what we all desire to see, a successful convention, the provision for which the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] advocated and which has become a law.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts if this amendment is not clearly general legislation in its character, creating, as it does, a number of officers to be nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate? Is it not general legislation in its character and does it not utterly fail if the question of order is raised upon it as general legislation upon an appropriation bill?

Mr. HOAR. It does not seem so to me.

Mr. HARRIS. It does seem so to me, very clearly.

Mr. HOAR. It seemed to me that it was a proposition which I hoped would meet with no objection anywhere.

I do not understand that it comes within what is deemed general legislation any more than the provision for a zoological park. It is a special provision for the accomplishment of a special purpose and employing special instruments with reference to the celebration of the centennial. I do not know of any definition of general legislation within which it comes. It imposes no general duty upon the citizens of the country. It neither repeals any old general law nor creates any new one. It does not prescribe a rule of conduct, which is the usual definition of a law for the citizens anywhere. It is no more general legislation, indeed not nearly as much so as the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] a little while ago. It is not more general legislation than a provision for buying a picture——

Mr. HARRIS. I will say to the Senator, if he will allow me, that my amendment was purely an appropriation for a specific object.

Mr. HOAR. I understand, and so is this. It is no more general legislation than a provision to have three commissioners to provide a statue of General Washington or General Sheridan.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would call the attention of the Senator from New York to the fact that the amendment would not be intelligible in the connection if the language employed now is to remain. It reads:

That for the purpose of making adequate preparation for an appropriate celebration of this great historic event.

There is no historic event referred to antecedently.

And the ceremonies of said celebration.

No celebration is antecedently mentioned.

The Chair does not think that the amendment is open to the point of order upon the ground of its being general legislation. It provides for the appropriation of a certain amount of money, and the other provisions merely designate the method in which it is to be expended. It is not general legislation under any definition that the Chair recognizes, inasmuch as when the work is accomplished the legislation is spent. It is not in that sense general legislation.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say a word or two on the question itself. This amendment was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and was considered very carefully by that committee, and from the best knowledge that we could gather it was the belief of the committee that this provision would be a total failure if attempted to be carried out. It might have been an effective provision if put into the law a year ago when the bill alluded to by the Senator from Massachusetts was passed by the Senate; but now it is proposed to appoint nine commissioners, and to invite all the people from all the Central and South American states that they may choose to invite, to bring them here to meet at a particular day, which it seemed to the committee would be impossible during the year 1889.

Mr. HOAR. If my friend will allow me, as I understand, the expectation is that this convention will not meet here before October or November, and undoubtedly this celebration will not take place until after the assembling of Congress in December, so that the two Houses of Congress could be present. That is all that will be necessary. There is plenty of time for that.

Mr. ALLISON. We have already inserted in this bill an additional appropriation of $75,000 to meet the expenses of the people who have been invited here under the statute passed last year, making $150,000 in all for that purpose. The President or Secretary of State has extended invitations to all these governments and they are to meet here on the 4th day of October, and it may be, as the Senator from Massachusetts says, that this congregation of people will remain here from October until December.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the money does not run out.

Mr. ALLISON. The money will probably last a month or six weeks. I do not think it is probable that a celebration in the month of December will amount to anything. I say that very frankly as my own opinion. I may be all wrong about this. I asked one of the promoters of this scheme what it was intended to do, and he seemed to have the view that the President would give a banquet, that we should have an oration, and that one day they should all go down to Mount Vernon. That seemed to be the extent of the projet of this celebration. I care very little about it myself. I do not think that we ought to expend this sum of money for that purpose.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to amend the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does not require a motion, the Chair thinks.

Mr. HISCOCK. There is not the slightest danger, if I modify the amendment, of its being ruled out of order, is there?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has ruled that the point of order taken by the Senator from Iowa would not lie against the amendment.

Mr. HISCOCK. The suggestion has been made to me that if I modify my amendment, then, not having been reported by a committee, it is a different amendment and the point of order would be against it. But the point of order against the amendment having been overruled I can move to amend it and it will not lie against it.

Mr. SPOONER. It has been overruled.

Mr. HISCOCK. I understand it has been overruled as against the one that is offered, but it becomes an entirely different one when I modify it. Therefore I move to amend by striking out the words "this great historic event," in the second line on the first page, and inserting "the centennial of the Constitution of the United States."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the amendment to the amendment be read. It is a very important amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The entire amendment?

Mr. HARRIS. Let it be read as proposed to be amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 2 of the amendment it is proposed to strike out the words "this great historic event" and insert "the centennial of the Constitution of the United States;" so as to read:

That, for the purpose of making adequate preparation for an appropriate celebration of the centennial of the Constitution of the United States, a commission of nine members, etc.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I feel obliged to oppose that amendment, because if agreed to the whole value of the main amendment will be lost. The only use of expending $300,000 of the money of the people is in celebrating a great historic event, and if we reduce it to the mere hard, literal, legal fact of the centennial of the Constitution we are only providing for appropriating money to recognize a fact that has been in existence by Constitution and statute for a hundred years. If we can not decorate it with the description of a great historical event, it seems to me it is not worth while to pass it at all.

But to be serious about it, I do not feel justified in voting $300,000 or any other amount of the money of the tax-payers of the United States for the mere glorification, the mere pomp and ceremony of telling the people of the United States and the rest of mankind that the United States and its Constitution have endured for a hundred years. It does not appear to me that there is a sufficient reason or justification for a public body to vote money for such a purpose. We might vote every month in the year for great historic events, and for events that are centennial, for now we have reached a century, and more than a century, in the most important of historical events, the establishment of these colonies, and so on. It appears to me to be a waste of money.

While the thing itself is well enough, and if private gentlemen want to put in their money and have a celebration of that or anything else, all very well, but for the Congress of the United States to levy a tax upon the laborers of the United States (and that means everybody) to do a thing of this kind, when the Constitution is in no danger and the history of the country is in no danger, as a mere glorification, with all respect to the gentleman, who would enjoy it, as I should myself, I do not feel willing to do it.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, every intelligent citizen has occasional celebrations of his birthday. Every town in this country, so far as I know, celebrates the centennial of its settlement. On the occasion of the semi-centennial, when this country had completed half a century, this precise thing which is now proposed was done by the Congress of the United States; and John Quincy Adams, whose memory contained the political history of this country from the outbreak of the struggle for independence, delivered his famous address.

It has been thought by a large number of citizens of the country, whose voice has been communicated by letters from the governors of nearly all the States in the Union, that it would be a decent and fitting thing to mark the completion of a century of constitutional liberty under constitutional law, not by a pageant, not by a military display, but by a grave and serious recognition of the event; and the Senate passed last year a resolution directing that the two Houses of Congress at some convenient time in the year should assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives, and listen to an address by the Chief-Justice of the United States, and that the other governments of this continent, who under our example have so many of them established constitutional governments, should be invited to attend as guests on the occasion.

The Senator from Vermont, who talks about taxing the laborers of this country, and who has tried to put on this very bill a provision for a million dollars for a collection of monkeys in the neighborhood of the place where he dwells, thinks that is not a fitting thing. There is not a laborer in this country who knows that he is an American, in whose breast the patriotic emotion was ever stirred, who would not receive with a feeling of regret and mortification the news that the Congress of the United States had declined to do what was fitting and decent at such a time. I think there are very few who would not read with a feeling of humiliation and shame some language that has been uttered in the Senate of the United States in regard to the subject.

It does not seem to me that this is an altogether light thing. We celebrated the political separation of this country from Great Britain and the announcement of certain general formulas as to the right and the duty of men in civil government, at a cost of several millions of dollars, in Philadelphia, in 1876.

I do not know that anybody regrets the transaction. If it be fitting to celebrate the act which simply gave this country its opportunity, and the declaration of the principles, which were mere empty words unless a constitutional government could be founded on them, why is it unbecoming to provide for this simple but august ceremonial in honor of what Mr. Gladstone declared the most marvelous single document which ever came from the human intellect, and of its successful inauguration and its successful administration for a hundred years—that great Constitution under which the thirteen States have grown to be thirty-eight States, under which the 3,000,000 have grown to be 65,000,000, and on whose example to-day is the defense and the security and the hope of constitutional liberty not only on this continent but the world over?

I think it is a wise, natural, and beautiful instinct which induces men to mark their birthdays and the recurrence of the anniversaries of the great and joyful events in their lives. I think the most beautiful occasion that ever comes to a household is the golden wedding of the father and the mother, when the children and the grandchildren gather about their knees and they look back on fifty years of domestic felicity, and comfort, and happiness, and virtue in a simple home.

Is it to be a matter of ridicule when the golden wedding of these thirteen States with their twenty-five children by their side is to be celebrated by a simple statement from the most august magistrate on the face of the earth, just beginning that career which those of us who do not belong to the party which has selected him hope and pray may be a career like that of the great predecessors who have adorned the office which he fills?

I think we should consider $300,000, and $3,000,000, cheap if we could have a statement of constitutional history, and constitutional principle, and the essence of constitutional law, coming from the lips of John Marshall at the end of the first fifty years, or of Taney, or of Chase, or of Ellsworth, or of Jay, or of Waite. I want to hear that statement from the man on whose shoulders has fallen that ermine which under the constitutional processes and the simple safeguards which the Republic has thrown about its magistracy has remained pure, purer than the driven snow, purer than the whitest wool, purer than the purity of the purest woman or the purest child in the administration of these great affairs for a hundred years.

I for one in the brief period of public service which remains to me can get instruction, and inspiration, and cheer, and hope, and comfort if that great magistrate can tell me what he and the men who think with him have to draw in the way of a lesson from the constitutional history of my country. It may be that it is ridiculous in the eyes of the Senator from Vermont, and if it be, let him spend that day in the zoological park in the companionship of his monkeys.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I did not know that I was to have so near neighbors. I was under the impression that the amendment I had proposed to the bill said nothing about monkeys or anybody else, cousins or uncles or descendants of that class of beings.

The amendment I offered to the bill provided for a national park, and nothing else. But if it had provided for monkeys, I do not know that it would necessarily prove that the Senator from Massachusetts is right in supposing that it was necessary to the honor of the Chief-Justice or to the happiness of the Senator from Massachusetts that $300,000 should be spent for a single day's celebration, in which the Chief-Justice should read a dissertation upon the history of the Constitution, and the Senator from Massachusetts should furnish the fuss and feathers for the occasion. If it is, we can vote it; but I ask for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment. Does the Senator from Vermont desire the yeas and nays on that?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, no.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to suggest a formal amendment to the amendment. In line 6, the words "subject to the confirmation of the United States Senate" is hardly legal phraseology. The usual phraseology is "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate."

Mr. HISCOCK. There is no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 6 it is proposed to strike out the words:

Subject to the confirmation of the United States Senate.

And to insert:

By and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment as amended, upon which the Senator from Vermont asks that the yeas and nays may be entered on the Journal.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment be read as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment as amended will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add, as an additional section, at the end of the bill:

SEC. —. That for the purpose of making adequate preparation for an appropriate celebration of the centennial of the Constitution of the United States, a commission of nine members, to be known as the constitutional centennial commission, is hereby authorized, and the President of the United States shall, and he is hereby, authorized and empowed to appoint said commissioners, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and said commission shall have charge of the preparations for and the ceremonies of said celebration.

That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and requested to invite the chief executive and chief judicial officers of Mexico, Guatemala, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Salvador, Honduras, the United States of Colombia, Venezuela, Bolivia, Peru, Chili, Uruguay, Paraguay, Ecuador, the Argentine Republic, the Empire of Brazil, the Dominion of Canada, Hayti, San Domingo, and such other civil and military officers of said governments as the commission hereinbefore provided for shall designate, to visit Washington in the year 1889 and join with the President of the United States and the Congress of the United States, the justices of the Supreme Court, the governors of the forty-six States and Territories, and others who may be invited, in suitable ceremonies in honor of said event. And the President shall have authority to entertain, in a suitable manner and for a suitable time, in his discretion, the foreign guests attending said celebration; and the sum of $300,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, is hereby appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to defray the expenses incident to said celebration and said entertainment, the same to be paid and disbursed upon proper vouchers approved by the president of said commission.

That said commission shall, from time to time, report directly to the President of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays having been ordered, the Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York as amended.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COLQUITT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE]. I do not know how he would vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MITCHELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. BROWN (when Mr. RANSOM'S name was called). I was asked by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] to announce his pair with the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. STOCKBRIDGE].

Mr. SAWYER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL]. I do not know how he would vote upon this question, and I therefore refrain from casting my vote.

Mr. TELLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. COLQUITT. I announced my pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE], but I understand that he would probably be recorded in the affirmative upon this question, and I therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. BROWN (after having voted in the negative). I voted forgetting that I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]. I withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia withdraws his vote.

Mr. PAYNE (after having voted in the negative). I am paired generally to-day with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] and I withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio withdraws his vote.

Mr. BLAIR. I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. If this is deemed a party matter, I will not vote. If allowed to vote, I should vote "yea."

Several SENATORS. Vote!

Mr. BLAIR. If Senators think I will be justified in voting, I vote "yea."

Mr. TELLER. I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] on political questions. As this does not seem to be a political question, and I am told by some that the Senator from Louisiana would vote for the amendment, I vote "yea."

Mr. ALLISON. Before the vote is announced I should like unanimous consent to have it understood that to-morrow the consideration of this bill——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can not entertain a request for the intervention of any business while the roll-call is proceeding.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. HISCOCK (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. Understanding that in no sense is this a political question, I will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. PADDOCK. My colleague [Mr. MANDERSON] is paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. If my colleague were here, he would vote "yea."

Mr. COCKRELL (after having voted in the negative). I was paired a few moments ago with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], and I am not sure how he would vote on this question. I would vote "nay," and fearing that he might vote "yea" if present I will withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri withdraws his vote.

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—16.

Blair,	Evarts,	Hearst,	Platt,
Butler,	Gorman,	Hiscock,	Reagan,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote disclosing the absence of a quorum, the Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. I think I will make a motion to adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois moves that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Illinois will withdraw that motion until we can ascertain the presence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No business can be transacted except the call of the roll of the Senate——

Mr. ALLISON. So I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And except a motion to adjourn.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion.

Mr. CULLOM. I will withdraw the motion, as the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations desires me to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allison,	Daniel,	Hoar,	Ransom,
Blair,	Dawes,	Ingalls,	Reagan,
Brown,	Edmunds,	McPherson,	Sawyer,
Butler,	Evarts,	Mitchell,	Spooner,
Call,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Stewart,
Chandler,	Gray,	Morrill,	Teller,
Cockrell,	Hampton,	Paddock,	Vest.
Coke,	Harris,	Payne,
Colquitt,	Hearst,	Platt,
Cullom,	Hiscock,	Pugh,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Thirty-seven Senators have answered to their names—less than a quorum.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senator from Iowa to withdraw that motion for a moment.

Mr. ALLISON. I will withdraw the motion for a moment.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to give notice that if this state of things occurs again during the expiring hours of this Congress, so far as I am personally concerned, I shall insist upon a regular call of the Senate and the sending of the Sergeant-at-Arms for absent Senators.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 22, 1889, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 21, 1889.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PURCHASE OF PROPERTY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, I did not catch the reading of the Journal with reference to the disposition of the report from the special committee in relation to the purchase of real estate for the District of Columbia yesterday.

The SPEAKER. It shows that the report was indefinitely postponed on motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER].

Mr. TAULBEE. I want to ask a question for information. Does that action dissolve the committee?

The SPEAKER. The committee is discharged. When a select committee makes a final report to the House the committee is dissolved.

Mr. TAULBEE. I understand that to be the effect. Now, what I want to know is how the matter of settling up the business of the committee is to be disposed of.

The SPEAKER. That is not a matter for the Chair to decide or for the House; that is a matter outside of the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. Regular order.

LIFE-SAVING STATION, OREGON.

Mr. HERMANN. The record of the proceedings transacted last evening in relation to business coming from the Committee on Commerce omits the report of that committee in reference to a life-saving station on the coast of Oregon. I do not remember whether an order was made to have the report printed in the proceedings or not, but if not I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is insisted upon. The gentleman can not ask unanimous consent at this time, but he can make a correction of the RECORD if he desires.

LORD SACKVILLE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the President:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report of the Secretary of State, of this day's date, with accompanying correspondence, touching the case of Lord Sackville.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 20, 1888.

The communication and accompanying papers were referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

LODGE AT WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of War of an appropriation for furnishing and maintaining a lodge at the Washington Monument; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DECORATION OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, submitting an estimate of an appropriation for the decoration of public buildings during the inauguration ceremonies; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

THE BRIG SALLY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting conclusions of law and of fact in the spoliation claim in the matter of the brig Sally; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolutions of the following titles:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 258) providing for the printing of the eulogies on the life and character of Edward W. Robertson, deceased, late Representative in Congress from Louisiana; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 262) to print 39,000 copies of the fourth annual report of the Commissioner of Labor.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 11795) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the House providing for printing additional copies of the report on the production of the precious metals of the United States for 1887.

DEERING DONNELL AND OTHERS VS. THE UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting findings of fact in the case of Deering Donnell and others against the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

RELIEF OF SETTLERS IN HETTINGER COUNTY, DAKOTA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill (S. 3751) for the relief of certain settlers in Hettinger County, Dakota.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask unanimous consent that that bill be withheld and lie on the Speaker's table for the present.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

DISTRICT JURORS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following Senate concurrent resolution:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, February 20, 1889.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (S. 3640) to amend the laws relating to the selection and service of jurors in the supreme court of the District of Columbia the Committee on Enrolled Bills is hereby authorized and directed to strike out the word "fifty-two" where it occurs in the first line of section 8 and to insert in lieu thereof the word "sixty-two."

The resolution was concurred in.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit for present consideration a resolution to which I think there will be no objection.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That after to-day the House sessions shall begin at 10 a. m., and, after the reading of the Journal, up to 11 a. m., matters by unanimous consent may be considered; recognitions to be under the control of the Speaker, from the two sides alternately.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is in order for reference.

Mr. RANDALL. The first part of it is in order at any rate.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read that part of the resolution again.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That on and after to-day the House sessions shall begin at 10 a. m., and, after the reading of the Journal, up to 11 a. m., matters by unanimous consent may be considered.

The SPEAKER. This proposition involves a change of a standing order of the House, and under the rule it must lie over for one day.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask the Chair whether the proposition to meet at 10 or 11 a. m. is not in order without the following part of the resolution?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. It is in order to introduce the resolution for reference, but it involves the change of a standing order of the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. Regular order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. If the gentleman will change this proposition so that the daily sessions shall commence at 11 o'clock this week and 10 o'clock next week, I will not object.

Mr. RANDALL. I can not consent to do that. I want to accommodate every member of the House——

Many MEMBERS. That is right.

Mr. RANDALL. Quite a number of gentlemen desire to come here early in the day to transact business by unanimous consent, and I think such an opportunity ought to be afforded.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If the gentleman will accept an amendment providing that members shall be recognized as their names are reached on a call of the roll, so that every one may get his chance——

The SPEAKER. Objection being made to the immediate consideration of the resolution, it will be referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. HOOKER. I hope there will be an early report.

AMENDMENT OF INTERNAL-REVENUE LAW.

Mr. RANDALL. I submit as a privileged matter another resolution for reference to the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Rule XXIII, clause 4, be amended by adding thereto the following proviso:

"Provided, That on ——day, immediately after the reading of the Journal, the House shall proceed in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12131) to amend the internal-revenue laws, and at 4 o'clock p. m. on said day the said bill shall be reported to the House with such amendments as may have been agreed to in said committee, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon said amendments, and upon the engrossment, third reading, and passage of said bill, and the votes thereon shall be forthwith taken; and in case the said bill shall not be taken up on said day, then this shall be a continuing order thereafter in all respects until one legislative day shall be occupied as herein specified: And provided, That a yea-and-nay vote shall be taken on an amendment proposed by Mr. FORNEY, on behalf of the minority of the committee reporting said bill: Provided further, That after the consideration of the said bill has been entered upon no dilatory motion shall be entertained by the Chair."

The SPEAKER. This resolution will be referred to the Committee on Rules.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced agreement to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 185) to provide for the admission of the State of South Dakota into the Union and for the organization of the Territory of North Dakota.

CENSUS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 1659) providing for taking the eleventh and subsequent censuses; said bill having been returned from the Senate with amendments.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be referred to the Select Committee on the Eleventh Census.

Mr. COX. I ask that the committee have leave to report on that bill at any time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] asks that the Committee on the Eleventh Census be allowed to report back the amendments of the Senate at any time. Is there objection?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. What is the bill?

The SPEAKER. It is a bill providing for taking the eleventh census.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I object.

Mr. COX. I ask unanimous consent to take the bill up now and agree to the Senate amendments.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the gentleman from New York will agree that the bill shall remain on the Speaker's table at this time. I am very anxious to have the House proceed with the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the Senate amendments be now concurred in.

Mr. BLOUNT. I must object at present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will withhold the bill, if there be no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MCCULLOGH, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for the remainder of this week, on account of important business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move to dispense with the morning hour; and in connection with that motion I ask unanimous consent that gentlemen be allowed to file majority and minority reports with the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] asks unanimous consent that gentlemen having reports to present from committees be allowed to file them at the Clerk's desk, to be referred under the direction of the Speaker.

Mr. TAULBEE. Does that include authority for minorities of committees to file their views?

The SPEAKER. That is a part of the proposition. Is there objection to this request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

FILING OF REPORTS.

The following reports were filed by being handed in at the Clerk's desk:

HENRY H. VAN DYCK AND OTHERS.

Mr. BYNUM, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 5241) for the relief of Henry H. Van Dyck, Daniel Butterfield, Charles J. Folger, and Thomas Hillhouse, late assistant treasurers of the United States at New York, N. Y., and of Charles J. Canda, assistant treasurer of the United States at New York, N. Y.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LITTLEBERRY W. BAKER.

Mr. BLISS, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 12619) granting a pension to Littleberry W. Baker; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM J. MARTIN.

Mr. BLISS also, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 12608) to pension William J. Martin; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ELIZABETH M. ALLEN.

Mr. BLISS also, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 10725) to increase the pension of Elizabeth M. Allen; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

IRA WELLS.

Mr. BLISS also, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 12607) to grant a pension to Ira Wells; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

HOT SPRINGS BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION.

Mr. MCRAE, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 12564) granting the use of certain lands in the Hot Springs reservation in the State of Arkansas to the Hot Springs Benevolent Association; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MRS. CHRISTIANA FREDERIKA ZEUTMEYER.

Mr. BLISS, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 9520) granting a pension to Mrs. Christiana Frederika Zeutmeyer, of Fairfield, Minn.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ACCEPTANCE OF STATUE OF GENERAL LEWIS CASS.

Mr. CHIPMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] permits me to submit a proposition fixing an evening session for the action of the House on the concurrent resolution accepting the statue of General Cass.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library are discharged from the consideration of the concurrent resolution to accept the statue of General Lewis Cass, presented to the United States by the State of Michigan; and that a recess be taken at 5 o'clock this afternoon until 7½ o'clock this evening, at which time the House shall be in session to consider said resolution and no other business; and that the said session shall adjourn not later than 10 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to agreeing to this resolution?

Mr. CRISP. I will not object if any other night than to-night be named, because it is the intention to have a caucus to-night.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Then I suggest Saturday night.

Mr. MILLS. What is this proposition?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan desires unanimous consent for the adoption of a resolution fixing a session for Saturday night for the acceptance of the statue of General Lewis Cass. The Chair will state that on Saturday afternoon, by order of the House, the resolutions in relation to the death of the late Representative Burnes will be taken up by the House, and that in such cases it is usual to adjourn at the conclusion of the eulogies, instead of taking a recess.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Then I suggest Monday night.

Mr. RANDALL. Will that involve an adjournment at any particular hour on Monday night?

The SPEAKER. The proposition is for a recess at 5 o'clock and adjournment at 10.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, I object to the provision for an adjournment at 10 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the resolution is not before the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees.

The motion was agreed to.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to resume the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12490) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the pending paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3: Cashier, five classes, salary, graded in even hundreds of dollars, at $1,800, $2,000, $2,200, $2,400, and not exceeding $2,600 per annum.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out that paragraph.

Last evening when the committee was considering this bill I obtained the floor with a view of making a few remarks concerning this proposed classification. This classification is in harmony with certain other acts of former Congresses classifying the officials in the employment of the Government. I do not think that system of classification has been prolific of any good results to the Government. It has been rather expensive; and I believe that this classification, which provides for making the minimum salary of these officials at least 50 per cent. higher than the same class of persons employed in the avocations of private life obtain, will not be promotive of much public good, for the reason that it seems to be in the direction of increasing at a greater and greater degree the expenses of the General Government, at a time, too, when the people of this country, who are not interested in the holding of offices, but only as they promote the efficiency of the service, are demanding a reduction in the rate of postage. If this classification is adopted as provided in this bill, I have no doubt it will increase the annual expenditures of the Post-Office Department several millions of dollars. We have already had arguments upon the floor here to show that the appropriations are not sufficient by several hundred thousand dollars, even as estimated, if this classification is to be adopted.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] says they can not carry into effect the classification unless an appropriation of several hundred thousand dollars more is made. Now, the effect of this will be to burden the incoming administration with an appropriation of perhaps one and a half, possibly two, millions of dollars more than it costs now for the administration of the Government. Last spring the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] introduced an amendment to the appropriation bill that was not demanded by the people, asking $600,000 for additional compensation to post-offices of the third class. The gentleman said at the time that the request had been made in open House, and that the point of order could not be made against it. It was passed through the House, thereby adding $600,000 to the bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. No; $450,000.

Mr. KERR. Six hundred thousand dollars was the amount provided in the bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. But it passed for $450,000.

Mr. KERR. Well, I did not know that it had been so modified. I know it originally provided an appropriation of $600,000, and now this will make a million and a half more, which will make it absolutely impossible for a long time to come to reduce the letter-postage of this country, which is so much in demand. Besides that there is no need for it. There are ten men to every office who are willing to take these places at the rate provided now by law and who are anxious to take them; and one of the great annoyances—no; I will not call it an annoyance, for it is very proper that it should be so—but one of the sources of the greatest labor to members of Congress is the answering of letters from men who want positions under the Government and are anxious to get them at the prices provided. In the next administration the gentlemen who have been so long preaching economy will be charging us, as they have for the last fifteen or twenty years, with extravagance in the appropriations of the Government; and I wish to call the attention of the House now to the fact that this proposition of the gentleman from Georgia is a step in the direction of extravagance in public expenditures, so that it can not be charged against this side of the House in the next Congress, because it is brought forward in this House, advocated and supported by the unanimous recommendation of the Democratic committee, and is urged upon this Congress by a gentleman who years ago was before the country as the friend of economy.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLOUNT. I have nothing to add. Anything that could be said in response to the gentleman would be merely a repetition. I ask a vote.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Superintendents of mails, salary not exceeding 45 per cent. of the postmaster as provided by the act of March 3, 1883, graded in even hundreds of dollars, from $1,300 to not exceeding $2,700 per annum, except at New York, N.Y., where the salary of the superintendent of mails shall be fixed at $3,200 per annum.

Mr. HOLMAN. I raise the point of order upon that paragraph, "superintendent of mails," on the ground that it is new legislation not covered by any agreement before the committee or order made in the House. There is no law creating that office.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have simply to say that these are head clerks; that their duties are of a clerical nature; that they are superintending this class of work, and that they are paid out of the appropriations for clerk-hire, and always have been.

Mr. HOLMAN. They are clerks in the same sense exactly as the Postmaster-General may perform clerical duties.

Mr. BINGHAM. Oh, no. Besides, the Postmaster-General is paid out of the legislative bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. It does not matter where or how he is paid, if my friend will excuse me.

Mr. BINGHAM. I think it does as bearing upon the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. This is a new office created by law and known to the law for the first time in this sense. Talk of clerical duties! Why, from the Postmaster-General down to transporters of mails—to mail carriers in cities, of course—there are more or less of clerical duties pertaining to all of them and performed by all; and every one of them would be entitled to the benefit of clergy under the old English criminal-law practice, for all have occasion to write some.

There is no law creating this office. It is new legislation on an appropriation bill, and expressly prohibited by the third clause of Rule XXI.

The CHAIRMAN. In an order made in January it appears that the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads were authorized to report in the Post-Office appropriation bill such new legislation as they deemed proper for the classification of clerks in certain post-offices.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not new legislation, simply classification.

The CHAIRMAN. But the Chair would respond to the gentleman from Indiana by saying that the classification of the clerks in these post-offices is in itself new legislation; and in classifying the clerks in the post-offices, the Chair is inclined to think that in the classification new designations may be applied to the clerks in those offices. Of course the Chair is not perfectly familar with the details of the duties of those officers, but is compelled to accept the statement that these are duties now performed by clerks, and are therefore, so far as the Post-Office Department is concerned, clerical in their character. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall not appeal from that decision. I will leave it to the House and for this committee to determine whether this is in conformity with that agreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Superintendents of delivery, salary not exceeding 45 per cent. of the salary of the postmaster, as provided by the act of March 3, 1883, graded in even hundreds of dollars, from $1,300 to not exceeding $2,700 per annum, except at New York, N.Y., where the salary of the superintendent of delivery shall be fixed at $3,200 per annum.

Mr. HOLMAN. I raise the point of order that that is new legislation, not authorized by the rules of the House, and not suggested in the agreement made in the House a few days ago.

Mr. KERR. I would suggest, in addition to that, ought not this permission to be understood as modified by the statement made at the time by the chairman of the committee that it would not increase the expense to the General Government for salaries? It seems to me that that permission was modified, or ought to be modified, by the statement made to the House by the chairman when he was asking consent; and inasmuch as it is not in conformity with the statement made at the time, that permission ought not to be understood as having been given.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say to the Chair that it is impossible—absolutely impossible—that this office was intended to be embraced in the agreement. I call attention to the fact that the report of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads shows upon its face that within the meaning of that understanding this office was not that of a clerk. The classifications are as follows: "Assistant postmaster." Now, of course, that is not a clerical office, and yet he performs the duties of a clerk. Everybody knows that.

The Chair has already held, notwithstanding the fact that he does not perform the duties of a regular clerk, yet still he is covered by the agreement. Then comes the chief clerk. It is an office classified in this report made by that committee. I concede that the chief clerks are covered by the agreement. The next is the superintendents of divisions, and then the various superintendents are given as separate and distinct officers, and then the clerks—clerks, mailing clerks, general-delivery clerks, stamp clerks, registry clerks—money-order, stamp, and other clerical offices are designated. While the assistant postmaster is designated, the chief clerk is designated, the superintendent is designated, can it be pretended under the agreement made in this House authorizing the classification of clerks that it embraced all these other officers and say that it is to go throughout the entire Post-Office Department?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, for the reasons already given, overrules the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assistant superintendents of delivery, three classes, salary, graded in even hundreds of dollars, at $1,200, at $1,300, and not exceeding $1,400 per annum.

Superintendents of registry, salary not exceeding 35 per cent. of the salary of the postmaster, as provided by the act of March 3, 1883, graded in even hundreds of dollars, from $1,000 to not exceeding $2,100 per annum, except at New York, N.Y., where the salary of the superintendent of registry shall be fixed at not exceeding 40 per cent. of the salary of the postmaster, as provided by the act of March 3, 1883.

Mr. HOLMAN. On those paragraphs I make the point of order.

Mr. CHEADLE. I desire to offer the following amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT rose.

Mr. CHEADLE. I will yield to the chairman of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN recognized Mr. BLOUNT.

Mr. HOLMAN. I arose to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman yielded to his colleague [Mr. CHEADLE].

Mr. HOLMAN. But he was not addressing the Chair on the point of order, and I wish to address the Chair on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will proceed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say that this provision, like all the others, is not within the agreement made with the House, but is in violation of it. I present another point here, because this report which I have before me shows that this proposition was not within the classification as included in the agreement. I feel the more in duty bound to make this objection, because it is my duty as a Representative and the duty of every gentleman entertaining my views of that sort of thing, to have the interpretation of the agreement ascertained. When the agreement was made I put the following question. In the colloquy which has been referred to so often here I said:

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire whether the object of this request is to classify in the same manner as in the Department—

No ambiguity about it whatever, because we all know that we have first, second, third, and fourth class clerks in all the Departments of the Government.

In the same manner as in the Department, or to increase or diminish the salaries of employés.

Now, what was the answer? Let us see whether these propositions, every one of which increases salaries, are in conformity with the agreement. Here is the answer of the gentleman from Georgia to my question:

Mr. BLOUNT. No, sir; not to increase, but simply to classify them.

And yet, Mr. Chairman, under that agreement every successive section of this bill which has been the subject of controversy is brought in here in violation of the stipulation. Every one of them increases salaries. Can the Chair hold that members sat here supinely in their seats and in violation of their duty as Representatives blindly consented to a proposition which would increase salaries all along the line? I press my point of order upon the ground that this provision is not in harmony with but is a violation of the agreement that salaries should not be increased by the proposed classification. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia desire to be heard further on the point of order?

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to know from the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] whether the portion of the RECORD which he has just read is the order of the House or is only the colloquy which took place on that occasion.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is the colloquy which is the order of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Indiana read the order of the House?

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the whole of the agreement be read. It is very important to dispose of this matter properly, because otherwise we never can make an agreement in the House unless it is in writing.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read again the material portion of the RECORD relating to the order made by the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. From the making of the request.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to make to the House a request at the instance of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and it is that that committee be allowed to report in the Post-Office appropriation bill legislation providing for the classification of clerks in first and second class offices. It has been recommended by the President and by Postmasters-General from time to time, and the only reason the matter has not been disposed of has been the difficulty under the rules of the House of reaching the matter. I hope there will be no objection to my request, so that the matter may be brought before the House for disposition.

Mr. BURROWS. To be considered in order.

Mr. BLOUNT. That is all. I merely ask that it may be brought before the House for consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TAULBEE. I shall have to raise the point of order against the proposition if it is to bring these clerks under the provisions of the civil service.

Mr. BLOUNT. It has no relation to the civil service.

Mr. TAULBEE. I would like to hear, then, exactly what is the object of the proposition.

Mr. BLOUNT. The object of it is simply this: The gentleman from Kentucky is aware that the clerks in the Post-Office Department have their salaries fixed. He is also aware that the letter-carriers have their salaries fixed by law. The postal clerks also have their salaries fixed by law, but so far as the first and second class offices are concerned the clerks therein have their salaries fixed, not by law, but regulated by the chief of the salary and allowance division of the Post-Office Department. The proposition we ask to bring before the House for consideration is in relation to that matter.

Mr. TAULBEE. That is the object of the provision, then.

Mr. BLOUNT. The object is to fix the salaries of these clerks in the first and second class offices.

Mr. TAULBEE. I am for it. I do not object to that. I thought it was a proposition to classify them within the civil service.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire whether the object of this request is to classify in the same manner as in the Department, or to increase or diminish the salaries of the employés.

Mr. BLOUNT. No, sir; not to increase, but simply to classify them. So far as the details are concerned, whether the salaries shall be higher or lower, is a matter for the House to determine.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to know whether my friend proposes in any respect to increase these salaries or the grade of the employés in the branches of the Department to which he refers.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is the special point that I desire to call special attention to. An agreement is there made for a classification that shall not increase salaries.

The Clerk continued the reading, as follows:

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will the classification proposed carry any particular rate of salary?

Mr. BLOUNT. Well, that is just the very object, to fix the salary and to limit the power of the head of the bureau in the matter.

Mr. CUTCHEON. But will not this allowance of salaries have to be paid as heretofore, through the Department?

The SPEAKER. That is not debatable.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I wish to ask the gentleman from Georgia if a bill has been reported heretofore to the same effect as he now proposes from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads?

Mr. BLOUNT. Oh, yes, I think on several occasions.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. But I mean during the present Congress.

Mr. BLOUNT. Not during the present Congress, for the reason that there were certain elements then wanting to enable us to reach a proper conclusion, which have since been supplied by the Postmaster-General, and hence are not wanting to-day.

Mr. MCMILLIN. What is the objection to letting the provision be brought in when the bill is before the House, without asking us beforehand, and without our knowing what the provision is, to make an exception to the general rules of the House which have proved so salutary in the past?

Mr. BLOUNT. I will say to my friend from Tennessee that if it is brought in outside of the Post-Office appropriation bill, the gentleman himself will readily understand that the chances are not one in a hundred of ever reaching the bill.

Mr. COX. That is so.

Mr. MCMILLIN. But what I mean is, why not go along until you reach the consideration of the bill, then submit your proposition and ask unanimous consent when the bill is being considered to let the amendment come in notwithstanding the rule which would prohibit the consideration of the subject?

Mr. BLOUNT. Why, that would be absolutely futile work. I have no objection whatever to letting the House vote upon it, and accept or reject it, but it would certainly seem superfluous to go to work and prepare a bill on this subject, notwithstanding that it has the recommendation and indorsement of the President, the recommendations of the Department, and others interested in and familiar with the subject, when one single objection on the floor of the House would prevent the House from considering it.

Mr. ADAMS. But a single objection will do that now.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am only asking that the House will give consent that the committee may formulate the proposition in the bill, and then it will be for the House to determine whether it will accept the proposition or not.

Mr. MCMILLIN. But the gentleman ought to bring in his proposition first. The difficulty about his request is that I do not see why the House should bind itself beforehand to consider a proposition which is brought in in violation of the rules when it does not even understand what the proposition is. If the gentleman will state his proposition at the time that the bill is being considered, and if it commends itself to the sense of justice of the House, it would no doubt, as many other matters of the same kind have done heretofore, be considered by the House and no doubt agreed to. On the contrary, if the proposition is an objectionable one, it is too late, after the privilege is given in this manner—after the point of order is waived—to make objections which under the present circumstances would prevent the consideration of the matter.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, it is perfectly competent when the bill comes before the House to discuss it and vote it out if the House is unwilling to accept the proposition.

Mr. MCMILLIN. But the gentleman from Georgia knows that the power to vote out is often utterly useless, and that it can not be exercised here always in cases where it ought to be exercised.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to say to my friend that I appreciate his great desire for extreme care in legislation; and I also appreciate that rule which excludes certain legislation from appropriation bills. But there is not a member on this floor who does not feel at times the necessity for legislation for a great Department of the Government which is absolutely essential, but which can not be entered upon because of the stringent provision of the rule which makes no exception. This is a matter we believe to be essential. My friend certainly recognizes the difficulty that we have had in reference to the distribution of the mails by reason of defects in this very matter of legislation in regard to the clerical service of the Department. It has been urged for a great many years that such a change be made. It is not by any means a new question. My friend will see that hereafter, if it is fixed by law now, instead of a chief of division having to contest with every member on this floor as to the salary of each employé throughout the first and second class offices in the United States, when you shall ascertain his salary by law as you have done in relation to the postal clerks, letter-carriers, and clerks in the various Departments, that there is but little to surprise the House with in the matter which will come from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. That is all there is of it, simply to fix the salaries ourselves and take the right of fixing them from the chief of division. Let them be ascertained and fixed by law, as the salaries of other emloyés are fixed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say to the Chair that it is very clear from that whole transaction that two things were agreed to: first, that there should be a classification of clerks; and second, that the salaries should not be increased.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, there is in that colloquy an express promise of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] that it was not contemplated to increase salaries by the change of law concerning the employés in first and second class post-offices. My attention was called to that point at the time, and I then feared, and so stated, that the proposition was to make a change which the House would not be satisfied with. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] stated that it was not the purpose to increase salaries, and upon that statement the change of rule was obtained allowing him to bring in his proposition. I do not favor the change which he proposes. I did not favor such a change then, and if it had been known by the House that such a proposition as this was to be brought in under the agreement I, for one, am ready to say that the agreement would not have been made. I do not believe it is proper or wise at this time to make the wholesale changes or increases—at any rate to make the wholesale increases—that are proposed by this bill, and I do not believe that the agreement covered any such proposition. Having resisted it originally, I have thought it proper for me to say this much at this time. I have great regard for my friend from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], who is usually a very careful and painstaking legislator. That much is due him. But the House certainly did not understand the nature of the proposition that was to be brought in.

Mr. HOLMAN. The House understood that there was to be a classification of clerks.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I mean that it did not understand that there was to be a proposition of the nature that has been brought in on this bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, the discussion that is going on now does not relate to the construction of the order of the House. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has called your attention to only one part of this debate; and to show how unfair the gentleman from Indiana is to me and to this House——

Mr. HOLMAN. I called for the reading of all of it.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman has had his own way in making his statement; and I propose to state this matter now in my way. I do not want the gentleman to interrupt me, for I have some rights here as well as the gentleman.

To test the question of candor, I ask the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to his question as I am about to read it, and to my answer:

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire whether the object of this request is to classify in the same manner as in the Department, or to increase or diminish the salaries of the employés.

Mr. BLOUNT. No, sir; not to increase, but simply to classify them. So far as the details are concerned, whether the salaries shall be higher or lower, is a matter for the House to determine.

It will thus be seen that when this request was made it was distinctly stated, in response to a question of the gentleman from Indiana, that this classification, whether it raised salaries or lowered them, depended upon the House.

Further on the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] said:

I wish to ascertain from my friend from Georgia to what extent he proposes to increase the aggregate appropriations for clerical service for first and second class post-offices?

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, that is a matter difficult of ascertainment. So far as the allowance for clerk-hire goes now, the salaries are fixed by the chief of the division.

Mr. HOLMAN. I know; but you make appropriation for clerical hire in gross, do you not?

Mr. DUNN. To be distributed according to the favoritism of the chiefs of divisions in the Department instead of by law, as it should be.

Mr. BLOUNT. That is true.

Mr. HOLMAN. Do you propose to diminish the amount appropriated for the coming year?

Mr. BLOUNT. I can not say whether it will increase or diminish the allowance for clerk-hire, because that is dependent upon the arbitrary action of a chief of division, and I do not know sufficient about the details of the Department to know whether it increases or diminishes the appropriation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask whether it is fair and courteous to me, in view of this distinct declaration, that I could not say whether this classification would increase or decrease salaries, for the gentleman to take a single sentence of mine and put it on record to convict me of having misled the House. The very responses which I made to the gentleman contradict the statement he has this moment made to the House. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be courteous to all; but I think the gentleman from Indiana ought to be fair.

The question, however, which the gentleman now raises is a point of order on the paragraph, as to whether or not the superintendent of registry is a clerk. Why, sir, he is a clerk just like any other clerk; he has a certain work to do in the distribution of the mail; he has had it from the very beginning; he has never been known in any other way than as a clerk.

I do not want to argue this part of the proposition. The order of the House is before the Chair, and I think the Chair will have no difficulty in reaching a decision. I should not have taken the floor but for the fact that the gentleman from Indiana has gone away from the question of order to place me in the attitude of having misled the House.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Will my friend from Georgia allow me a moment? I would like to ask the gentleman whether the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands is a member of Congress? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLOUNT. He seems to be a pretty lively one just now.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I will occupy but a moment. Every word that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] has read has been read twice, I believe, at the desk; yet my friend from Georgia speaks about the unfairness of having only a portion read. The last reading covered all the colloquy——

Mr. BLOUNT. The reading was not what I referred to; it was the gentleman's speech.

Mr. HOLMAN. The point I made was especially made upon this part of the colloquy—and it is only a part of the general whole, I admit:

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to know whether my friend proposes in any respect to increase these salaries or the grade of the employés in the branches of the Department to which he refers.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not.

There is the emphatic declaration upon which the House gave its consent. I admit that the whole should be taken together.

The CHAIRMAN. The question of order now raised by the gentleman from Indiana is more difficult for the Chair to decide than any point that has preceded it, for the reason that it is hard for the Chair to determine what was the precise order of the House and what was really a part of the reasons given for the order. The action of the House, however, which will necessarily guide the Chair in the determination of this matter, is the entry which was made on the Journal and which was approved by the House the next morning. The Chair will ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. BLOUNT, by unanimous consent, it is—

Ordered, That it shall be in order for the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, to provide for the classification of clerks in the first and second class post-offices in the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. This entry in the Journal was approved by the House and seems to embody the action taken on that occasion. The Chair is therefore bound to hold that this entry represents the authority given, and that the reasons which may have been stated during the colloquy do not form a part of the order, and were not embraced in it. For this reason the Chair is bound to overrule the point of order. The Clerk will continue the reading of the bill.

Mr. CHEADLE. I yielded the floor in order that the chairman of the committee [Mr. BLOUNT] might offer an amendment. If he does not desire to do so, I will offer one.

Mr. BLOUNT. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding after the words "New York," in the second line on page 5, the words "and Washington, D. C."

Mr. CHEADLE. I will suggest to the chairman of the committee that the amendment which he has offered is not definite enough. It does not fix the salary.

Mr. BLOUNT. It does fix the salary.

Mr. CHEADLE. The reason in this case for the exception to the general rule is this——

Mr. BLOUNT. If the gentleman from Indiana will allow me, I would say in answer to his statement that it does fix the salary. It provides for 40 per cent. instead of 35.

Mr. CHEADLE. Mr. Chairman, I would then ask the gentleman from Georgia to withdraw his amendment and permit me to offer this one. I hope the chairman will give me his attention.

Mr. BLOUNT. Certainly.

Mr. CHEADLE. I would move to amend by inserting "except Washington, D. C., where the salary of the superintendent of registry shall be fixed at $2,100."

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will not attempt to fix the salary.

Mr. CHEADLE. The reason for making this exception in the case of the city of Washington and fixing the salary at $2,100 is this: At Philadelphia the salary of the superintendent of registry under the law will be $2,100, while here at the city of Washington the same department, which handles 771,936 more packages than are handled at the city of Philadelphia, is to be paid at a lower salary. The reports of fifty thousand postmasters are made through the Washington registry office here in Washington, and all these fifty thousand post-offices' reports through this department bring to the office no receipts whatever. The Government transacts a tremendous business through the registry office in the city of Washington. This does not in the least affect the receipts of the office. In my judgment the salary of the superintendent of the registry here should be fixed at $2,100, which is the amount paid at the city of Philadelphia, handling 771,936 fewer packages than are handled in this city. There passed through this department in Washington City last year the enormous sum of $771,000,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. In fixing salaries at the other offices 35 per cent. is the restriction, and in the city of Washington it is fixed at 40 per cent. This is satisfactory to the Department.

Mr. BINGHAM. And gives the head of this division the same salary which he now receives.

Mr. CHEADLE. Is it fair in the classification of clerks in any Department of the Government to give the superintendent of registry in one place who handles 771,936 more packages than are handled in another $2,000, while the superintendent in the other office receives a salary of $2,100? Is not the best basis in fixing these salaries the amount of work which is performed?

Mr. BINGHAM. They do not ask for a larger sum than is now received.

Mr. ADAMS. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment. I will ask the chairman in the first place whether his amendment fixes the percentage at Washington at 40 per cent.

Mr. BLOUNT. It does.

Mr. ADAMS. I move, then, an amendment to the amendment by inserting these words: "And Chicago, Ill.:" so it will read: "Washington, D. C., and Chicago, Ill."

Mr. BLOUNT. That is an amendment in the third degree, and is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. There are only two amendments pending.

Mr. CHEADLE. I ask the gentleman to withdraw his amendment and let me offer one.

Mr. ADAMS. The salary of the superintendent of registry at Chicago is now $2,500. This bill proposes to reduce it to $2,100. My amendment is to raise it to $2,400. There would be a reduction of $100. I have some support in the amendment in the documents submitted to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads by the Department.

I wish to have the attention particularly of the gentleman from Georgia. He has just proposed an amendment making it 40 per cent. at Washington instead of 35 per cent. He says that is the wish of the Department. The wish of the Department is that Chicago and Washington shall be 40 per cent. instead of 35 per cent. That appears, as the gentleman from Georgia knows, on page 5 in his own report. On pages 4 and 5 there are two schemes of classification. In the second scheme the superintendents of registry at New York and Washington get 40 per cent., while the salary at the other office is 35 per cent. Unless the gentleman from Georgia can show why Washington should be classified with New York and Chicago should not, of course the amendment should not be adopted, and I do not care to detain the committee any further.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, the provision——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield the floor?

Mr. ADAMS. One word more, Mr. Chairman, and I will yield it. I find here in one table in this report, on page 21, a statement of the salaries as they are now and as proposed to be by the Department, and the salary of the superintendent of registry at Chicago is only $2,400. Appended to this is a note of explanation that that is 40 per cent., showing evidently the Department supposed that while 35 per cent. is the usual proportion 40 per cent. should be the proper percentage for New York, Chicago, and perhaps Washington.

I have not looked to see whether Washington comes in the list of 35 or 40 per cent.; but the gentleman from Georgia will admit that the Department, in one of these tables sent for the information of the House, stated that the salary of the superintendent of registry at Chicago should be $2,400, because it would be 40 per cent. of the salary of the postmaster, which is exactly what I have proposed.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, the operations of the registry system at New York show that they handled $6,457,235, and at Chicago about half that sum.

Mr. COX. That is the last report?

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes, the last report. The Washington office does not handle so much as the Chicago office, but in relation to the Chicago office the salary is fixed at $6,000. It is based on a certain amount of gross revenue. When you come to the Washington office the salary is fixed by law at $5,000.

But, sir, I am aware that we are in the short hours of the session. The amendment involves only an addition of $100 in Chicago, and as the gentleman stated that the Department had already recommended it, I will make no issue with him upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that the amendment which he has sent to the desk is merely in the nature of a substitute for that of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. ADAMS. I did draw it for convenience in that form.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit it, then, as a substitute.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will withdraw my amendment and let the gentleman offer his.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, line 2, after the words "New York, N. Y." insert "Chicago, Ill., and Washington, D. C."

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. CHEADLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, in line 2, page 5, by striking out the words "and Washington, D. C.," for the purpose of offering the amendment which I now send to the desk.

Mr. BLOUNT. Why, we have it now just as the Department recommends it.

Mr. CHEADLE. But I move to strike out the words "and Washington, D. C.," and my reason is simply this, that in the classifications of these offices we certainly ought to agree upon a practical basis. I appeal to any member and to all the members of this committee——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will interrupt the gentleman to ask whether the amendment he has suggested proposes to strike out what has just been inserted?

Mr. CHEADLE. No, sir; but a part of what has been inserted—the words "and Washington, D. C."—leaving the words "Chicago, Ill." to remain.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to think that the gentleman's amendment is out of order, because these words have just been inserted by the action of the committee.

Mr. CHEADLE. Then I move to reconsider the vote by which that amendment was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the motion to reconsider does not apply in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk will read the next paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assistant superintendents of registry, salary not exceeding 25 per cent. of the salary of the postmaster, as provided by the act of March 3, 1883, graded in even hundreds of dollars, from $1,000 to not exceeding $1,500 per annum, except at New York, N. Y., where the salary of the first and second assistant superintendents of registry shall be fixed at $2,400 and $1,800 per annum, respectively.

Mr. CHEADLE. I now offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "respectively," in line 15, page 5, "and except Washington, D. C., where the salary of the assistant superintendent of registry shall be fixed at $1,500 per annum."

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Superintendent money-order division, salary not exceeding 40 per cent. of the salary of the postmaster as provided by the act of March 3, 1883, graded in even hundreds of dollars, from $1,000 to not exceeding $2,400 per annum, except at New York, N. Y., where the salary of the superintendent of the money-order division shall be fixed at $3,200 per annum.

Mr. ADAMS. I offer an amendment to come in at the end of line 24, page 5, by inserting the words which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

And at Chicago, Ill., where the salary of the superintendent of the money-order division shall be fixed at $3,000 per annum.

Mr. ADAMS. That is the present salary at the Chicago office. This bill raises the salary at Philadelphia from two thousand to two thousand four hundred, at Boston from twenty-two hundred to twenty-four hundred, at St. Louis from twenty-two hundred to twenty-four hundred, and it raises the salary at San Francisco and Cincinnati, but at Chicago it is reduced from three thousand to twenty-four hundred. The superintendent of the money-order business at Chicago has an enormous amount of work to perform and is required to give a bond in the sum of $100,000. The money-order business is not only large there, but is rapidly increasing every year for the reason that that is the great distributing point for the entire Northwestern country.

I have a statement here showing the immense amount of business done during the last year. It is about $10,000,000. The total transactions are 1,700,000, and the mere number of transactions each day were 5,600. The great increase of the business of that division of the Department would be ample justification to make Chicago an exceptional case. And I say exceptional, not simply meaning that it should be exceptionally reduced. That is the effect of this bill. This bill would reduce the salary at Chicago from $3,000 to $2,400. I think it is not a local matter in that particular. I believe they have not any assistant.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Why?

Mr. ADAMS. I do not know.

Mr. FARQUHAR. This is the second amendment in the case of Chicago. Is it not?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FARQUHAR. It is a well-known fact that when you take the grade of offices down to seventh or eighth they usually have a registrar and clerks. Now, you take the salary at New York, which office is certainly measurably greater than Chicago, and you find there the salary is $3,200 in the classification where they are now receiving $4,000. Now, I take it that in the first-class offices the assistant and clerks and the kind of help that belongs to that office are bonded, of course. In the cases of Chicago, Philadelphia, and New York, my impression is the Post-Office Department has provided handsomely in the way of clerks. Have you not sufficient clerks in this office, I would like to ask?

Mr. ADAMS. I can not answer that.

Mr. FARQUHAR. There is no use in having a clerk there at $3,000 and clerks under him coming within four or five hundred dollars of that amount. There is no thrift in that.

Mr. ADAMS. I want to ask the attention of the gentleman from New York to this one point, and that is that this bill is fixing these salaries as a permanent statute.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMS. It may run five, ten, or fifteen years; therefore when you include that part of the country which is growing very rapidly the question of the compensation being inadequate may arise in three or four years as it is admitted to have arisen in New York. They make an exception of New York because in that city the total business is so enormous. The salary of the postmaster at Chicago is $6,000, which is based upon gross receipts of $600,000, whereas they are $2,400,000. They may have been $600,000 when the salary was fixed, but since then the business has increased to four times that amount, and it has arisen at a very rapid percentage every year. Now, if we fix that by permanent statute——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to say that the adoption of the general rule in relation to the percentage of receipts and the postmaster's salary should determine the salary of the superintendent of the money-order division of the service. I notice that at Chicago it does reduce the salary of this particular person. But the gentleman is aware of that. The gentleman was mistaken when he undertook to say that this was the only salary that was reduced.

Mr. ADAMS. The only salary among the five or six leading post-offices of the country.

Mr. BLOUNT. Ah! I have before me the salaries of forty of the larger offices, on page 21 of the report.

Mr. ADAMS. Page 20 contains those in the money-order division.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman is correct. I see at Detroit, Mich., that the superintendent's salary is reduced. It is so also at New Orleans, La.

Mr. ADAMS. How much?

Mr. BLOUNT. It is done under the operation of a general rule; and the very fact that the operation of a general rule does this thing shows the propriety of the rule. There has been no rule heretofore.

Mr. ADAMS. If the gentleman will pardon me, it might show the propriety if you made the same allowance for the total receipts there. Eight years ago it was $600,000, and you made that the maximum——

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the gentleman will not interrupt me with little speeches in my remarks. Now, I wish to say that the Department is perfectly satisfied that the salary at Chicago and the salaries in this bill are sufficient. I submit to the House that the Department is a far better judge of this classification than we, who have not the data before us that they have in the Department; and the best thing we can do will be to adopt this report. If, as we reach the salary of one place where some one is a little touched, one gentleman complains, and we make concession to him, and then proceed to another where another is touched, we shall not be able to adhere to any rule which is included in the original intent of the classification.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Superintendents of stations, ten classes, salary, graded in even hundreds of dollars, from $1,000 to not exceeding $2,000 per annum, except at New York, N. Y., where the salaries of the superintendents of Stations "A" and "D" shall be fixed at $2,500 each per annum, and superintendents of Stations "E" and "F" shall be fixed at $2,200 each per annum.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order upon that paragraph. Certainly there is no ground for saying that the superintendent of a station is to be classified as a clerk.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is exactly what he is.

The CHAIRMAN. For the reasons heretofore given by the Chair, the Chair is bound to overrule the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mailing clerks, letter distributers, dispatchers, registry, money-order, directory, and nine clerks, nine classes, salary, graded in even hundreds of dollars, from $600 to not exceeding $1,400 per annum.

Mr. BLOUNT. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. It is intended to correct a clerical error.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 1, amend by striking out the word "nine," in the first line, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "nixie."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COX. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 6, line 25, after the words "letter distributers," insert "assorters, and separators."

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the gentleman will not insist on that amendment.

Mr. COX. I offer the amendment partly for the purpose of having a statement printed. It appears that these assorters and separators may be reduced, under this classification, from $1,380 to $1,200 per year. These gentlemen say that in certain post-offices, especially in the New York post-office, they have a most difficult and intricate duty to perform. The distributing clerks are required to memorize five thousand or more names of box-holders, and besides that they have to keep in mind the continual change of scheme in the separation. Therefore, they say it would be unjust to reduce them as they think they would be reduced by this bill. I do not know that they will be reduced. I do not know, either, how many of them there are in the United States who would be affected by it, but I propose this amendment, and in connection with these remarks I desire to have printed the statement which I herewith submit.

The statement is as follows:

NEW YORK CITY, January 30, 1889.

DEAR SIR: We learn through the Boston Post of January 30 that there seems to be a discrimination made in the proposed classification of postal clerks, namely, making the salaries of "letter-distributers" range from $600 to $1,400, while those of the "assorters or separators" are named from $600 to $1,200. We claim it is a very unjust discrimination between clerks, who perform the same mechanical and intellectual work; particularly so as it relates to the New York post-office, and we justly claim that our salaries should be on a par with railway mail clerks, who perform the same species of work and whose salaries range to $1,400. Under the proposed classification "separators and assorters" would be reduced from $1,380, which is the present limit, to $1,200, and we appeal to you to either demand the sums named in your original bill—$600 to $1,400—all around or let the proposed amendment go by default.

You know that the work performed by "assorters" of the city department of the New York post-office is the most difficult and intricate of any performed in the whole service. Here a clerk has to memorize five thousand and more names of box-holders, besides the continual changes in the scheme of separation. To sum the whole thing up, a clerk in our department must be a veritable map of New York City.

The late hour at which we received the information has prevented us from taking more concerted action. Hoping you will give this matter your earnest attention,

We remain, trustfully yours,

Hon. S. S. COX, Washington, D. C.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 2, page 7, strike out the word "six" and insert "four;" and in line 3 page 7, strike out "four" and insert "six."

Mr. CANNON. I have no desire to discriminate against these employés. I do think, however, that when people first enter the service it would be economical and profitable to the service and to all parties, including the employés themselves, that they should enter at $400 a year. I am perfectly willing that as the years roll round and the employés increase in efficiency, they shall climb up, and for that reason, while I reduce the minimum $200 by my amendment I increase the maximum $200.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is a very important one, and I think it ought not to be adopted. The object of classification is to prevent getting a lot of very cheap men into the service. The minimum salary in this paragraph is $600 for mailing clerks, letter-distributers, dispatchers, etc. Now, it will be seen that this is a class of men who will require considerable intelligence, and if you put them at a salary of $400 you simply set the Department to work with incompetent men, because you can not get competent men for that rate of pay. One of the main ideas in reference to classification is, that if you want to get good service you must pay something like a reasonable compensation. But the proposition of my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] goes farther than a reduction of the minimum. While he proposes to reduce the minimum he proposes also to increase the maximum. Now, this bill is a pretty liberal one. It may be that it can be made more so; but if you should adopt the minimum rate presented in the bill, you would be able to run the Department for less money than it cost last year.

I repeat the statement I made the other day by the authority of the Department, that when you resort to lower than the average grade you are enabled to reduce the appropriation on these two paragraphs by the amount of nearly $900,000. So that you have gone low enough already. I appeal to gentlemen on either side, as they realize the importance of securing efficient employés, as they would deprecate a reduction of salaries which might force efficient men out of the service, as has been done heretofore when they were put on nominal salaries, that the proposed change in reference to this minimum salary shall not be agreed to.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. CANNON, it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Separators and assorters, paper distributers, record clerks, general-delivery clerks, inquiry clerks, clerks for special-delivery mail, raters of third and fourth class mail matter, weighers of second-class mail matter, stock or supply clerks, and time-keepers, seven classes, salary, graded in even hundreds of dollars, from $600 to not exceeding $1,200 per annum.

Mr. COX. I move to amend by striking out the word "two," in line 11, page 7, and inserting "four." I do this in pursuance of the policy I indicated a moment ago to allow to the separators, assorters, distributers, and the employés named in the preceding paragraph the same maximum.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Auditor and draughtsman at New York, N. Y., $3,000 and $1,200 per annum, respectively.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make a point of order on this paragraph. Of course the auditor and the draughtsman are not clerks.

Mr. BLOUNT. I merely wish to say that these officers have been paid out of this fund here allowed for more than a decade.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the gentleman will find any statute creating these offices and fixing these salaries, I should be very glad to see it.

Mr. BLOUNT. No; and I can not find any statute fixing the salary of any clerk or anything of that sort.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized to classify and fix the salaries of the clerks and employés attached to the second-class post-offices, from July 1, 1889, as hereinafter provided, namely.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to make a point of order on the word "employés," which occurs in the third line of this paragraph. The salaries of clerks, of course, come within the agreement, but the compensation of employés, I think, does not.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. BLOUNT. Not at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order in this case.

Mr. BLOUNT. It does not make any difference to the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. I move to amend by inserting, after the word "from," in line 3, the words "and after;" so as to read:

From and after July 1, 1889.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend by inserting, after the word "provided," in line 5, page 8, the following:

Provided, however, That the aggregate salaries as fixed by such classification as shall be made under this act shall not exceed the several sums appropriated by this act for the services authorized to be classified.

In behalf of this proposition, I will merely state that a similar provision has been adopted in regard to post-offices of the first class; and there is just the same necessity for such a provision here as in the other case. I presume there will be no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assistant postmaster, or chief clerk, nine classes, salary, graded in even hundreds of dollars, from $700 to not exceeding $1,500 per annum.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order on the words "assistant postmaster."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, simply this, that the striking out of those words does not affect the bill in the least.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill, as follows:

That all acts and parts of acts that conflict with the provisions hereinbefore stated are hereby repealed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a point of order on that passage, that it is new legislation, and I make it special for this reason. There are a great many provisions of law which are applicable not only to the Post-Office Department of the Government, but to the other Departments of the Government, and the unqualified repeal here might affect important provisions of law applying alike to the Post-Office and other Departments of the Government. It is new legislation, and for that reason I ask that it be stricken out.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not care about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I do so for the purpose of saying that when we get into the House, if nobody else does it, I will submit the motion that this bill be recommitted to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads with instructions to report the same back with the various paragraphs fixing classification omitted. As that motion is not debatable in the House, I will take advantage of the present opportunity to say a single word in reference to it.

If the legislation proposed in this bill by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads should pass, gentlemen all over the country will find it will lead to much embarrassment. For instance, take my own town of Danville, Ill. The allowance for clerk-hire now is $2,800. That employs an assistant postmaster and three other clerks and pays the expenses of cleaning the office.

The truth is that there is not money enough to pay for a janitor all the time. I understand a janitor works an hour or two each day at $8 or $10 a month, and takes similar service for adjacent buildings, whereby he makes up his pay to $500 or $600 a year. If you make an average between the maximum and minimum under this bill without any increase we have $1,100 for assistant postmaster, $1,600 for two clerks at $800 apiece, and $750 for an additional clerk. That provides for three clerks. As you must not let that building go without care, you are required to have a janitor, and you must pay a sum sufficient to enable him to devote the whole time, because being in the Government service he can not take employment from anybody else, although he may not be engaged for more than two hours a day.

This is also true in regard to one or more of these clerks. At certain hours of the day during general delivery they are busily engaged. Perhaps for a part of the time they are not needed and go about their business. But under this proposed legislation they must devote their whole time; that requires $3,900 where it now costs only $2,800. The same is true all over the country. It will increase the expense largely. The money will not be sufficient to pay it, and your service will go without sufficient employés to do it because of this unwise legislation. And as this is the only chance I may have to speak on the subject, I will again state that when we get into the House I shall make the motion to recommit with instructions to strike out all these paragraphs covering new legislation. The law remains as it is. Let the Postmaster-General take the money and give it to the different post-offices according to their respective wants, instead of forcing employés the year round at larger salaries, when they are not needed, many of them, all the year round.

Mr. BLOUNT. The Department does not see the embarrassment the gentleman from Illinois happens to see, and I confess I am not able to see it.

Mr. CANNON. Oh! "the Department." That is the old story over again. My friend ought to know when he plays cards that it is not fair to play the ace more than once. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLOUNT. Well, I did not sit up last night to learn that kind of a vocabulary for use here; and my friend from Arkansas on my left suggests that the gentleman ought not carry his night games around with him in the daytime.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will regard the pro forma amendment as withdrawn; and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rent, light, and fuel for first and second class post-offices, $600,000.
For rent, light, and fuel to post-offices of the third class, $505,080.
For miscellaneous and incidental items for first and second class post-offices, including furniture, $110,000.
For free-delivery service, $8,000,000.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend line 17 by adding: "Provided, That the Postmaster-General may direct that no deduction shall be made in the compensation of letter-carriers for loss of time incurred through sickness or injuries received in the service in the line of their duties."

Mr. BLOUNT. I raise the question of order upon the amendment.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I hope that the gentleman will state the point of order so that I can answer it.

Mr. BLOUNT. That it is new legislation. There is no such law now, and the gentleman proposes new legislation on an appropriation bill which would control the discretion of the Department.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, it has been the custom in every Department of the Government heretofore, and is to-day in every one of them with the single exception of the Post-Office Department, to grant leave of absence with full pay in the case of employés who are injured in the service in the line of their duty, which leave of absence is granted in the discretion of the chief or head of the Department. I know personally that it is the practice in every other Department except this. We passed a few years ago a bill granting to the letter-carriers fifteen days' leave of absence with pay. It was granted by Congress and was intended to be a benefit to them, and as a mark of the good-will, if I may so use the term, of the country toward the letter-carriers expressed through its Representatives in Congress.

But what has been the effect? We had already granted to all of the other employés in the other Departments thirty days' leave of absence, but to the carriers we granted but fifteen. Now, all of the employés in the other Departments get thirty days' leave therefore, and are also granted leave and not deprived of their pay when injured in the service. But by a most remarkable combination of circumstances the Post-Office Department has adopted a rule which provides that they may grant leave of absence without pay to carriers (in excess of the fifteen days to which they are entitled without loss of pay) in case of illness or where they are injured in the line of their duty. In other words, the Post-Office Department adopts a rule that makes simply a farce and a burlesque of the act of Congress in the case of these carriers who are injured in the service. If you are not injured, why we give you your fifteen days' leave of absence; but if you are injured and it involves the loss of one or two months' time, then the Government deprives you of your pay for the time you are absent.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Is that not in addition to the fifteen days' leave with pay?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. No, sir, not at all. The fifteen days you get by the act to which I have referred; but if you are injured in the service and necessarily absent you don't get any additional time. You get only the fifteen days, and that fifteen days is charged up to you as a part of your leave, beyond which, if you are absent, you lose your pay.

Now, prior to the granting of the fifteen days' leave of absence if a man was injured in the service he was allowed a month or two of absence with pay if the injury justified it. I have presented this amendment, therefore, which uses the words "may direct," so that it is not subject to the point of order, for it does not change existing law, but still leaves the matter in the discretion of the Postmaster-General, unless it be claimed that you intended when you granted the fifteen days' leave of absence to carriers to abrogate the custom which prevailed prior to that time of granting leave of absence with pay when injured in the line of duty.

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point of order that the merits of this proposition are not now under consideration.
